"THE MINISTER'S TEMPTATION" (Edison), Feb. 22.—Here is a film for any audience—especially it is suitable for a church affair, for of a church it is; yet everything in it will appeal to those who never enter a religious edifice. The scenario is written by the Rev. Sydney Booth. Charles J. Brabin produced it. Augustus Phillips has the role of the minister who, to save the life of his child, uses money given him for church work. The suffering he endures as the result of the workings of his conscience is splendidly portrayed. There are many moments of deep dramatic suspense, as, for instance, when the minister and his wife (Mary Fuller) sit in the reception-room of the hospital waiting the result of the operation; or when the minister, at the close of his services, asks the congregation to remain, and then confesses what he has done. There is a strong appeal to the feelings when a pillar of the church (Robert Brower) takes the floor as the minister retires and tells the assemblage that the fault is his, as he refused to loan the minister the money. On the screen the people in the congregation are making free use of their handkerchiefs. A holiday audience on Broadway at the same time was doing an unusual amount of coughing and clearing of throats. The operation in the hospital is shown with remarkable fidelity. This is a rare picture.

"THE MOUNTAIN WITCH" (Kalem), Feb. 22.—Jane Wolfe as the witch is impressive in this picture, which is interesting all the way. Carlyle Blackwell, as the minister who protects the witch from the hands of his enraged parishioners, does good work.

"THE TEACHER AT ROCKVILLE" (Lubin), Feb. 24.—A picture of a profligate and of his remorse. The story is clearly rather than convincingly pictured and its producer has not been careful to keep out all small inconsistencies. As an offering, it stands securely; it has nothing that is great, but seemed to interest the audience. The author, Wallace Clifton, has developed with some freshness a situation that will always be acceptable when well done. Of all its players Emma Bell is the most natural and simple. Clara Williams is never simple, yet seemed to please the audience with her pictures of the little mountain school teacher. Edgar Jones is also apt to put melodramatic overemphasis into his gestures at moments and there is a large following that likes this, but it isn't the most forceful method. F. J. Grandon is the producer. The photography is clear enough.

"THE COLLEGE CHAPERONE" (Selig), Feb. 24.—A roar of hearty laughter filled the house at the climax of this picture, which was written by Maibelle H. Justice and produced by Charles France. The primary situation has served other picture authors, but has never been used so profitably, so far as we know, nor been developed so naturally. The result reflects credit on its writer. John Lancaster, as the janitor who consents to act as chaperone at the college ball, but comes to grief in the middle of the dancing, bears the burden of the picture extremely well. He is well supported by a large cast, including Lyllian Leighton, Irma Dale, Nellie Goodwin and, as the college boys, Palmer Bowman and Maxwell Sargent. The photography is clear.

"IN A JAPANESE TEA GARDEN" (Edison), Feb. 24.—An unusual daintiness characterizes this picture, taken in a tea garden at Coronado Beach, Cal. The photography is good enough, but might have been better, for the backgrounds are lovely. The situation is light and serves very well to carry the attention along in a way as unimportant and yet as pleasing as a summer walk. Such offerings are welcome to most and provide a sense of relief from melodramas to many. Producer J. S. Dawley deserves credit for it. Laura Sawyer is delightful in the leading role and is well supported by Richard Neill and Benjamin Wilson with Jessie McAllister and Charles Sutton.

"THE REDEMPTION" (Kalem), Feb. 21.—A picture in two parts with a sociological interest. It stands as a story rather than as a study and entertains even though we may feel that the optimistic teaching behind it is not wholly justified. The suspense is carried through both reels and keeps one from noticing the passage of time. Wm. H. West plays the philanthropist who, by his human treatment of a burglar (Carlyle Blackwell), converts him. His optimism is strained almost to the breaking point, but the result convinces even the unbeliever, at least while he is watching, and gets him deeply interested. Mr. Blackwell didn't look much like a rough (there was more of the conventional underworld in his pals, Jane Wolf and Paul Hurst); but he carries the action clearly. Miss Wolf puts good atmosphere into her part. Those who have seen her in such roles as hers in "The Flower Girl's Romance" know what she is capable of doing in a truly human situation. Knute Rahmn, as the skeptical friend of the philanthropist, does well, as does Marin Sais as his wife. The photography is good.

"THE WESTERN LAW THAT FAILED" (Essanay), Feb. 25.—It is hard to understand why Arthur Mackley would in these days go so far as to put a rope around a man's neck and throw the rope over the limb of a tree. It is also to be regretted that he should put a premium on deception as in this play. A down-and-out is given money by a man about to leave for the East; at the same time the benefactor drops a note to the effect that he is wanted back home to welcome a new baby. The down-and-out, unable to secure work, decides to steal a horse. He is captured and stands under a tree with a rope about his neck. The culprit tells the group of his hard luck and shows them the letter he has found. They think it genuine and from his wife; they release him, give him a lot of money and send him home to his mother.

"THE FLAMING FORGE" (Selig), Feb. 25.—It is doubtful if this picture will interest the average audience. It is poetical at times, but seems to lack coherency. There is an excellent cast and a large one.

"WHEN THE DESERT WAS KIND" (Vitagraph), Feb. 25.—Strong Western drama, directed by Mr. Sturgeon. Robert Thornby, as a desperado, gives a convincing portrayal, although the script makes a near coward of the sheriff. Major McGuire as the Indian is good in a part not easy. Miss Schaefer and Miss Charleson are both in the cast. There are good views of the desert.

"THE RANCH OWNER'S LOVE MAKING" (Edison), Feb. 25.—Fine comedy-drama. That some of it is supposed to be laid in the west but isn't does no harm. Walter Edwin is the director, and the chief players are Herbert Prior, Charles Ogle and Mabel Trunnelle. It is a pretty story. Not to be overlooked as a member of the cast is a kitten. It makes fun.

"SEA ANEMONES" (C. G. P. C.), Feb. 25.—Close camera views of sea life. It will interest those scientifically inclined.

"A STUDY IN KITTENS" (C. G. P. C.), Feb. 25.—On the same reel as the foregoing is this series of pictures of family pets. There's an unexpected amount of amusement in these little animals.

"IMPORTING CATTLE INTO THE UNITED STATES" (Lubin), Feb. 25.—A short educational picture that will interest.

"THE FEMALE DETECTIVE" (Lubin), Feb. 25.—On the same reel is this drama, very near burlesque.

Independent

"BIG BOB" (Nestor), Mar. 5.—This is a well-pictured Western film and the first portion of it is well done. The last part, however, is impossible, as it shows a minister performing a marriage ceremony under the influence of liquor. The picture is worth finishing in some more acceptable way.

"BINKS, THE TIGHTWAD" (Imp), Mar. 1.—An intimate picture in farcical vein of family life. It is a very naturally set picture and there is enough truth and near-truth in it to insure laughter. It is a fine picture for suburban houses.

"THE MARDI GRAS CARNIVAL, NEW ORLEANS" (Imp), Mar. 1.—The photography is fair. Besides the floats we find some interesting views of the throngs and of masqueraders.

"A COUNTERFEIT COURTSHIP" (Victor), Feb. 28.—The same idea which, by the way, is a good one, was used about two years ago, by, if we remember rightly, the Lubin Company with Arthur Johnson and Florence Lawrence in the leads. Let that be as it may, this picture is also good entertainment. It has again been well acted and clearly produced and photographed. We feel sure that it will please.

"A COMEDIAN FOR LOVE" (Eclair, Paris), Mar. 2.—A picture featuring a clever player who appears in several remarkably complete disguises. These changes are interesting; but the story that gives them occasion is not very fresh or convincing. The photography lacks quality, but is clear.

"LIFE IN EGYPT" (Eclair), Mar. 2.—The subject matter is new and very interesting and the photography is good. One of the best Egyptian films we remember.

"A RURAL THIRD DEGREE" (Keystone), Mar. 6.—A half reel in which the young wife is overcome with liquor and the husband is charged with killing her. She revives at the close. Not a very good comedy conception.

"THE SLEUTHS AT THE FLORAL PARADE" (Keystone), Mar. 6.—Interesting pictures of a floral parade in Los Angeles, interspersed with comedy scenes.

"THE GHOST IN UNIFORM" (Thanhouser), Feb. 23.—A comedy offering with a slight plot, in which the Thanhouser Kid creeps into the deserted police station to pass the night, after losing his crippled sister. He frightens away two tramps, by exhibiting a uniform and hat on a stick. They return later, with some officers, and the boy is discovered to be the supposed ghost. He then finds his sister.

"NOW I LAY ME DOWN TO SLEEP' (Imp), Mar. 3.—In spite of the sincere acting of Wm. E. Shay and Jane Fearnley, this picture has a strong touch of sentimentality at the close. The shooting of the burglar through the curtain was very abrupt and the scene where the relationship is discovered and he repeats the old childhood prayer rather overdone. Yet the motive of the picture is good and the photos good. It will appeal to many observers.

"DR. JEKYLL AND MR. HYDE" (Imp), Mar. 6.—With this two-reel release the Imp company gives the public opportunity to compare a film production of the famous Stevenson story with stage productions that have preceded it. King Baggot gives us a masterly presentation of this dual character; as the kind-hearted, upright Dr. Jeykll he pleases, and as the hideous Mr. Hyde, under the powerful drug, he brings shudders aplenty. In one effect at least the film story excells—we get the real dissolving view as the drug begins to manifest its influence, in place of the crude facial manipulations employed on the stage. The London atmosphere is fairly well presented. Jane Gale and a capable company assist Mr. Baggot. A powerful presentation of a famous story.

"BROTHER AGAINST BROTHER" (Bison), Mar. 4.—A two-reel picture telling a Civil War love story; it has a good deal that will attract the average spectator. The opening scenes throw us at once into the midst of the battle of Shiloh and are full of stir, excitement and smoke. The battle is so well done that the picture has some difficulty in living up to its high-pitched note. Yet there are some scenes, especially those where the discredited hero defends the stairs from the guerrillas, that are about as thrilling as any that we see. We noticed also some beautiful pictures where the photography is about perfect. Taking it all and all, it makes a good, serviceable feature, one that will be liked.

"THE GREATEST OF THESE IS CHARITY" (Nestor), Mar. 7.—A picture in an interesting atmosphere and with some good realism in its character drawing. The story is not wholly new, but has been produced in a way that will make it entertaining to the many. The title comes from the minister's inability to find any friend for a poor daughter of a convicted horse thief. He ends in marrying her. The acting of the leads is not its strong point, but there is some good photography.

"THE EYES OF SATAN" (Solax), Feb. 12.—A woman who has become disgusted with her stay-out husband makes up her mind to go home to mother when hubby again offends by remaining out until 2 a. m. When she arrives father and mother are sitting by the table reading. There is nothing in the picture to hold close attention.

"THE DOLL AND THE DEVIL" (Pilot), Feb. 27.—A very pretty and a good picture, especially for women and children. It is a costume production. It is well directed.

"PAT'S BUSY DAY" (Lux), Mar. 7.—The most interesting feature of this film is the workmanlike triple exposure. By reason of the trick work the picture goes over.

"WHEN THE STORMY WINDS DO BLOW" (Lux), Mar. 7.—On the same reel as the foregoing. A hose figures much in this comedy of slapstick stuff.

"ROCAMBALE'S GLOVES" (Itala).—In this special release there is some marvelous trick camera work. There is an instance of triple exposure. It will deeply interest any audience; certainly it is an unusual picture.

"WITH THE JAPANESE ARMY" (Kinemacolor).—Scenes taken at the maneuvers of the Japanese army. An interesting picture is that showing the advance of the little brown men in military aviation.

"HER CROWNING GLORY" (Kinemacolor).—Mabel Van Buren has the lead in this drama, which is notable for the beautiful backgrounds—some of the finest so far shown in films devoted to the drama. The acting is good.

"THE IRON MASTER" (Kinemacolor).—In this society drama, laid in France, there is shown a beautiful array of costumes and charming settings.

"THERE IS A GOD" (Kinemacolor).—There are fine views in this drama of the Mojave Desert, California. The photography is excellent. These combine to put the picture over, there being nothing new in the story.

"ZERMATT AND GORNER GRAT" (Kinemacolor).—Marvelous views of the Alps, some of them being taken from a point as high as 15,000 feet. Most charming of all are the views of sunset and moonlight near the Matterhorn. This film will rank with the best that Kinemacolor has shown.

"ART AND HONOR" (Lubin), Feb. 21.—An artist is summoned by a husband to paint a portrait of his wife. The husband then goes away, leaving his young wife at home; also in the house is the young artist. The first half or three quarters of the film was not interesting. Things brighten up a bit on the return of the husband, who is well worth watching. There is between the wife and the artist a growing affection and a contest between love and honor. Honor gets the decision, but seems to have a hard job winning out.

"WHO IS MOST TO BLAME" (Great Northern).—A sophisticated comedy that is extremely well done and undeniably laughable. That it makes fun of a wife's flirtation with another man is somewhat against it, even against its power of giving entertainment to people of good taste. Many may condone it on the score of its good acting, its sets and its clear photography.

"THE MAN WHO DARED" (Eclair), Feb. 27.—A two-reel story of the great Canadian out-of-doors, which gets up a fair degree of interest, although not as powerful as some previous offerings along this line. The scenes in which the lieutenant neglects his wife for the girl of the hills, and Jack interferes, lead gradually up to the stronger situations. Jack, charged with dealing in contraband whiskey, is pursued two days through woods and mountains, and the two finally meet in a revolver duel in which both are seriously injured. Jack dies and the mountain girl is left alone. The closing scenes are very melodramatic.

"IN THE SOUTH SEAS" (Rex), Feb. 27.—A typical yarn of the South Seas, admirably presented. We have the diving and dancing natives in scant attire, the Chinese pearl smugglers, the catlike brown men who swarm the pirate ship and climb into the riggings. The scenes on the ship are, of course, very much on the dime-novel order, but are of the clean, adventurous character and novel enough to make them a welcome change from more familiar situations. A good offering.

"THE STRANGER'S TRAIL" (Fontier), Feb. 26.—A Western offering of an extremely romantic character, and with subtitles which bring smiles because of their overdrawn phrasing. Yet the photography is good and the situations interesting. The girl gets into the hands of a gentleman gambler, after her father's death, and is rescued by the hero, who guards her in his tent overnight on the plains.

"ANIMATED WEEKLY NO. 50" (Universal), Feb. 19.—Contains many up-to-the-minute views, including war vessels en route to Mexico; Gen. Rosalie Jones and her suffragette hikers on the way to Washington; unloading a banana steamer, etc. The night view of the signs on Broadway are especially good.

"A RED GIRL'S SACRIFICE," (Bison), Mar. 1.—This two-reel Western film contains many old and familiar situations and a few new ones. The story follows along very nicely, and in the second reel the interest increases considerably. The principal action centers round a prolonged attack by Indians on a wagon train, during which the hero is captured and later saved by Mona, the Indian girl. The redskins crept up on the wagons from behind big logs.

"WHEN HE JUMPED AT CONCLUSIONS" (Nestor), Mar. 3.—This half-reel comedy is decidedly broad in treatment and rather too suggestive to succeed. It shows an intoxicated young fellow put in the wrong bed by mistake, which arouses the husband's jealousy.

"THE GIRL SLEUTHS" (Nestor), Mar. 3.—This, on same reel with above, is much better comedy and has no drawbacks. The manner in which two amateur girl detectives arrest the author of penny dreadfuls is laughable.

"INJUNS" (Powers), March 5.—A "comic supplement" story of two mischievous children. They are dressed as Indians and tie grandpa to a tree and start a fire under him. Grandpa has to pull the tree up to escape. Rather amusing.

"EPH'S DREAM" (Powers), March 5.—Here is a genuinely funny film, on same reel with above, in which a darky has a real darky dream (chicken dinner included), but comes to a terrible awakening. About 200 boys pursue him through the streets.

"THE STOOL PIGEON" (Rex), March 6.—This film begins in an interesting manner, with views of the underworld. Dago Joe is an informer, or stool pigeon, and by an exchange of coats a murder is fastened upon him. His sister is the wife of the prosecuting attorney, and in the end establishes an alibi for him. The closing scenes were handled somewhat weakly.

"A STRANGER IN THE ROCKIES" (Mecca), Mar. 1.—This picture is unnecessarily melodramatic in places and suffers from jerky action, but nevertheless it tells an interesting story. One brother goes West at his mother's request to look for his younger brother, who has been absent fifteen years. The scenes in the barroom and the slide down the face of the cliff were well handled. In spite of numerous defects the film has good points.

"TROUBLED WATERS" (Rex), Mar. 9.—This is a superior offering in every way; good photos, good direction, capable acting and an appealing story. The wife of the sailor takes work as a teacher of knitting and intends surprising her husband with the proceeds. But a gossiping woman interferes and the husband's jealousy is aroused, with humiliating results. Phillips Smalley and his wife play the leads with good effect, the closing scenes in particular being unforced and pleasing. A good offering.

"THE CAUSE" (Nestor), Mar. 5.—A prospector steals money from a gaming table, under the spur of poverty. He is pursued by the sheriff and a posse and captured. The appearance of his child saves him from an unkind fate and he is given a chance to make good. The parts are well played and the story fairly appealing.

"IN A ROMAN GARDEN" (Powers), Mar. 7.—Here is a story of the days of the early Christians, in which Edwin August appears as a Roman noble, and Jean MacPherson as the Christian maid. The influence of the cross is used to turn his scorn into love. The California pergola and surrounding garden make an attractive setting for the story and the costumes are effective. A good offering.

"A NIGHT IN TOWN" (Crystal), Mar. 2.—An amusing skit in which the maid plays hostess during the absence of the real lady of the house and her husband. She and the butler entertain friends and deceive the uncle, who comes on a visit. Good comedy.

"THE INNOCENT BRIDEGROOM" (Crystal), Mar. 2.—This, on the same reel with above, shows a widow employing a detective to shadow her bald-headed fiance. She forgets to call the detective off, after their marriage, with amusing results.

"TRACKED TO FLORIDA" (Punch), Feb. 27.—A detective story in travesty, in which three sleuths go to Florida to recover a stolen switch. Passably amusing.

"BOBBY'S BUM BOMB" (Punch), Feb. 27.—Bobby and the tramp steal mother's pies and pretend a bowling ball is a bomb about to explode. This is on same reel with above.

"EVELYN'S STRATEGY" (Reliance), Feb. 22.—The rejected money king resolves to ruin his rival in love, and succeeds in doing so in the course of this typical story of the Street. But the girl locks the money king in a cellar and this affects the market in her lover's favor. Familiar plot, but well pictured and entertaining.

"THE MESSAGE IN THE COCOANUT" (Majestic), Feb. 25.—A thrilling war between opposing cannibal tribes is the feature of this two-reel film, but there are many other amazing scenes pictured in it. The young lover is shanghaied on the eve of his wedding, and lost to his promised bride for a period of five years. He sends forth a message in a cocoanut, which time and tide conspire to bring into the hands of a Coney Island beachcomber. Help reaches him at the close of the cannibal war, when he is about to be eaten up. He reaches home in time to interrupt the wedding ceremony between his own intended and villain of the piece. Very diverting and something new.

"SHIRTS AND SHOCKS" (Majestic), Feb. 23.—The society burglar in this comedy film is held up by the perspiring bridegroom and has to give up his shirt and ring. A good humorous idea in this, and one that is well worked out.

"THE BIRTHDAY CAKE" (Reliance), Feb. 26.—The son steals money from his father to use in gaining a musical education. The theft is neither punished nor condoned, which is the chief weakness of the picture. The scenes in which the father lights the candles on the birthday cake each year, hoping for his son's return, have a pathetic appeal, and the son at last comes. The pictures are well taken and the acting good.

"WHEN DREAMS COME TRUE" (Thanhouser), Feb. 28.—The fine setting and artistic appeal of this film are its strong points. The young couple long to give up their orange grove and take up city life. They lease the grove, but by the end of the time for which it was surrendered they return. A good light offering.

"SHERLOCK HOLMES AND THE SIGN OF THE FOUR" (Thanhouser), Feb. 25.—This two-reel film gives us a new kind of Sherlock Holmes, a younger and heavier built man than we usually see in the part. But once the story gets into action, with its weird, oriental atmosphere, we forget everything else. The story of the Agra treasure is pictured for us in an intensely fascinating manner. The one-legged man, the East Indian with his blow-pipe, the Sholtos, the Baker street lodgings, the scenes in India, and the various exciting episodes combine to make this a successful offering. The treasure never comes into the hands of the rightful owner, Mary, as it was cast into the river. A strong production of a famous narrative.

"THE WAY TO A MAN'S HEART" (Thanhouser), Mar. 2.—A young man leaves a New England boarding house and goes West to make his fortune. Fifteen years later, when he has succeeded in this, he meets the same landlady and her daughter in California, when he drops into their boarding house for a New England dinner. The passage of fifteen years was not shown sufficiently in the characters. The photos are good and the story pleasing and not overdrawn.

"THE SLEUTH'S LAST STAND" (Keystone), Mar. 3.—Mace and Sennet, posing as the familiar detectives, have a series of misadventures. They disguise as Indian squaws, which of course leads to plenty of trouble.

"A DEAF BURGLAR" (Keystone), Mar. 3.—This, on same reel with above, has quite an amusing idea in it. The deaf burglar awakens the whole neighborhood by his noisy work as a yeggman. A good burlesque.

"THE BARRIER" (Broncho), Mar. 5.—This two-reel film contains numerous fresh, exciting views of Indian warfare in the early days. The love story is well developed and the fight between Shorty and the hero was well put on. Following this encounter the young lieutenant is shorn of his buttons and drummed out of camp. He appears during the wildest moments of the fighting between the Indians and soldiers and saves his sweetheart from death. In the end he is restored to his former rank. A strong offering of its kind.

"THE JOCULAR WINDS" (American), Mar. 6.—The woman who snubs her young neighbor in this picture comes to grief at last, for the neighboring girl inherits a mortgage on the widow's estate and has opportunity for revenge. She is merciful, however, and cancels the mortgage. Though well acted this scene was hardly convincing, as sacrifices of this kind are seldom made in real life, especially with so little obligation for them. The story is interesting, however.

"THE LOST DESPATCH" (Kay-Bee), Mar. 7.—A strong two-reel war story, in which there is a rush of war scenes. The dash of the ammunition train is good and a strong interest centers about the boy volunteer, who was killed on the field of battle. Through a false dispatch given out by the Yanks, Jack is credited with the loss of a battle and lives in disgrace through after years. Long years after the war the sweetheart, now an old woman, finds the real dispatch and knows that he was not to blame, but when the veterans gather round to inform him of this, Jack is dead. The end is very pathetic. A strong war drama.

"THE GREATER LOVE" (American), Mar. 3.—The moonlight scene at the close of this picture is quite notable in its conception and for the manner in which it is pictured. The Mexican girl, rather than see the man she loves slain, plunges under the knife in the hands of her jealous lover. The opening scenes are interesting and there is a good photography throughout.

"THE TRANSGRESSION OF MANUEL" (American), Mar. 8.—Manuel's wife is sick and no one will give a greaser money or work. He therefore steals a horse and sells it in order to obtain money with which to buy medicine. The crime is traced to him, but he is released when it is seen that his wife has died in spite of his efforts to save her. A pathetic story, well pictured.

"CONSCIENCE" (Gem), March 4.—Portraying the sufferings in mind of a man who had found a pocketbook containing money and the distress brought upon the man who lost it, and how all ended happily. Good drama, well acted.

"THE PRIMA DONNA" (Victor), March 7.—Rather slight. It portrays the dangers and pitfalls of stage life for the country girl. Well photographed, the most is made of the subject by the cast.

"THE BETTER WAY" (Ramo), Feb. 19.—This first offering released by the Ramo company promises good things for the future. It is not a great picture, but is serviceable and stands up very well indeed with other releases we have seen of late. The situation is full of human significance and gives the players a good chance to succeed or to fail—they act very creditably. It makes an interesting picture. The sets are natural and in good taste. The photography is fair. Mary Alden plays the woman whose husband (Jack Hopkins) drinks and who nearly elopes with an old flame of hers.

"SWEET FAMILIAR FACES" (Gaumont), March 13.—A delightfully amusing picture of social life and of society characters. Brightly conceived in the first place, it is not only acted cleverly but with much charm of personality. This is especially true of Joe, the flirtatious husband whose friends have arranged a comedy experience to cure him. It is a picture that will please the discriminating and the gallery too. The background and photography are both very good.

"THE SOVEREIGN SOUL" (Gaumont), March 18.—The quality of this picture is good enough to serve as a feature and we feel sure that it will awaken enthusiasm wherever it is shown. It is a story of a queen who is also a mother. There is a war and the king is away conquering the enemy when the prince is stolen and carried across the lines and the king warned to stop the war or the prince's death will result. The queen mother rises to heroism and orders the war of liberation to be kept up though she lose her son. Perhaps the street scenes that make the picture seem realistic were taken in Sofia or other Balkan cities. The posed scenes go perfectly with them and the scenes that show the capture and carrying off of the prince are convincing and full of thrill. The acting, sets, backgrounds and photography are fine. It is a dandy offering.

"THE BUTTERFLY" (Gaumont), March 18.—A most remarkable offering showing much of the life of the large, white cabbage butterfly, a well known species. It carries the creature from egg to wing, so to speak. And in some ways it is a terrible showing of marvelous nature. The caterpillar undergoes most convulsive changes.

"SIMPLE SIMON SUFFERS SORELY" (Gaumont), Mar. 20.—In this farce, a costumer's shop is shown filled with lay figures—Napoleon, Clovis, Louis XIV and others. Simple Simon, in his wrath, maltreats these figures and they come to life. After knocking the shop about a bit they do up Simon. It contains some of the best trick camera work we have ever seen and is likely to please.

"VICHY AND ITS WATERS". (Gaumont), Mar. 20.—An instructive picture in which a machine is shown that can fill, cork, cap and paste a label on bottles of vichy water, all automatically. The photography is clear.

Motion Picture Exhibitors' League

CLEVELAND EXHIBITORS PROVE THEIR CASE.

Show Conclusively That Official Censorship of Motion Pictures is Not Needed.

THE arrangement entered into between Mayor Baker, the film exchanges and the Moving Picture Exhibitors' League early in January has resulted satisfactorily to all parties concerned up to the present time, writes Samuel Bullock, who represents the Lake Shore Film Company on the censor board. The city censors, Messrs. Bartholomew and Hunter, were appointed by Mayor Baker under a three months' agreement to censor all pictures, the expenses to be paid by the film men, to which they willingly assented, though they had no voice in the choosing of the censors. It was a necessary experiment inasmuch as both sides claim they were right and no figures were available upon either side of the controversy.

The gentlemen entered into the task of censoring on January 6th and have been engaged daily since that date examining the programs released every morning by each of the three exchanges of Cleveland. This amounts to over 100,000 feet of new pictures weekly. The experiment so far has proved the truth of the film men's claim, according to the daily reports signed by the official censors during the first thirty days ending February 6th.

The reports of the Lake Shore Film Company, whom Mr. Bullock represents in the daily censor sessions, show that between January 6th and February 6th 121,000 feet of pictures were shown upon the screen. This embraced 133 subjects, plots, stories, dramas, comedies, educational, historic, sacred, scenic and industrial. Out of this only six parts were ordered cut out as objectionable. These six parts average 18 inches each, or about nine feet all told, out of 121,000 feet.

Eighteen inches of film passes upon the screen in one and one-half seconds, so this represents the censored cut-outs in each of six subjects out of 133, embracing nearly 2,000 scenes. Against this nine feet of objectional film we have over 15,000 feet of exclusive educational subjects, pictorial current weekly events and similar matter, which we claim counterbalances it, so that it can have little or no immoral effect.

The signed reports of the General Film Company and the Victor Film Company show results almost identical, and as these programs are identical in every city and state daily, the reports should prove interesting to all America. It is the first time on record that actual figures have been obtainable on this subject and it speaks volumes for the moral cleanliness of the programs of to-day.

In conclusion, Mr. Bullock says: "Exhibitors are well pleased with the official test. They are vindicated by the reports and I am authorized to invite any one engaged in child welfare, philanthrophic, educational, or sociological work, to visit the censor department of the Lake Shore Film Company, Columbia Building, daily from 12:00 to 2:00 p. m. and give us the benefit of their judgment upon the pictures. We welcome them as do the other exchanges.

"Mayor Gaynor, of New York, said legalized censorship would be 'un-American, unfair and unconstitutional,' and this acid test by Mayor Baker's chosen censors now proves that it is also unnecessary. The present national board is all sufficient with the immense organized body of league exhibitors demanding clean subjects from the makers through their respective exchanges. Of course, the chronic crank and would-be moralist does not know what we know on the 'inside'—he condemns in a general way without producing facts or figures, opposing the proposed state censor bill now before the legislature at Columbus. We have letters from four other states where outsiders are trying to foist state boards upon them. If this course is followed the laws covering motion pictures will be as confusing as the various state laws covering divorces. It is very much to be regretted that every member of the Ohio State League did not know the exact conditions existing before the bill was introduced. Now that the facts are known we should refuse to legalize by our consent the stigma which others are trying to attach to our business. Let us fight it down all along the line."

OHIO EXHIBITORS GET TOGETHER.

Since the publication of the letter from Secretary Christenson in last week's World on the subject of censorship legislation in Ohio, there has been a getting together of the exhibitors in that State and whatever difference of opinion that may have existed on the subject of the proposed censor law has been settled, as the following telegrams to the Moving Picture World attest:

Columbus, Ohio, February 26, 1913.

Editor The Moving Picture World, New York:

A conference of the members of the Exhibitors' League of Ohio, held here to-day, in reference to proposed State Censor Bill now pending in the Legislature. All parties endorsed the bill after a few changes were made. We think it is the best possible to accept at this time owing to conditions arising in most of the municipalities in this State. The ultimate result of this bill will help manufacturers, film exchanges and exhibitors. Ohio exhibitors are now solid for the bill.

M. A. Neff, National President,
C. M. Christenson, National Secretary.

Columbus, Ohio, February 26, 1913.

Editor The Moving Picture World, New York:

At a meeting of the Motion Picture Exhibitors of Ohio, held at the Neil House, Columbus, Ohio, prominent among those present were: President Neff, of Cincinnati; National Secretary Christenson; Mr. Swartz, S. E. Morris, of Cleveland; W. R. Wilson, of Columbus, and W. C. Bettis, of Toledo. Mr. Neff read and explained the Censor Bill now before the Ohio Legislature. After his explanation, with one or two slight changes, every exhibitor present was perfectly satisfied with the bill. If the bill is passed as drawn by President Neff, it will be the means of saving the day for the exhibitors, film exchanges and manufacturers in the State of Ohio and other States as well. It will eliminate all municipal censor boards. A special feature of the bill, which was heretofore misunderstood by many, provides for a national censor congress, legally constituted, which, if concurred in by other States, will eliminate all other censor boards and the congress will censor the pictures for the entire United States without one extra cent of cost to the manufacturers, exhibitors or film exchanges of other States, provided that the other States endorse the censor congress as provided by the Ohio State Censor Bill.

J. A. Maddox, President Columbus Local No. 4.

OHIO EXHIBITOR WANTS TO KNOW.

Upon reading the letter from Secretary C. M. Christenson published in the issue of the Moving Picture World of March 1st, W. R. Wilson, treasurer of the Ohio League, wired the following message to the Moving Picture World:

"At our Toledo Convention, July 16, a resolution endorsing a State Board of Censorship was passed unanimously. At our Columbus Convention held on the 21st and 22nd of January, the Censorship Bill now pending was unanimously endorsed by the exhibitors assembled. C. M. Christenson, acting as secretary in place of State Secretary John L. Huss, dating from July 16, 1912, to February 5, 1913. Mr. Christenson did not state to any one that he was opposed to a Censor Board; if there is another exhibitor in the State of Ohio who opposes a State Censorship Board, State officials of the league do not know of it. Mr. Christenson's letter to the Moving Picture World positively does not represent the sentiment of other exhibitors in the State of Ohio."

OKLAHOMA STATE CONVENTION.

On Tuesday and Wednesday, February 11th and 12th, 1913, at the Skirvine Hotel, Oklahoma City, Okla., the motion picture exhibitors of Oklahoma held their first convention and perfected a state organization to be known as the Oklahoma State Branch, No. 23, Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America.

President M. A. Neff, of the National League, was unable to attend the first meeting, but he delegated G. H. Wiley, of Kansas City, Mo., president of the Missouri State Branch, to act in his place. Mr. Wiley attended the first meeting and did excellent work in forming the State branch.

The following permanent State officers were elected for the term of one year: National vice-president, Karl Gregg, Tulsa; president, R. W. Wirt, Enid; first vice-president, J. H. Steinson, McAllister; second vice-president, O. McLane, Oklahoma City; secretary, R. De Bruler, Oklahoma City; treasurer, W. M. Smith, Tulsa. Board of Directors: L. W. Brophy, Muskogee; S. H. Jones, Altus; H. T. Gardner, Holdenville; Leroy Beckel, Ardmore; A. R. Zimmer, Blackwell.

Many matters of importance were disposed of and the State Branch voted to hold the second State Convention on June 17th, at Oklahoma City.

On the last night of the convention, February 12th, a banquet was given in the banquet hall of the Skirvin Hotel, where about sixty partook of an excellent menu. During the course of the banquet the diners were entertained by pictures and songs and an orchestra from the Lyric Theater, Tulsa; Mr. Carl Gregg, manager. This orchestra was later augmented by the addition of nine pieces from the Empress Theater, Oklahoma City; Mr. T. H. Boland, manager. G. H. Wiley acted as master of ceremonies; everybody was happy and the first convention of the Oklahoma State Branch No. 23 was voted by all a splendid success.

Great credit is due to Mr. Carl Gregg for the success of the convention in more ways than one, but particularly as to entertainment.

The following is a list of the charter members: Carl Gregg, Tulsa; L. W. Brophy, Muskogee; O. McLean, Oklahoma City; J. M. Truax, Hollis; L. E. Bickle, Ardmore; H. E. White, Lawton; W. G. McConnell, Pawhuska; J. C. DeWalt, Ponca City; Thomas Wubker, Chickasha; R. S. Hamly, Paul's Valley; Chas, Blaine, Heneryetta; Frankel Bros., Oklahoma City; John Synopola, Oklahoma City; C. P. Anderson, Muskogee; John A. Steinson, McAlester; J. I. Carr, Kingfisher; J. C. Murray, Lawton; L. E. Donahue, Okemah; S. H. Jones, Altus; Thomas H. Boland, Oklahoma City; A. R. Zimmer, Blackwell; A. A. Shilkett, Nowata; George T. Stapleton, Guthrie; Wm. M. Smith, Tulsa; Hugh Gardner, Holdenville; R. W. Wirt, Enid; C. C. Harkins, Colgate; D. L. Walker, El Reno; J. M. Nesbit, Norman; R. H. De Bruler, Oklahoma City; L. L. Covin, Clinton; J. M. Hill, Lawton; H. H. Naly, Cleveland; Albert Jackson, Pawhuska; A. M. Arion, Chandler; Crowley & Sanders, Bartlettsville; Ben Gregg, Tulsa; E. C. Mills, Oklahoma City.

ARKANSAS STATE CONVENTION.

On Friday, February 14th, at the Marion Hotel, Little Rock, Ark., President G. H. Wiley, of the Missouri State Branch, perfected a permanent organization of the Arkansas moving picture exhibitors to be known as the Arkansas State Branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America. There was a large attendance of exhibitors and many matters of importance were disposed of. It was voted to hold the second convention on June 19th at Little Rock, Ark.

The following State officers were elected: National vice-president, S. A. Arnold, Mena; president, A. O. Bandy, Little Rock; first vice-president, S. H. White, Englans; second vice-president, Hoyt Kirkpatrick, Fort Smith; secretary, D. A. Hutchinson, Lonoka; treasurer, E. H. Butler, Russellville. Board of Directors: L. W. Lippincott, Little Rock; E. H. Bellingsley, Helena; W. G. Mitchell, Altus; F. E. Wright, Gurdon; C. C. Williams, Stuttgart.

A MOVING PICTURE EXHIBITORS' DAY.

President Neff, of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, calls attention to the action taken by the conference of national vice-presidents at Columbus on January 22nd, at which the following resolution was adopted:

"Resolved, That Tuesday, April 8, 1913, be designated as Motion Picture Exhibitors' Day, and that all members of this league in every State are requested to contribute 10% of their gross receipts on that day for the purpose of carrying on the splendid work now being done by the league; 5% to be sent to the State treasurer for the benefit of each State league and 5% to be sent to C. M. Christenson, secretary, 703 Euclid Avenue, Cleveland, Ohio, for the benefit of the National league."

As stated in the resolution, the receipts of theaters on that day is to be divided between the State and National league organizations for promotion work; it is a worthy object and should receive the unanimous support of all members of the league.

A GOOD SUGGESTION.

The enterprising manager of Barnard's Theater, Millbrook, N. Y., makes a good suggestion to the Exhibitors' League in the following. He calls attention to the fact that gas tanks are returned by the express companies at one-quarter original rate and that milk cans have been given a special rate. On the same basis, he claims that the return trip of films by all exhibitors to the exchanges should be at some such reduced scale. The item of transportation of films is a very large one to many exhibitors and exchanges and the above idea might result in a substantial reduction in the return charges on film service if some concerted action were taken.

PRESIDENT TRIGGER TOURS THE STATE.

President Sam H. Trigger, of the New York State Exhibitors' League, accompanied by Secretary H. W. Rosenthal and Association Counsel W. B. F. Rogers, left New York, Tuesday night for Buffalo, where they attended a banquet of moving picture men on the evening of Wednesday, February 26th. On Thursday there was a mass meeting of all exhibitors of Buffalo and vicinity at which President Trigger presided. Following this meeting, Mr. Trigger and party made a tour of the principal cities of the State, visiting Binghamton, Rochester, Syracuse, Utica, Rome and Albany. The purpose of the tour is to arouse an interest in the State league and to secure co-operation of the exhibitors generally to assist in the passage of better laws governing the moving picture business.

"UNIVERSAL" KENNEDY IN AUTO SMASH.

While returning from Vernon to Los Angeles on the night of February 24th, A. M. Kennedy, general manager of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company's producing forces at Los Angeles, and a party of friends, had a serious collision with a lunch wagon on 7th Street and Central Avenue, Los Angeles. Mr. Kennedy and his wife were thrown bodily from the machine and seriously bruised. Other members of the party, though thrown out of the machine, escaped with slight injury. The cause of the accident was an attempt of the chauffeur of Kennedy's machine, who was on the wrong side of the road, to escape colliding with another automobile which was approaching on Seventh Street. The two cars collided and forced the Kennedy machine further into the curb and into collision with the lunch wagon.

SAY LEVY & COHN'S "SALOME" IS O. K.

The statement published in last week's issue on page 901 in regard to the seizure of the Salome feature film of the Savoia Film Company, of Turin, at Pittsburg is questioned by the importers of the film. We are informed that the copy of the film referred to was bought direct from the manufacturer in Turin, Italy, under the name of "Herodiade," by the Feature Film Company, of New York, and was not pirated in any sense of the term. We are also told that it is very questionable if the film could have been copyrighted in its original shape. We shall be interested in watching the result of this case and understand that the Feature Film Company of New York has no doubt in regard to the outcome of the suit, as it has already had favorable experience in a very similar case. The item published last week was upon the authority of the European Feature Film Company and was correct as to the facts concerning the seizure, but the conclusion that the film in question was a "pirated edition" was erroneous.

RECEIVER FOR IMPERIAL FILM COMPANY.

On the application of William Steiner, president, and William C. Devery, treasurer, majority stockholders of the Imperial Film Company, Justice Davis, of the Supreme Court, New York City, has appointed Joseph R. Truesdale, of 71 Broadway, New York City, receiver for that corporation. At the same time, Justice Davis appointed Charles F. Murray referee to hear, on April 8th at 11 o'clock, any objections to the voluntary dissolution of the company. The Imperial Film Company has been inactive for some time. It was operated by Messrs. Steiner and Devery as a licensed exchange on 28th Street, New York City, but was practically put out of business upon the cancellation of its license by the Motion Picture Patents Company about three years ago. The petitioners in the receivership claim that they have assets amounting to about $5,000; also a large number of actions against moving picture companies for damages which run up close to $1,000,000. It also has many liabilities.

CHARLES BUYS ANOTHER PICTURE HOUSE.

Theodore Charles, proprietor and manager of the Star Theater, Vincennes, Ind., has bought the "Red Mill" Theater of that city, the purchase price being $16,500. The "Red Mill" is one of the prettiest and costliest picture houses in southern Indiana and has a seating capacity of 560. Previously to the sale the "Red Mill" played to vaudeville, but it is Mr. Charles' intention to run nothing but pictures.

BARLOW REMODELS THEATER.

James W. Barlow, who has recently taken over the California Theater, Los Angeles, Cal., is having the place entirely remodeled. The house will be managed by Mr. Barlow, who successfully ran the "National," the "Wonderland" and the "Gem."

"Loved by a Maori Chieftess"

A Two-Reel Melies Feature.

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

THE Melies series of a trip around the world (I was tempted to refer to it as the Jules Verne series) has received another valuable accession in a two-reel feature which is named "Loved By a Maori Chieftess." It is of exceptional value as a scenic and educational subject. Books have been written in large number to give us a true description of the picturesque and gifted race known as the Maoris, but I would willingly trade most of them for these two reels. Of all the savage races none has accepted more readily the fruits of modern civilization than the Maori. While they have taken much from the white man and are even represented in the white man's parliament, there is enough of the primitive about them to make them uncommonly interesting. In these pictures we see the aboriginal Maori, and he is indeed a pleasing person to look at. With but one exception all of the characters in this play are Maoris and they all show that singular mimic gift which seems to be a heritage of all primitive peoples and always forms a welcome contrast to the more artful ways of our own white brothers.

Scene from "Loved by a Maori Chieftess" (Melies).

The story is exceedingly simple, indeed, it had to be to make the acting of the natives acceptable. They are never for a moment taken out of their element and the result is altogether satisfactory. Glimpses of the strange rude architecture of the Maori, quaint figures carved out of wood with infinite patience and not without skill; the "totems," invested by savage fancy with supernatural power, the picturesque dwellings, the fantastic dances, the strong, well-knit frames of the Maori man and woman and, above all things, the wonderful scenic beauties form some of the chief merits of this picture, though by no means the only merits. I think that the personality and the acting of the simple Maori girl who took the leading part hold a strange charm of their own. Indeed, the fact that with one exception the actors and actresses are all Maoris gives this picture an extraordinary character. It was a happy conception on the part of the producer.

Scene from "Loved by a Maori Chieftess" (Melies).

A special and separate word of praise is due to the scenic parts of this feature. The steaming and spouting geysers of Maoriland are peculiar to that part of the world alone. The geysers, believed to be of volcanic origin, are in all stages of eruption from a manifestation of steaming vapors to the rushing of thick bursts of water. When wandering among the geysers one can never be sure where an eruption of water may come next. In this picture the camera man has been particularly fortunate in catching the sudden eruption of a geyser. Where a moment before nothing gave any indication of any disturbances in the bowels of the earth, there spouts up without an instant's warning a quivering mass of water threatening to engulf everything within its limits, which happily were not wide. The hero and heroine of the story narrowly escape being overwhelmed by the unexpected flood.

"Loved by a Maori Chieftess" will be admired by all and is sure of the especial appreciation of all who are interested in the wonders of remote lands and in the customs and character of a people so wholly and strangely different from ourselves.

MRS. HURLEY TO SOLAX.

Mrs. Julia R. Hurley has been engaged by the Solax Company for a series of special roles, following her notable successes with the Reliance Company, more especially her Meg Merrilies in Guy Mannering, a conception of the part largely based upon the work of Charlotte Cushman, with whom Mrs. Hurley played in the prime of that famous artist.

But Miss Cushman is by no means the only artist of note this lively little old lady has supported in her stage career of forty-five years. Mr. and Mrs. William J. Florence, Mr. and Brs. Barney Williams and Harrigan and Hart have carried her on their salary roles and she was with the last named in Tike O'Callahan when Dion Boucicault brought suit against the creators of the squatter type for alleged infringement of his "The Shaughraun." Mrs. Hurley was also a member of the old Niblo Garden company and was in the support of Kate Claxton in "The Two Orphans" the night of the Park Theater, Brooklyn, fire. Few old-time players in the pictures can point to a career so long and so well filled with honor.

Mrs. Julia R. Hurley.

OHIO RIGHTS FOR "QUINCY ADAMS SAWYER."

The Puritan Special Feature Company, of Boston, Mass., reports that it has sold the rights to "Quincy Adams Sawyer" for the State of Ohio for a term of three years to R. L. Castor, of the Mission and Wonderland theaters, Shelby, O.

"The Crimson Cross"

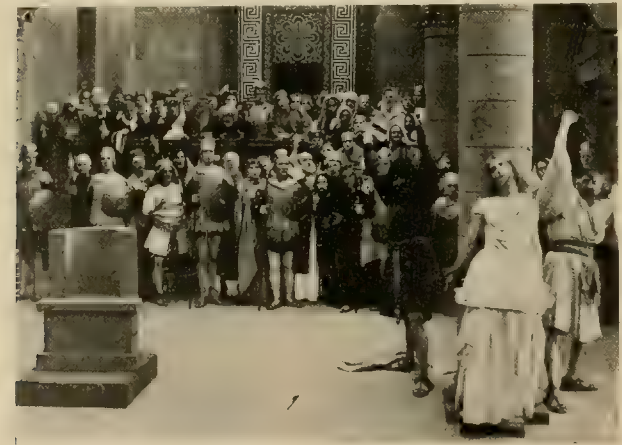
The Eclair Company Produces a Three-Reel Feature Picture In An Entirely New Vein.

By H. C. Judson.

PURSUING its new policy, the Eclair Company will release a special feature every Wednesday, and the first of these is to be released March 5th and is a pretentious religious picture called "The Crimson Cross," an offering quite out of the ordinary in many ways. In reviewing such a feature, we feel that it is wiser to describe it coldly to the exhibitor and not to advance any opinions of our own as to its chances of pleasing or displeasing on any other grounds except those of art. It would be very hard to tell how the public will receive this particular offering. For we know that there are simple minds that will accept with reverence any picture of holy things even when very crudely done, while in it there is much that is very finely done, but there are one or two scenes in it that are undeniably crude.

Scene from "The Crimson Cross" (Eclair).

The first reel opens with a very carefully made view of a home on the New England coast and presumably in Salem. The father of the house is a merchant and a Puritan, and when a captain of a Spanish ship who is a Catholic comes to the port with goods from other lands, the merchant's daughter and he meet. The results of this meeting make a simple and not improbable story. We are shown how the acquaintance grows and how it happens that the captain explains to the girl what the rosary, with its fifteen mysteries and its five transcendant mysteries stands for. Nearly all of the last two reels is given to these religious scenes in which are given the Annunciation, the birth of the Savious, His Passion, hours of torture, progress to Calvary, including the miracle of Saint Veronica, Crucifixion as seen from the distance, Resurrection, Ascension, the coming of the Holy Ghost and finally the Assumption of the Virgin. There are twenty scenes in all and some are tremendously effective and some are marvelously beautiful. A complete list of them will be found on page 924 of the Moving Picture World, issue of March 1st, so we need only point out the best of them and state why three of them among the twenty are not strong artistically.



Scene from "The Crimson Cross" (Eclair).

One of the first things that will be noticed about the whole collection is the freshness with which these pictures have been conceived. The first one, in which the miraculous birth is announced to the Virgin may have been modeled after some painting, but to us it seems more like what probably happened than does any Italian painting we have seen. It will next be noticed perhaps that they all show careful composition and have a quality like good paintings. This is made plain by a comparison with some that are frankly copies, like the scenes around the manger. The cuts we print with this notice will show what we mean. There is nothing in any of them that is really offensive. The Scourging is not shown except in the faces of the crowd, although the camera swings when whips no longer fall and the Saviour's stripes are shown. In the Crucifixion scene, the three crosses are painted on the background. We look from the temple across the city to Calvary. The veil has just been torn and a very realistic storm is gathering; we see the lightnings flash between us and the shadowed hill. This is very good indeed.

In most of the scenes the acting is reverent and simple. This is not quite true of the scene where Christ as a lad is teaching the elders in the temple. We fear that this scene will not come up to expectations. In the Resurrection, not the acting, but the machinery, makes the picture seem artificial. The action at this point doesn't follow Scripture and is not very effective. There is one scene that we fear none or few will like it; it is the Pentecost, in which is shown the descent of the Holy Ghost upon the disciples. It is a double exposure and little wicks are made to come down. They don't reach the foreheads of the men and women, don't come down straight and do smoke. A simple mind will see nothing offensive in it, but there will more than probably be one or two blasphemers among the spectators and they will probably start laughing, for to tell the truth it is crude.

The final scenes of the picture take us back to the New England setting. There is a fight between the crew of the ship and the Puritans who had decided to burn the captain as a sorcerer. The captain dies of his wounds, comforted by the rosary, and the Puritan father forgives his daughter for her attachment to the Catholic captain.

"THE MAN WHO DARED" (Eclair).

Here is another of the Eclair stories of the great Northwest. It is a two-reel offering and has a better scenario behind it than any others in this series that we have seen, which is saying a good deal. The situation is worked out virilly and naturally and gives the players many a fine chance to do forceful, effective acting. Perhaps this is why they seem to have reached a higher plane than usual, yet it may be due also to the fact that they have, as it were, got in step and are working together more as a team. This naturally gives to each separately more freedom and stronger grasp on the situation. Let this be as it may, the acting throughout will stir enthusiasm. Barbara Tennant plays the pivotal character, called "Tess of the Hills," an unattached girl for whom a mounted policeman (Fred Truesdell) has conceived a consuming passion. This officer's wife (Julia Stewart) has a brother (J. W. Johnston), an illicit whiskey distiller, who for his sister's sake makes love to Tess and gets her away from the officer.

The development grows smoothly and naturally, and with a great deal of suspense we watch the different factors reacting on each other, until at the end, the police come down on the cabin of the distillers, one of them with revenge in his heart. The cabin is consumed by the band to destroy incriminating evidence and the distillers escape to the woods. But the chief is followed by the officer, who hates him, and after an exciting chase there's a duel between the two, with a tragic ending. Behind all this are interesting, well photographed backgrounds. The producer deserves much credit for keeping his scenes in hand in a way that suggests continuity of setting and also for the care with which he has made convincing sets for his interior scenes. The photography is of high order. This offering is sure to be generally liked.

BARNEY GILMORE WITH SOLAX.

Barney Gilmore, widely known as a portrayer of Irish characters, has been engaged by the Solax Company to appear in a series of special Irish feature pictures. Mr. Gilmore began his engagement at the Solax studio, Fort Lee, N. J., on February 24th.

"The Union Eternal."

The Latest Gaumont Special Tells a Pretty Love Story in Unsurpassed Backgrounds.

By H. C. Judson.

PERHAPS the most important thing, after any love-story picture has been got ready, is the choice of leading players that will be wholly acceptable to the spectators. Surely, the producer of "The Union Eternal" has been fortunate in this respect. The man is a lieutenant in the French navy and looks his part quite naturally, while the girl is a singer, very graceful and good-looking. It is a picture that gets its quality mostly from the care and lavishness with which its scenes have been prepared and from the choice of backgrounds. The opening shows us an across-the-court romance which soon blossoms out into a full-fledged love story and at the end of the third reel becomes a tragedy in which the two young people are finally united in the only "eternal union" that there is.

In the first scene we find the girl in a beautiful apartment with her mother who is an invalid, but who is completing her daughter's musical education. The lieutenant, who is on shore-leave, hears the girl at her singing and, perhaps half carelessly, writes for her a little song which he sends with a bunch of roses. She is plainly pleased with both, and, after a glimpse through the opera glasses, with the man. Unfortunately, before the two can meet, he receives pre-emptory orders to return to his ship and sails away, after writing that he will think of her under the stars. We are given a glimpse of the big battleships making out to sea, and thus the hero's vocation is made very real to us.

Scene from "The Union Eternal" (Gaumont).

Three years pass and the girl has become a famous singer. The naval man has won another stripe and is home again on leave. He reads in a newspaper that his pretty acquaintance is to sing "Carmen." Of course he goes to the opera; but the fine views of the big house that are given, both of the stage as seen from a box and as seen from the wings, were better than expectation and make a very acceptable embellishment of the offering. Especially interesting are the "back stage" views which show the footlights shining on the scenery and the shadow of the curtain rising and falling before them as the diva is called out to be complimented by an enthusiastic audience. While these scenes can hardly be termed a novelty, they are so well done, like everything else in the picture, that they add much to the spectator's pleasure.

At this point, the story is given new force by the demand of the young man's father that he marry a certain girl already picked out. This is naturally refused. The lieutenant marries the diva and they go to Biarritz, the famous French watering place on the west coast. Some moonlight views of the water, taken at this place, and, particularly, one of the sea with a black silhouette of a castle against it, have hardly been surpassed. Several lovely shore pictures and garden views are included. It is here that the lovers are separated again by another order recalling the lieutenant to his ship. It is the indignant father who has brought this about. From this point, the story begins to take a direction towards tragedy. The rest of it, until near the end, is largely made plain by letters. But the producer has been at much pains to make this padding—we can not call it anything else—acceptable as the closing of the story and has been markedly successful. The action, though it runs a little slow, is made to seem, in its settings and backgrounds, almost poetic. The diva is preparing to sing a great role in an opera and the lieutenant keeps sending letters. His boat, a submarine, is wrecked, and he is drowned. She sings her part and is wildly applauded; but her heart is broken and she can take no pleasure in her success. Returning to the sea, she goes down at night, alone, to the sounding shore where the waves engulf her and so she meets her lover in "the eternal union."

HOW "THE SPIRIT OF '76" WAS PAINTED (Pilot).

No work of art is more popular, not alone in the United States, but also throughout the entire civilized world, than the famous painting, "The Spirit of '76." As yet very few are acquainted with the history of how this famous picture came into existence. It was painted by Willard, the American artist, who, prior to the Civil War, was a carriage painter for Amos Tripp, a wagon builder of Wellington, Ohio. After Willard returned from the war, he went back to his original vocation. He conceived the idea of embellishing the wagons with small paintings, which made them very popular with the farmers around that community. Tripp's little daughter one day told Willard she could paint, too, and showed them a babyish sketch, from which Willard evolved his first famous painting, entitled "Pluck." This will be remembered as the picture of three little children, in a little toy cart drawn by a dog who was chasing a rabbit.

Thousands of photographic copies of this picture were sold by Ryder, the art dealer of Cleveland, Ohio.

It was suggested that Willard should paint a picture for exhibition at the Philadelphia Centennial. Willard then started on a comedy picture, entitled "The Fourth of July Musicians." For the central figure he posed his venerable father a retired clergyman. While painting this picture his father was taken ill, and he finished the picture without a central model. While his father was on his dying bed with the comedy picture in his hand, he saw his mistake in attempting to paint this grand old man as such a trivial character. He pictured his father as a heroic drummer leading the Revolutionary Army into action. It was an inspiration, and he followed that inspiration by the evolved picture, "The Spirit of '76," which made Willard's reputation as an artist one of the foremost of the land. This subject will be released on March 6th in place of "Loyal Hearts," as advertised in last week's Moving Picture World.

MOTION PICTURE EXPOSITION PROGRESS.

Standard Machine Exhibit at the Exposition.

The American Moving Picture Machine Company, of New York, manufacturers of the Standard projection machine, is busily engaged in arranging what will be one of the most interesting exhibits at the coming Motion Picture Trades Exposition, to be held at Grand Central Palace, New York City, July 7th to 12th, 1913.

This exhibit, besides the specimens of Standard machines old and new, will consist of a perfectly equipped motion picture machine shop in full operation. There will be a number of lathes operated by machine experts from the Standard factory, and upon which various parts of the Standard machine will be manufactured publicly. One of the lathes will be used in the making of star wheels in the rough from the raw metal. Another lathe will be used in grinding and finishing the star wheels. A third lathe will be seen cutting sprockets, and a fourth one will be grinding sprockets and finishing them after they are cut. One part of the exhibit which will interest all observers will be a hand-made model of the 1914 Standard machine. This machine will be made entirely of the metal used by expert machinists in cutting the first machine by hand as a pattern for the entire series.

The correspondence arriving daily at the headquarters of the exposition committee is voluminous. There are requests for estimates on space coming from every part of the globe. The office of the committee in the German Bank Building, at Fourth Avenue and Fourteenth Street, New York City, is a very busy place these days, and many hands are working hard to make the coming exposition and convention a great success. One of the letters received recently from abroad is from the Cinematograph Exhibitors' Association of Great Britain and Ireland, wishing the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America much success in their forthcoming exposition and volunteering to do all in their power on their side of the water to help it along.

SPENCER CONTROL IN AUSTRALIA.

Mr. C. Spencer has finally succeeded in securing control of the moving picture business of Australia. He is the promoter of the General Film Company of Australasia, which is formed of the principal renting and producing interests of Sydney and Melbourne, and now announces that he has taken over the exchange business of the Greater J. D. Williams Amusement Company, which puts the Spencer interests in control of the greater part of the moving picture business of Australia. The American representative of the General Film Company of Australasia will be Mr. Edward Barry, whose offices are now located at 15 East 26th Street, New York City.

Too Many Film Exchanges Precipitates Price Cutting—Lively at Universal City—Notes.

THE inevitable result of trying to crowd too many exchanges into the territory has come to pass in Los Angeles, where a bitter price war is now in progress. In consequence some of the exchanges are running at a heavy loss and others are finding their profits substantially reduced, even the General Film Company being more or less affected.

The trouble has been brewing for several weeks. At the bottom of it is the fact that there is not enough business in the territory to support all the exchanges. The row started among the independents about the time the Golden Gate Film Exchange established a branch in Los Angeles. The California Exchange and Miles Brothers were already serving the independent exhibitors, the Emmick Film service was handling features and the Sunset and National Exchanges were dealing in commercial reels. About the same time several individuals opened offices and began handling independent features. Altogether, counting the latter, as well as the General Film Company, there are eleven exchanges doing business in Los Angeles today and only about 100 theaters. The Pacific, the latest to open, handles practically all the features and other multiple reel output of the manufacturers in the Film Supply and Mutual group.

Keen competition which began when the exchanges began to multiply, soon developed into ruthless competition. The General Film Company, of course, has had no competition in licensed products but the cheaper service offered by the independents has coaxed away a considerable number of exhibitors who were its customers. Within the last two weeks five downtown houses have switched from licensed to independent programs, in every case price being the compelling motive.

As always follows when one man cuts the price his competitor has been forced to cut it still lower and by alternate stages in this kind of procedure a point has actually been reached in Los Angeles where it is reported on apparently good authority that some of the theaters are getting service absolutely free. Others are being furnished reels on a percentage basis.

This situation will not last long. With every exchange except the General, which has a certain number of exhibitors who will stand by at almost any cost, the proposition is merely one of how long the bankroll will last. The weaker exchanges will be starved out until the total number of exchanges is automatically reduced to the number the territory will support. At this writing several of the independent exchange men who realize the folly of a disastrous rate war of this kind are trying to get together and effect some kind of a consolidation, by sale, purchase or merger.

At Universal City.

Universal City, the great Oak Crest studio of the Universal company in the San Fernando valley, continues to grow week by week. Three new buildings were completed this week—a fire engine house, a small chapel with stained glass windows set in Gothic frames, and an adobe building which will be used for offices. One cannot always tell by the exterior of the buildings of Universal City what the interiors are used for. Invariably they serve two purposes, not the least important of which to make backgrounds for pictures.

Lincoln J. Carter has completed the first of the series of multiple reel productions which he came to Los Angeles to put on for the Universal company and has begun work on "Bedford's Hope."

There is a widespread impression among unattached photoplay writers that those who are regularly employed by the producing companies to keep them supplied with scripts have a soft thing. James Dayton, of the Universal company, is one of these "fortunate" ones. In the last 26 weeks he has written scripts for 107,000 feet of film and at one stretch turned out 1,000 feet a day for fourteen consecutive days. The necessity for such an unusual record lies in the fact that the Universal company in spite of the announcement offering high prices for available scripts has not been able to buy sufficient satisfactory scripts to keep all its companies busy.

Spring has come in California. The proof is the following poetic description of Oak Crest ranch from the typewriter of Richard Willis, "The whole ranch looks particularly beautiful now with the hills and valleys clothed in a suit of green and the river glistening as it winds amongst the hills that are numerous on the ranch."

The Photoplayers' Ball.

The Photoplayers' St. Valentine ball of Feb. 14, more than realized the most sanguine expectations of the members. As a means of getting the new club favorably into public notice it could not possibly have been more successful. It was attended by the very best people of the city and the impression they carried away was highly flattering to the organization. It is impossible to take the measure of the financial success of the affair at the present time because many of the accounts are still open. The newspapers, which made a big news story of the ball, featuring it with photographs and pen sketches, estimated the crowd at from 5,000 to 7,500. Whatever the size of the crowd was it is certain that the Shrine Auditorium dance floor, the largest in Southern California, was crowded several times during the evening, and, in fact, until the crowd began to leave.

Film Magnates Numerous.

High executive officers of the various big motion picture concerns are beginning to be almost as common as actors in Southern California. Albert E. Smith, treasurer of the Vitagraph company, is here now for an indefinite stay and is living at Santa Monica where the Western studio of his company is located. David Horsley, treasurer of the Universal company, has just returned to New York and Charles O. Baumann, vice-president of the Kaybee-Broncho-Keystone group will start back in a few days. Charles Kessel, of the same company is still here and will remain indefinitely. Samuel Long, president of the Kalem company has just been visiting here and William Selig, head of the Selig Polyscope company is due any day.

News Notes.

The first of the new series of Danish films featuring Nicolai Neiiendam and Frau Berthe Forchammer, of the Royal Theater of Copenhagen, has just been viewed by the local censor board. It was brought by R. Nathanson, who has the Southern California rights for the pictures and will locate here permenantly to handle them. For the time being there will be two pictures every month, all multiple reel features. The actors who appear in the pictures are all famous in Denmark and the two named above had permission from the crown before they could act outside the Royal theater. An interesting detail is that the several night effects are produced by the aid of the midnight sun.

Exchange men of this city and the members of the motion picture censor board after several conferences have finally agreed upon the amount of license which the exchanges shall pay toward reimbursing the city for the expense of regulation. The amount agreed upon is $200 a year for each exchange, but the compromise still has to be ratified by the city council. The council expected to obtain about four times as much revenue and consequently there is some doubt about whether it will agree to the new terms.

Lanier Bartlett, photoplay editor of the Los Angeles branch of the Selig company has just returned from his trip to Panama. He came back by way of New Orleans, Washington, New York and Chicago, stopping at the latter place to visit the Selig factory and studios.

Albert Dorris, traveling representative of the Vitagraph company, stopped in Los Angeles for a few days on a tour of the Pacific Coast and visited Rollin S. Sturgeon, director of the Santa Monica Vitagraph company.

A huge plate glass tank built by the Biograph company for use in a diving comedy burst one day this week just after it had been filled for the first time and just as a scene was about to be taken. The most serious injury was an enforced bath for half a dozen of the actors.

GAR EL HAMA EXCITES RIVALRY.

Considerable rivalry has been stirred up in New England over the Great Northern feature, "Gar El Hama." The Majestic Feature Film Company, of Boston, Mass., owns the rights for New England territory and recently sold the exclusive privilege for New London to the management of the Orpheum Theater of that city. By some chance the Lyceum Theater, of the same town, secured a copy, which it undertook to exhibit. This precipitated litigation. Several conferences were held between the interested parties which resulted in the Lyceum withdrawing from the contest in favor of the Orpheum, where the picture was finally exhibited to good business.

Flickers.

I PRESUME that there are quite a number of people in the film industry who are unacquainted with the original of the accompanying photo. But there is a very good excuse for it, as Mr. Vernon Day believes in staying within his own office from which place he wields the big stick with much effect, and though of a quiet and unassuming manner, his presence is always felt. Much credit is due Mr. Day for the present high standing of the Essanay Film Manufacturing Company, of which he enjoys the distinction of being general manager.

Mr. M. Vernon Day.

If you should happen along the fifth floor corridor of the First National Bank Building, Chicago, any afternoon after five o'clock and make a noise like a billiard ball, you will have Day out after you asking your average. He is quite an enthusiast at the game, and the Western film championship title rests between him and S. Van Ronkel.

Our friend Abe Warner has left us. What's that? Oh no, not for good; he has just gone on a four weeks' business trip, touching at Pittsburg, Pa.; Austin, Tex.; St. Louis, Mo.; and Jacksonville, Fla.

"Big Bill" Steiner blew into town this week after completing one of the fastest trips through the South ever made. While in the territory, Bill played host at a dinner party he had arranged for his company of International Feature Film Players now in Florida, under the direction of Larry McGill.

Messrs. Persins and Kirkland, of the Selig Polyscope Company, are still working their company in Jacksonville, Fla., and we hope to soon have good news from that part of the country.

Harry Lande, proprietor of the Feature Photoplay Company, is advising everybody to wait for about two weeks and he will show them a real feature.

L. J. Rubenstein has them all guessing at his new letterhead and trade mark, "Ruby Combination Films," but claims that in the next week or ten days we'll see the first "combination" and will then be able to judge for ourselves.

A letter from Sam Van Ronkel, proprietor of the American Slide and Poster Co., Chicago, shows us that he is still pleasing the Licensed Exhibitors throughout the country with his many useful and original ideas on "how to advertise the picture," and he can do it too.

Messrs. Hunton-Fell-Elliot Co., New York, formerly distributors only, of current event slides, are now going into the business in earnest, and have laid foundations for a new corporation which, when completed, will make feature films and, to judge from what Mr. Hunton says, they will eclipse anything we have yet seen. If this is to be a reality, we sure have something to look forward to.

I wonder what P. A. Powers has up his sleeve? He won't tell us, neither will he shake his arm. Just says, "wait Mac. There's hardly room for a new tenth movement."

E. B. Hatrick, sponsor for the current event department of the International News Service, acquainted me with the fact that this company is now going to take moving pictures of current events, and release a full reel per week.

The many friends of C. M. Du Bosch, known in the trade as the "Electra" Pink Label Carbon man, will be glad to learn that he is again at his desk, after being confined to his room for two weeks as the result of an accident.

A. G. Whyte, president of the Whyte-Whitman Co., New York, and at one time, universally known as the "Sole Agent," is a bachelor no more. He resigned from our company, fellows, to mix in with the benedicts. The great event happened Washington's Birthday, in a little town in Connecticut. The bride and groom are at present living in New York, but will leave Saturday, March first, on the Cunard liner Mauretania, for a trip abroad, with the hearty congratulations and best wishes of the entire staff of the Moving Picture World.

Sam Warner, traveling representative of Warner's Features, is expected in town within the next few days. Mr. S. Warner will assume control of the New York office while Harry Warner, vice-president of the company visits the New England territory. Upon his return, Sam Warner will leave these shores for an indefinite business trip in Europe.

According to Ed. Barry, Sales Manager of the Ambrosio American Film Co., the general public are exhibiting great interest in the Devil. Instead of repeating the old verse, "Get thee behind me Satan," they are offering all kinds of money for an opportunity of having him appear before them. (no adv.). MAC.

SHOW SAFETY DEVICES FOR WORKERS.

An important educational release is a forthcoming one in the Thanhouser program entitled "An American in the Making," which shows how the life of a worker in the great steel plants is protected. Safety devices costing millions of dollars to install and operate are shown, in interesting connection with the chief character's job in the steel works, which are those of the United States Steel Corporation, who were very quick to grant the necessary permission and most courteous in their treatment of the producing company sent "on the picture." The devices in the works at Gary, Ind., and Lorain, Ohio, were filmed—meaning two thousand miles of travel from New Rochelle for a single educational motion picture! Thanhouser wish to also extend their thanks to the National Association of Manufacturers, who aided the film company in its arrangements to secure the life-saving devices for the camera.

"THE DISCOVERY" (Essanay).

A comical story told in a comical way is depicted in the hilarious feature, entitled "The Discovery." Rarely have we seen Howard Missimer, Francis X. Bushman and Mildred Weston to better advantage.

Mr. I. M. Monion falls in love with his stenographer, Maud Mueller, and proposes to her. The pretty young girl informs her employer that she will give her answer when she returns from her vacation. At the summer resort Miss Mueller meets Mr. Monion's son. The two are constantly together. Finally, young Monion proposes to Maud and is accepted. They are about to be married by the justice of peace, when the latter informs them that he cannot perform the ceremony unless Miss Mueller produces a birth certificate. Returning to the hotel, Monion receives a telegram from his father, requesting him to return to the city immediately, as business matters demand his attention. Monion returns to the city. That same afternoon Miss Mueller is struck by an automobile, and rendered unconscious. A doctor is summoned, who identifies her. A few weeks later Miss Mueller, now fully recovered from her accident, returns to the city, where, upon entering her employer's office, she is greeted lovingly by Mr. Monion and his son. I. M. Monion requests the young beauty to give him her answer. He produces an engagement ring, as does the son. Both are overwhelmed when informed by Maud that she cannot marry either of them, because she has discovered that her name is not Maud Mueller, but Maud Mueller Monion, her employer's daughter. Sad at the loss of a charming wife, but happy in the discovery of their lost one, they welcome her into their hearts and home.

Scene from "The Discovery" (Essanay).

Howard Missimer as a comedian of exceptional ability plays the role of I. M. Monion in his ever pleasing and interesting manner.

"OUTWITTED" (Great Northern).

In "Outwitted," a Great Northern comedy and romance, are cleverly blended. The leading role is played by Miss Elsie Frolich, who has made a favorable impression since joining the dramatic forces of this company. The plot is built for laughter principally, but it is not of the clownish sort and carries conviction in every scene. The story of a young widow who is being besieged by three ardent admirers because of her charms, and incidentally because she is known to be possessed of a considerable fortune, leads to many humorous complications. All the while, the young woman is in love with her young son's tutor and the affection is reciprocated. In the interim a young heiress appears upon the scene as the guest of the widow and immediately upon her arrival the latter causes the rumor to be spread that her fortune has been lost through the failure of a bank. Immediately the three ardent suitors transfer their affections to the newly arrived heiress and the humorous complications increase. In the end, however, Dr. Kelart, the tutor, proposes for the hand of the widow, still believing that her fortune has been lost, and she accepts him. The heiress in the meantime becomes engaged to Arthur, a cousin of the widow and when the engagement is announced, the three admirers retire gracefully after extending congratulations. The comedy is capitally acted and staged.

RYNO TO RELEASE THROUGH FILM SUPPLY.

Arrangements have been completed whereby, beginning about Monday, March 17th, Ryno films are to be released as part of the program of the Film Supply Company of America. The Film Supply Company has undoubtedly made a most valuable addition to its program of offerings. Ryno films are the product of men long experienced in the motion picture industry and promise to set an enviable reputation for themselves. Mr. John Noble and C. V. Ryttenberg constitute the firm. The concern is working amid exceptional locations and surroundings at City Island.

At the beginning Ryno will release one 1,000-foot subject each week and will at an early date increase to two each week.

"HIS CHILDREN" (Lubin).

This picture is a wonderful lesson to the man who misunderstands the true character of women. It may not be discovered until opportunity offers, but the maternal love is there, and no woman is without it. The tale is nicely told and the production is a beautiful example of Barry O'Neil's excellent cast and production. It is typically a Lubin story and one of the many that has been recognized in the policy of Siegmund Lubin's films.

Dr. Harry Matthews is left a widower with two children, Marie, aged 15, and Jimmie, aged 6. He falls in love with Ethel Wynn, one of his patients, whom he finds objects to children, so he sends them to their aunt in the country and keeps the fact a secret. Matthews gets married and finds that his new wife is addicted to extravagance and fond of society. He tells the children that they must stay with their aunty for a while and they are heart-broken. The boy gets disconsolate and Marie resolves to take him to the father's city home. They arrive and the stiff butler permits them to wait, as Matthews and his wife have gone to a society function. They fall asleep behind a screen. Matthews at the ball receives news that his money in stocks has been wiped out. He rushes home and is on the point of committing suicide when Ethel follows. They discover the children. Ethel's heart is touched and she embraces them. The husband then realizes that he has not only a wife, but a mother and begins life anew.

Scene from "His Children" (Lubin).

ANIMATED MAP OF PANAMA.

The "Animated Map," which shows in moving pictures the history of Turkish conquest of Europe for five centuries in as many minutes, and has been such a dramatic as well as educational adjunct to the Kinemacolor Balkan War scenes at the Carnegie Lyceum, is to be supplemented by an equally interesting and instructive map of the working Panama Canal.

This shows a broad view of the Western continent—from the standpoint of an observer on the planet Mars, for instance —with the great artificial waterway which has separated North and South America slightly enlarged for pictorial purposes. On this map are traced the great ocean lanes of traffic between the principal ports of the world, illustrating how the Panama Canal will curtail both the time and expense of travel between them.

Right here is where the "moving" part of the picture comes in to "point the moral and adorn the tale"; for instead of measuring off these relative distances in dry figures and statistics, the spectator is shown two ships starting simultaneously from New York for San Francisco. The one that goes by the Canal route is docked and unloaded before the other, following the old ocean course, has fairly rounded Cape Horn. Likewise, ships from New York to Yokohoma, or even Valparaiso on the coast of South America, arrive much quicker by the Canal than by the all-ocean route.

This map was made in England, after careful measurements of actual distances according to the British hydrography charts and comparison of relative speeds of steamships according to the drift of currents and the prevalence of head winds. The especial interest which the English take in our Canal is illustrated by the ships sailing from London for Pacific and oriental ports—those going via Panama always arriving far ahead of sea-going rivals.

Especially interesting to children and others who never saw the working of a canal is the profile view of the great Gatun Dam, showing how a steamship is taken through the locks—being lifted from one water level to another by the four greatest hydraulic elevators in the world. Taken in connection with the natural color views of the making of the Panama Canal, this "sailing map" is as instructive and entertaining as an actual trip to the Isthmus, where the Kinemacolor spectator witnesses many moving scenes which will never be visible again after the water is turned on. The new map will be on view at the Carnegie Lyceum every afternoon and evening, beginning with next Monday matinee.

FRANCIS X. BUSHMAN FILLING DATES.

Francis X. Bushman, until recently the leading man of the Essanay Eastern company, writes us from Pittsburg, where he is filling engagements, lecturing on pictures in which he appears. He states that he is meeting with tremendous success and is breaking house records wherever he goes, both for money and attendance. He is at present playing the Cameraphone Theater circuit in the Pittsburg territory, in which vicinity he will be until the middle of March. For the latter part of March and all of April, Mr. Bushman has lecture engagements in Arkansas, Louisiana, Mississippi, Tennessee, Alabama, Georgia and Florida. Exhibitors who desire to have him appear in their houses may address him in care of the Screen Club, 165 West 45th Street, New York City.

MEXICAN WAR PICTURE.

A representative of the Angelus Film Company and assistant general manager of the California Film Corporation has been successful in photographing some of the actual scenes of strife now prevalent in Mexico. About three thousand feet of excellent negative has been taken. Permission was gained for cameramen to work among the soldiers of both sides and some faithful reproductions of actual battle scenes have been secured. These pictures are now in the course of printing, and it is believed the great interest that is now being taken in the conflict will make a quick market for the pictures. The film will be released to State buyers at an early date.

SPECIAL POSTERS FOR VITAGRAPH SPECIALS.

The Vitagraph Company announces that all its special two and three-part subjects, beginning with "The Strength of Men," to be released on Wednesday, March 19th, will be provided with six-sheet, four-color posters. No pains will be spared by the Vitagraph Company in making these posters the finest of their kind.

THE PHOTOGRAPH AND THE BLOTTER (Mar. 1).—Two boys working for Messrs. Brown & Company, contractors, are in love with their employer's daughter, Elsie. At a small reception given by the Browns the favored boy, Jack, proposes and is accepted. The proposal is overheard by Harry, the jealous suitor who, being annoyed at the treatment he has received, has retired to the conversatory for a quiet smoke.

The young couple run to tell their folks of the engagement, all the guests having gone with the exception of Harry's sister. The Browns, having long suspected the love between the two receive the news gladly.

Brown deides to promote the boys; one, his son-in-law-to-be, to a confidential position and the other to the position formerly held by Jack. This is the last straw; Harry plans to outdo his rival or get him into some trouble. Listening at the private office door he learns of special plans which are under preparation for a certain contract and about which no one with the exception of Jack and Brown know. He decides to get the plans and forward them to another contracting firm, thereby giving them a chance to underbid on the same plans.

At night he enters the private office taking a flash light picture of the plans. This he takes home to develop. He sends the photographs to C. J. Cole & Company with an anonymous letter. Brown upon hearing from them becomes suspicious of Jack having been careless in showing the plans. Words follow and he is discharged.

Elsie goes to Harry's home with his sister, Helen. While there through some writing on a blotter, she discovers the photograph of the plans and with it later proves her lover's innocence.

CURIOUS SCENES IN INDIA (Mar. 3).—The picture shows queer looking "Pilgrims" in their fantastic dress and rites. A solemn religious ceremony in which the immense "Temple Elephant" is taken into the temple to receive his gorgeous trappings for the annual parade at Kandy is also shown in a close view as it passes through the narrow crooked streets. We also see domesticated elephants of enormous size performing tasks requiring in addition to their enormous strength a higher degree of intelligence than has ever been attained by any other animal. In addition to the many other wonders of this picture we have a close view of wild elephants being captured and tethered to trees, putting forth tremendous efforts to break their bonds.

SUPERSTITIOUS JOE (Mar. 8).—Our friend Joe is afraid to stand under open umbrellas in the house, go under ladders, etc., and when he tries to evade these various superstitions he finds himself in trouble, whereas if he had pursued the even tenor of his way, nothing would have happened. The story deals with two rival real estate brokers who try to sell a site to a new automobile concern. A young lady is admired by both of them. Her father says she can only become the wife of the man who is most successful in his line of business. Consequently Joe doubles his efforts to make the sale as it means a great deal in the real estate line. Through his superstition he almost loses it, but a telephone call from the young lady gives him a tip whereby he makes the sale and wins the girl.

ANN (Mar. 4).—Ann McDonald is the only child of stern orthodox and straight-laced parents. Their love for her is obscured by rigidity of training. Sunday is made a day of torture for her. Her father loved his Bible and the mottoes on his parlor wall read, "Love one another" and "God is love," but in daily life he gave none of that essence to his child. Ann in desperation runs away, leaving a pathetic letter saying that their cruelty has driven her away.

She goes to the city and there encounters that essence she failed to receive at home. That love was shown by her landlady, Viola Montague, a former burlesque queen who saw in Ann an innocence like unto her own in her girlish days. She resolved to protect her.

Ann's father goes to the city in search of her and finally sees her enter a casino. He follows her and demands that she return home. She denies him as her father and he returns home crushed. Ann is taken away by the landlady, who paints things to her as they really are and then takes her home.

In the last scene we see the father reading the Bible. His eyes fall on the text "He that troubleth his own house shall inherit the wind," and when Ann enters the room she steals into his waiting arms, he at last realizing that he is at fault. A happier future is promised her.

A LETTER TO UNCLE SAM (Mar. 5).—Uncle Sam's heavy target practice of a near-by fort jars little seven year old Marion's doll from the table in the nursery, shattering it on the floor. The Child is heart-broken at her dolly's fate and at a loss to understand the cause of it until the nurse, to pacify her, explains that the firing of Uncle Sam's guns at the fort jarred the dolly off the table. Upon learning this little Marion becomes indignant and decides to write a letter to Uncle Sam complaining about the damage. To humor her the nurse good naturedly aids her in carrying out her desire and the letter is mailed.

At Washington, D. C., Marion's letter to Uncle Sam is opened in the postmaster general's office and turned over to the War Department where it receives immediate attention. Orders are issued to the commanding officer at the fort to investigate the damage and make such compensation and apologies as may be deemed proper.

A committee of two young officers is appointed at the fort and they proceed with due ceremony to investigate the damage claim. At Marion's home they are surprised to find the claimant to be a pretty little child. They consider the matter gravely and while there are presented to Marion's sisters, two most attractive young women.

The young officers lose their hearts to the girls and report progress to their commanding officer. Secretly they each buy a huge doll and repair to Marion's home to present it to her. Again they meet the young ladies who receive them most graciously.

Little Marion is quite happy with her two unexpected new dollies, while her older sisters seem equally happy with their unexpected sweethearts; the result of a jar.

THE LOST DEED (Mar. 7).—We see the old home with the grandfather sitting on the porch waiting for his granddaughter, -Betty. They go into the library and the old man comments on the great likeness which she bears to her grandmother whose oil painting rests on an easel. Then are introduced two suitors, one favored and one disliked. The latter realizes he is not cared for and plots to win her at any cost.

The grandfather in his attempt to raise money is discussing the matter at the club with his lawyer when he is overheard by the rejected suitor. Here is the long looked for opening; the deed lost and the title not clear, he will loan him the money on the condition that Betty become his wife.

When the matter is explained to Betty she strongly objects and the grandfather is at a loss what to do. They finally decide on a thorough search of the whole house. In the search she goes to the attic and in an old hair cloth trunk she discovers the same dress as worn by her grandmother in the old painting. This she puts on and runs to show herself to the grandfather. In the meantime the picture had been removed by an artist to be retouched and only the frame is left. Hearing someone coming, she steps into the frame, posing as did her grandmother, and listens to the rejected suitor trying to force the old man to terms.

The poor old man turns to the picture for thought and thinks he has a warning when he sees Betty raise her hand. He begs for more time. When this is granted Betty comes out of the frame much to the surprise of the two men and her lover who appears on the scene.

In bowing to them she feels the long lost deed in the pocket of the old dress and at once conditions are straightened. The deed being found, Betty is able to marry the man she loves.

THE PRIEST AND THE MAN (Mar. 8).—Sir Gilbert Parker touches the great woods of Canada, with his magic wand and fairly peoples them with strong, virile men and women.

This story tells the life of a strong, hardy trapper who has wooed and won a French Canadian girl, a devoted daughter of her faith who holds everything sacred that pertains in any way to the symbols of her church. Years pass by and a child is granted them, a boy who has reached the age of eight, a strong manly little fellow.

But one night the trapper comes home from a nerve-racking day in the woods and discovers his wife and little boy at prayer before a little altar that is built into the walls of the log cabin. As a cause for their devotion he discovers that the mother has been frightened by the sight of an Indian chief who has been following her through the woods. This arouses the father's anger as he has more faith in the virtue of a gun than in prayer, and he makes fun of her devotion and faith. Hot words are spoken, a quarrel ensues and the mother leaves the house. Night comes and she does not return.

Then a new awe creeps into the soul of the man and he goes out to find her, stumbling along in his frightened anxiety. The boy returns from the search wounded by a wild animal and when the man finds his son torn and bleeding he realizes the great need of a woman's hand. In the meanwhile we are shown how the wife has been captured by savages and is on her way to the Indian village. It is here her friend, the priest, finds her and tries to buy her back from them. But food, blankets, powder and guns are of no avail, five kegs of rum is the price that must be paid.

The priest knows it is against the laws of his church and of the land to sell rum to the Indians. But the life of a woman is at stake; he agrees to the bargain and brings her home. The wounded boy is near death's door and the father realizes for the first time the strength of the solace that comes from above; and when the priest enters the cabin, he finds the mocker and scoffer on his knees before the little altar.

After the reunion of man and wife, the tender care of the woman for the boy causes the "going of the White Swan," a phrase used in the Canadian woods to indicate the departure of death from a door, and a strong man of the north woods has been brought to the feet of his Maker by the hands of fate.

BEES AND HONEY (Mar. 10).—In this picture we see the bee from many different angles. We see the nectar gathered from the flowers, the method of carrying it to the hives, storing it in the numberless cells of the comb, sealing the cells, and finally how the finished product is removed from the comb and strained into jars ready for the table. We see the methods of the Queen Bee in laying and hatching the eggs—about three thousand per day.

In every colony or hive there are two classes of bees, besides the "queen," "workers" and "drones." The "workers" are just what is implied by the name. They gather the honey and pollen from the flowers and blossoms, carry it to the hive, fill the cells, feed the "queen" and young bees and, in short, provide a living for the "family." The "drones" are entirely useless. When food is getting scarce the "workers" turn on these useless members and sting them to death and drag them out of the hive.

IT WASN'T POISON AFTER ALL (Mar. 10).—A mischievous little boy employed in a drug store, resents the clerk's domineering manner and vows he'll be revenged. His opportunity comes when the drug clerk compounds a cough remedy. As soon as the clerk has filled the prescription and the customer has departed with the medicine the boy exchanges a bottle containing syrup for one marked poison and then deliberately accuses the clerk of having poisoned someone.

The druggist overhears the accusation and after a hasty investigation concludes his clerk is guilty of an awful mistake. The druggist, feeling the responsibility of it all, berates the clerk in loud tones, attracting a crowd of curious people. Great excitement prevails, the clerk is arrested and the customer, described as a man with a basket who bought the supposed poison, is eagerly sought for in all directions. The druggist is seen to run up one street and down another, accosting every man who carries a basket, but in each case he "gets in wrong," for it proves to be the wrong man. He is on the point of giving up the search when he espies a man with a man with a basket entering a house who answers the clerk's description of the customer. He makes a wild dash for the house but not in time to prevent the patient from taking several doses of the "poison."

Consternation now reigns in the sick man's house and a mad rush is made for the nearest doctor. In the doctor's office the excitement runs high, but the doctor fails to discover any symptoms of poisoning and suggests they go to the drug store to make a thorough investigation.

Arriving at the drug store the mischievous boy becomes frightened at the state of affairs and confesses that he is the cause of the disturbance and it wasn't poison after all. The collapsed sick man immediately regains his equilibrium. The crowd laughs and the chagrined druggist gives the boy "what Paddy gave the drum."

JAN VEDDER'S DAUGHTER (Mar. 11).—Good old Jan Vedder has set his mind on having for a son-in-law, the good-for-nothing Nick, the town lounger. The fancy Vedder has taken for Nick cannot be overcome by his daughter, Katrina, and the minute she shows signs of caring for an English officer he becomes more determined than ever that she shall marry Nick.

First we see Nick calling on old Vedder and when Katrina enters the room, he tries to kiss her. For this he receives a sound slap and Katrina rushes from the room in anger. On her return, Jan and Nick having gone out, her anger soon turns to smiles as she sees her British sweetheart, through the window, coming to make an afternoon call. So intent is their love making that they do not hear Vedder return. Seeing the much hated British cap, he not only throws it out of the door, but orders the lover from the house.

A few evenings later after Nick has been to call on the old man, Vedder enters his house to behold his daughter waving to the officer. The old Dutchman is completely upset and getting the blunderbuss he fires; but his aim is bad and the Britisher, who had anticipated his act, had hidden in the bushes and was in no way injured. The father decides that Katrina must marry at once; Nick is notified and the time is set.

The officer learning of the coming wedding is at a loss what to do, but "love finds a way." He goes to a tavern for his ale and there discovers the bridegroom in an awful state of intoxication, asleep. With a little more ale he induces him to change clothes with him and all looks better. At the pastor's he is mistaken for Nick by the near-sighted Vedder and the wedding proceeds. All goes well until Nick appears on the scene accompanied by an officer who has arrested him for his drunken condition while wearing the British uniform. When Vedder sees the real situation he goes into an awful temper, but finally realizes it is all for the best and the couple is forgiven.

A MODERN HORSE (Mar. 12).—The task of removing tree stumps and undergrowth of all kinds from the land which is to be occupied by the immense Ashokan Reservoir is of such magnitude that it can not be realized or imagined by the average person in the every day walks of life.

For the speedy and efficient accomplishment of this work the contractors have brought to their aid some of the most modern and interesting traction engines obtainable, and in this picture we show one of these monster machines in some remarkable feats. The engine carries its own tracks in the form of an endless chain attached to the wheels which enables it to travel over any kind of ground whether hilly, sandy or marshy, with the utmost ease. The tree stumps, etc., to be removed are attached to the engine by a long steel wire cable and when the engine is started we see them literally dragged out by the roots.

We also see the machine used for plowing, drawing from twelve to eighteen plows at one time and turning immense furrows which would require the use of forty to fifty horses and fifteen to twenty men to accomplish the same work.

A close view shows the machine in the details of its construction and how it is loaded for transportation by its own power, crossing an open space of three feet between railroad platform and flat car.

AUNT ELSA'S VISIT (Mar. 12).—In the Moore family Aunt Elsa, the old maid sister of Mr. Moore, writes she is going to pay them a visit. The Moores are without a cook and the day the aunt is to arrive there is a party on hand. The house is at sixes and sevens.

Bobby, the twelve years old boy, much to his disgust is commissioned to meet her at the railway station. His father gives him a dollar and a half for lunches and carfare and his mother and sisters tell him to keep aunty out all day.

Aunt Elsa is met by her young nephew and his eyes are opened in astonishment for he does not find her a typical old maid aunt, but a middle-aged woman full of life and spirit. She refuses to ride in street cars and calls a taxi. She gives Bobby the time of his life, and upon reaching home, impersonates the new cook.

A YOUTHFUL KNIGHT (Mar. 14).—Tom is a boisterous boy who brings his playground manners into his mother's parlor. His mother knowing that he is a gentleman at heart, tries to improve his behavior generally, more by suggestion and example than by reproving him and her efforts eventually meet with success. She reads to him of the Knights of the Round Table, of Sir Galahad and the Holy Grail, and fills him with an idea of chivalry, gallantry and courtesy. She buys him a suit of toy armor and a sword and draws up rules of truth and honor for him to sign.

The boy filled with enthusiasm selects for his special favors a little, spoiled girl who does not understand. Of all acts of gallantry, one of Sir Walter Raleigh appeals most to him. He takes advantage of an opportunity and spreads his coat for Ethel to tread upon. She laughs at him, stamps upon the coat and makes faces at him. Later he is very much discouraged and although he rescues her from the consequences of her own fault she denounces him as being the one to blame.

He is in disgrace and his armor and his knighthood are taken away from him. All that his mother has told him of the reward for strict rectitude must be true because it was his mother who told him, but his faith has received a severe shock and is in danger of being lost altogether; but the spoiled girl in her childish way begins to understand and she decides to tell the truth.

Tom gets back his honors and his knighthood and the seed so lovingly and carefully sown by the mother begins to take root and gives promise of bearing fruit. At the close of the story one has a complete belief that this boy and girl will grow into a noble man and woman helping others by their example.

THE GAUNTLETS OF WASHINGTON (Mar. 15).—In the year 1830 a poor old wayfarer wandered into a village. He was a man well on to seventy; his tattered clothing was vaguely reminiscent of the Revolution; he carried an old battered drum which he was beating with martial rhythm hoping to obtain alms.

The villagers jeered and laughed him to scorn. The squire of the village, who happened to be passing, ordered the tavern keeper to drive the old man away. The squire himself, an old man, was very much feared by the villagers who mocked and taunted the poor wanderer until he was almost reduced to tears. They left him alone in the street. He made a few steps forward with the idea of leaving the village when suddenly a new expression came into his wrinkled face, his figure became erect and with a firm step, surprising in so old a man, he followed his persecutors into the tavern and commenced to tell them a story. Shaking with emotion he drew from his breast an old military gauntlet—"See" he cried, "This belonged to George Washington. He gave it to me and the other to my friend, young farmer Curtis. I saw the General and two aides coming towards the farm. I called Widow Curtis, who came out in a fluster to receive him. He asked if he could rest there for a few hours. Hodges led away the horses. Hodges was mean—I suspected him. He hitched the horses and ran through the pasture and over the fence. I called young Curtis and we ran too. I told him about the General as we ran. 'What's Hodges running for and why are we following him?' he asked. 'I don't know,' I said, 'but it's mischief—don't let him see us.' We followed for three miles and it is well we did. He came to the old mill and some Hessians gathered around him. They were all excited. Hodges pointed towards the farm—we knew the traitor was telling the Hessians how they could take General Washington. We ran back—told the General—took down old Curtis' drum and fife and musket that hung in the kitchen and ran to the barn just as the Hessians came to the house. I shot one of them. Curtis played the fife. I dropped the musket and beat the drum and yelled and shouted and those Hessians ran like rabbits. They thought the whole American army was after them. General Washington gave each of us a gauntlet and here is the one he gave me."

The squire had entered during the story and like the villagers stood in silence. The old man had worn himself out. The squire gently offering his arm for support said, "Come home with me, old friend, I am Curtis, I shall show you the other gauntlet."

ESSANAY.

A BOTTLE OF MUSK (Mar. 11).—Dean Warner accuses his daughter's sweetheart of stealing some money from the safe. He is about to engage the services of a detective to discover the real thief. However, when his daughter enters his private office and tells him that it would involve a scandal in the university to do such a thing, that she will undertake the job of locating the robber. Ruth, the daughter, takes a bottle of musk from her dresser, opens the safe and puts a little on each and every bill. Sometime later Mr. Warner's secretary, Frank Maycliffe, is discovered with a few of the scented bills on his person. He is taken to headquarters. Ruth's sweetheart, Walter Driscall, is exonerated.

THE MISJUDGING OF MR. HUBBY (Mar. 12).—Mr. Gaylor is accused by his wife of flirting. Mrs. Gaylor more than accuses her husband when she discovers a pair of lady's kid gloves in her husband's pocket. Innocent Mr. Gaylor had found the gloves on the sidewalk. Gaylor informs his wife that he has work to do at the office that evening, and leaves the house. Mrs. Gaylor engages the services of a detective to determine whether or not Mr. Gaylor is keeping company with a woman. The comedy situations that arise from both Mr. and Mrs. Gaylor engaging the services of detectives, brings about many laughable moments. Things are finally straightened out to the satisfaction of everybody.

OLD GORMAN'S GAL (Mar. 13).—Dorothy Gorman is made the target for her father's selfishness, and inhuman brutality. Dirgusted with life in general, she decides to marry a man with money. Her old sweetheart Tom Jordan, pleads with her to marry him, but is told that she would be as bad off as she is now as far as luxuries were concerned if she married him. That afternoon a stranger arrives at Gorman's home and entices Dorothy. He tells the innocent young girl of the West of the bright lights and the good times she can have when they arrive in the East. Their pleasure trip comes to an end rather abruptly when their run-about is struck by a passing mail train. The stranger is killed instantly. Some months later, Tom Jordan receives a splendid situation as the foreman of a large ranch. On the front porch of his magnificent home we see Dorothy embraced in the strong and manly arms of her loving husband, Tom.

AN OLD, OLD SONG (Mar. 14).—John Wright, a wealthy lawyer, refuses to consent to the marriage of his daughter Alice to Henry Searck. Further, he emphatically tells his daughter to leave his home. A few years later, her husband now dead, she makes a living for herself and young daughter by sewing. The daughter Ruth, a child of twelve, wins a musical contest at school and is awarded with a check for a thousand dollars. One of the judges, taking a liking to Ruth, escorts her to her home where he meets her mother. He is overjoyed at discovering that Ruth's mother is his daughter Alice.

BRONCHO BILLY AND THE STEP-SISTERS (Mar. 15).—Broncho Billy is in love with Agnes Shephard. The jealousy of the step-sister Evelyn arouses in her a scheme which, if carried out, would result in the breaking of the engagement. Her idea is carried out to the letter when Agnes arrives at Broncho Billy's office and discovers Evelyn with her arms around Broncho Billy. Agnes returns the engagement ring to Broncho Billy and leaves him. A few days later Broncho Billy is injured by an enemy. Fearing he will die Evelyn confesses to Agnes her underhand method of trying to make Broncho Billy love her, Agnes rushes to Broncho Billy's bedside, kisses him fondly—and he dies in her arms

ECLIPSE.

SHYLOCK (Special, 2 reels) (Mar. 3).—Bassanio meets his friend, Antonio, a merchant of wealth and influence in Venice and tells him of his love for Portia, a rich heiress dwelling in Belmont. Bassanio wishes to woo the beautiful lady, but is without means and requests Antonio to lend him the required sum. The latter, whose fortunes are invested in cargoes upon the high seas, regrets that he is unable to assist him, but offers to stand security for Bassanio with the money-lenders on the Rialto.

The two friends then go to the house of Shylock, a Jew of great wealth, and make known their wants. Shylock is unwilling at first, because he knows of Antonio's uncertain ventures, but finally agrees to advance three thousand ducats for three months, on condition that Antonio sign a bond stating that if the money is not paid when due, the lender is entitled to cut a pound of flesh off Antonio's breast.

Bassanio then visits Belmont, but must wait his turn while other suitors pay their respects. According to her father's will, Portia must be won in the following manner:

Each suitor is to make his choice of one of three caskets; one made of gold, another of silver, and the other of lead. He that selects the one containing her portrait is to be rewarded with her hand in marriage.

Two haughty suitors, the Prince of Morocco and the Prince of Aragon, select the gold and silver caskets in turn, and are unsuccessful. Bassanio wisely chooses the leaden casket, which proves to be the one containing her portrait. His gallant bearing has already won Portia's heart, and not long afterwards, their nuptial rites are solemnized. The celebration is hardly finished, however, when Bassanio receives a letter from Antonio stating that his ships have been lost at sea, and the bond declared forfeited. Bassanio straightway hastens to Venice, where he is just in time to attend the trial of his friend and hear the plea of the Jew, who scorns the offer of repayment and cruelly demands his pound of flesh.

As the trial proceeds, the case appears to be going against Antonio until the appearance of a young lawyer named Balthasar, who has been sent as a substitute to defend the unfortunate merchant. When Shylock is about to have his due, Balthasar points out that if in the cutting of it he shed one drop of blood, all his properties will be confiscated according to the law of Venice. Infuriated, Shylock is obliged to renounce his inhuman claim.

Later, Bassanio and Antonio discover to their great surprise and delight that their unknown deliverer has been no other than Portia herself in disguise.

THE WAGES OF TRANSGRESSION (Mar. 5).—In response to an urgent request from his friend Adams, Charles Palmer lends him a large sum of money, secretly hoping thus to win the respect of the charming Mrs. Adams, whom he greatly admires. At first his attentions are only slightly regarded, but as he becomes more insistent she vigorously repulses him. At a sumptuous dinner party given in his honer, Palmer is most devoted to Mrs. Adams. During the evening he tries to get her to accept a note from him, and when she refuses he sneaks to her dressing room and slips the message into her glove.

Before the evening is over little Dolly Adams, who has been put to bed early, decides to join the party, and arraying herself in her mother's dress, hat and gloves, enters the room, calling forth a flood of laughter from the guests as she struts about in their midst.

Taking the child in his arms, her father discovers the note in his wife's glove and with great astonishment reads the message from Palmer threatening her happiness unless she returns his affection. Immediately he calls the false friend into an adjoining room and a struggle ensues in which the latter pays for his transgression with his life.

POTTERY MAKING IN DORSET, ENGLAND (Mar. 5).—An interesting and instructive visit to the potteries in Verwood. We are shown the treading of the clay, the potter's wheel at work, the kilns where the crockery is dried. A collection of beautiful vessels exquisitely moulded, concludes the subject.

THE LOST WAGER (Mar. 12).—The wealthy Count Lester becomes dissatisfied with the luxury and ease of his every day life. To create a little excitement at his club he makes a wager of $10,000 with his friend Ferris, that he can live a month as a roustabout without spending a penny that he does not earn. Dressed in his old clothes, the count goes upon the street and eagerly accepts the odd jobs that are offered, such as carrying trunks, unloading coal and selling newspapers.

On the last evening of his allotted time he goes to spend the night at the municipal lodging house, but who should he meet there but his old friend Ferris? When the latter, explaining that he is down and out, appeals for aid, Count Lester gladly hands him a check for $1,000. Ferris, who has been deceiving, immediately claims that the count has lost the bet, for he has spent money that he did not earn.

The two men return to the club where the count is forced to confess that he has lost the bet, but complacently announces that he has gained some things more valuable to him—health and happiness.

PICTURESQUE SPALATO, DALMATIA. (Mar. 12).—We are taken on an interesting trip along the coast of Dalmatia from the Isle of Bua to the town of Spalato. A magnificent sunset on the Adriatic concludes the subject.

CINES.

HIS GRANDCHILD (Mar. 11).—The Captain and Colonel have been life-long comrades, until a dispute over a game of chess disrupts their friendship, an incident that proves rather serious to the Colonel's son, for he is in love with the Captain's daughter. But love is indomitable. The young couple are secretly married, but when they seek for his father's approval, he refuses and even disowns his daughter.

Several years later, while sitting by the fireside with memories of the past still haunting his mind, the Captain is very much surprised to receive a letter from his little grandson, wishing him a happy birthday. He shows the letter to the old housekeeper, who secretly sends the young people an invitation to a birthday dinner. The next day, the child, acompanied by his parents, appears at the appointed hour. The father and mother stand hesitatingly at the door while the little fellow boldly approaches the old man, exclaiming, "Hello, Grandpa, we have come to your birthday party." Although angry at first, the simple innocence of the child goes straight to his stony old heart. He takes his little grandson in his arms and when the parents approach, welcomes all three of them in one big embrace.

THE IDEAL OF HER DREAMS (Mar. 8).—Elsie is a charming and somewhat romantic young girl, blessed with a devoted sweetheart and an affectionate mother. One day while out walking, she happens to find a photograph of a handsome young captain with whom she immediately imagines herself to be in love. All day and night she dreams of her ideal, and her infatuation soon leads to a complete estrangement from Fred Foster, her sweetheart, who has been her true friend for years, much to the despair of her solicitous mother.

One day she shows the picture to an old friend of the family, who exclaims that he knows the Captain and will gladly introduce her. They proceed to a large mansion not far away and are ushered into a pretty arbor while a young lady goes to call the Captain. An old gray-haired gentleman soon joins them, and upon examining the photograph eagerly exclaims: "Yes, that is my picture all right, only it was taken forty years ago." Elsie is so confused and disappointed that she departs without a word and rushes home to ease her heart in a flood of tears. She is now only too glad to make up with her sweetheart, who has remained steadfast to her through all her fickleness.

SCENES IN MONSONE (North Africa).—Mar. 8.—After witnessing marvelous views of the sea dashing upon the rocky coast, we are shown the glaring white buildings of the government and religious institutions, the mud huts of the inhabitants and many glimpses into the picturesque native life and customs.

VITAGRAPH.

RED AND WHITE ROSES (2 parts—Special—Mar. 10).—PART ONE.—Everyehing points favorably to the election of Morgan Andrews, when he is nominated for governor. He is engaged to an ideal woman, whose social standing, political interests and marvelous tact, will help him reach the goal of his ambition. She is noted for her generosity and idolized for her philanthropy. His private and public affairs are looked after by his private secretary, Ralph Clark, a handsome fellow, whose engaging manners and ability are a material aid to Morgan Andrews' popularity.

Martin Murray, the leader of the opposition party, knows that Andrews largely depends upon his social position in winning the election and to offset this, he induces his sister, Lida de Jeanne, a famous actress, to enter into a plot, feeling certain she will bring Andrews, as she has brought other men, to her feet. The introduction being accomplished through Jack Niles, Murray's henchman and companion, the conquest starts in earnest. Lida throws herself heart and soul into it and Andrews readily becomes an admirer and adorer of the fascinating woman. He pays court to her and to express his appreciation of her warmth and amour, sends her a bouquet of red roses. Everything seems to be favorable to Murray's plans. Beth Whitney lives in the same apartment hotel as Lida; their rooms being directly across the court from each other. Andrews favors Miss Whitney with white roses, whenever he visits her, indicative of purity and sincerity. While visiting Miss Whitney, he sees Lida at the window of her apartment opposite, and irresistibly, he is led to look upon her in all her radiant beauty. A page enters and hands him a letter from Lida, telling him that she has news of interest to him in his coming campaign, and requesting him to see her immediately. In opening the letter, he drops the envelope. He excuses himself to Miss Whitney, pleading campaign business that will oblige him to leave at once. After he is gone, his fiancee picks up the envelope and discovers that the handwriting is a woman's.

After visiting the adventuress, he returns to Miss Whitney's apartment and her suspicions having been aroused, she suspects the cause, for she did not fail to notice with a woman's keen intuition, his actions at the window during his previous call. She tells him frankly that she will break her engagement with him. He imploringly tells her that the breaking of their engagement will mean the ruin of his career. He leaves, and later, she writes, saying, "Since the success of your career means so much, I will remain engaged to you until after election."

Lida reports her progress to her brother, Martin Murray, who, being impatient, asks her why she doesn't bring it to an issue. Lida has grown fond of Andrews and will not now sacrifice his career by carrying out her brother's wishes and make herself party to the ruination of the man whom she now loves.

PART TWO.—Tired of waiting for his sister to act, Murray, wishing to strike the final blow, tells the newspaper reporters that Andrews has jilted his fiancee for an actress. The news spreads like wildfire and causes panic among Andrews' supporters. Andrews, who has just returned from a campaign tour, reads the news and is completely taken off his guard. He unsuccessfully tries to prove the report a newspaper scandal and a lie. Murray is elated with the success of his dishonorable methods and keeps his promise with Lida, rewarding her with the bracelet promised for accomplishing the ruin of Andrews. Andrews calls on Lida, discovers the bracelet and accuses her of being party to the plot. She denies it. He hastily takes his departure, telling her that "The white rose may be cold and colorless, but it is pure, fragrant and most to be desired!"

The slander which has been spread broadcast has had its effect and on election day Andrews meets overwhelming defeat. Ralph Clark, the private secretary, has been sent to Miss Whitney to acquaint her with the outcome of the election and while he is there, she shows him a beautiful and curious Oriental fan, presented to her by Andrews, possessing a secret spring and chamber, in one of the posts, in which there is concealed a deadly poison.

The rebuff which Lida received from Andrews as he was leaving her apartment has filled her with jealous rage, and a determination to compromise him. She goes to Miss Whitney's apartment, accuses him of jilting her and charges Miss Whitney with being in love with Mr. Andrews' secretary, defying her to deny it if she can. Andrews confronts his fiancee and tells her of the accusation, whcih she denies, and says, "I promised to marry you and I will keep my word." After Andrews has gone, Miss Whitney, in desperation, determines to put an end to it all. The private secretary, during her interview, becomes suspicious and while she is writing a note that she has found the solution to the whole problem, the secretary removes the poison from the fan and replaces it with a strong sleeping powder, which she inhales and falls into a deep sleep. When Andrews soon afterwards calls on Miss Whitney, and is told by the servants that she is dead, he hurries to her room. He sees her motionless body and gives way to uncontrollable grief. The next morning Andrews is found dead. Miss Whitney recovers from the effects of the soporific. Out of respect for the dead, she mourns at his bier and Lida is allowed to pour out her expression of sorrow for the one she loved and so basely injured, against her better feelings, for the satisfaction of her vanity and jealousy.

Some months later, amid the white crystals of fallen snow, Beth Whitney, now being free to accept the attentions of Ralph Clark, the private secretary, the white rose blooms afresh in the glorious radiance of true love.

PUT YOURSELF IN THEIR PLACE (Mar. 10).—Two old friends, Mr. Johnson and Mr. Kent, are very desirous that their son and daughter marry. The young people, whether by reason of the prearranged wish of their parents, or because of a mutual difference, do not feel disposed to become engaged. After a while the two fathers come to the conclusion, that it is only fair that they should put themselves in their children's places, so they decide they will adopt different tactics; they will insistently object to their children marrying each other. Both the youngsters, now free to assert their independence, insist that they will at once get married. They manage to elude the vigilance of their parents and elope. Mr. Kent and Mr. Johnson give chase. When they meet their children coming from the parsonage, they shower them with their blessings.

FIREMEN'S DRILL (Mar. 10).—The wonderful performances of the New York Fire Department in testing a new Auto-Electrical Apparatus for the Mayor and the Fire Commissioner, giving an exhibition of its uses, also the uses of several life-saving appliances, the actual saving of persons from a burning building and the display of the marvelous effciency of the different corps of the Fire Department, in the saving of life and property.

THE WAY OUT (Mar. 11).—David Turner is a bachelor; Emma Bindley is a spinster. Fate brings about their meeting in a boarding house. Mrs. Butterfield, the boarding-house keeper, notices the mutual admiration of her two new patrons. One day when Emma is out shopping, a tramp tries to seize her purse. At this moment David appears upon the scene and strikes the man down.

One evening Mrs. Butterfield receives a telegram announcing her brother's illness and asking her to come to him at once. She is obliged to leave and asks Emma to finish the game of checkers with David. The next morning David is taken suddenly sick and unable to leave his room. Emma volunteers to act as his nurse. One day, after he is convalescent, she is giving him his medicine, and he takes hold of her hand and tells her that if he were not held by a vow he would say something that would surprise her. She pulls her hand from his and points to her badge as a member of the Man Haters' Club. Mrs. Butterfield, who has returned, enters the room and noticing that something interesting has been going on, asks for an explanation. David shows her a letter from his Bachelors' Club and Emma her badge. Mrs. Butterfield reminds them that there is a way out of the difficulty. It is leap-year. Emma takes advantage of her privilege and David accepts her.

TO THE PUBLIC

THE European Feature Film Company, by Aaron E. Nussbaum, its President, has seized a film of ours called "SALOME." This film we bought under the name of "Herodiade" from the manufacturer, the Savoie Film Company, in Turin, Italy. The European Feature Film Company, probably because of its short experience in the film business, blissfully proceeded to copyright the whole original and tries to bring suit as an upholder of an alleged copyright. Mr. Somborn's limited knowledge in this business may also explain why "the unwise rush in where angels fear to tread." They do not know that we faced a similar crowd in Court and when the United States Court of the Southern District of New York decided against them, they laid down, paid us the Court expenses and dropped the case.

We make this statement, so that the public may not be misled by any bluffs about "seizure and law suits" and threatening notices in the trade papers.

Any one can start something and make a lot of loath about it. We want the public to understand that we are ready to back up in court our record of many years standing for fair dealing and honesty.

HIS HONOR, THE MAYOR (Mar. 12).—Mr. Bullington is elected Mayor of his town. His wife reives a letter from her maiden aunt Minerva, saying that she is coming to visit them. She asks them besides a bedroom, to give her some place to use as an office, as she has business to transact. They fix up an old store-room for her. One of the chief "planks" on which Bullington has been elected, is his strong opposition to votes for women. He is horror-stricken to find that Minerva is an ardent advocate of female suffrage. She holds meetings in his house, upbraids him for his principles, and threatens to cut him and his wife out of her will, if he does not sustain her cause and patronize her meetings. He yields and at once gets himself into hot water. Mr. Balder and Mr. Carter call on him to demand his resignation, but Bullington has the happy thought to turn Minerva on them. She talks them nearly dead, and ends by capturing both to speak in favor of female suffrage at her next meeting. Bullington retains his place as Mayor.

THE DECEIVERS (Mar. 13).—Madaleine Howard, an actress, goes to the country. John Darrow, a society man, starts on a tramp through the country. On his way he meets a farmer who offers him a job as a general helper. Darrow accepts the position and finds later that he is employed by the man at whose house Madaleine is stopping. They become acquainted.

Madaleine goes to the postoffice and receives a letter calling her to rehearsals in the city for the approaching season. Madaleine goes to New York without announcing her intention. A week later, Darrow receives a letter asking him to excuse her sudden disappearance and inviting him to call at a certain New York address. He stops at his apartments in the city, dresses himself in evening clothes, and calls on Madaleine. Madaleine realizes that she really loves Darrow, and timidly offers him her hand. He accepts hers.

SISTERS ALL (Mar. 14).—A reduction in wages is made by Sergius, a garment maker, and there is a general protest from the poorly-paid help. Sergius' two daughters, Helen and Hattie, richly dressed, call at the office to visit him, just as some of the workers enter to make protest against the injustice of the reduction. Helen and Hattie plan to assist the girls. Olga and Vera, two Russian sisters, who are leaders of the protestants, live in a small room in a wretched tenement. Sergius' daughters call to see the two sisters and tell them that they have decided to work for their own living, and ask them if they can share their home with them. Sergius visits the tenement and finds his daughters making his garments. He directs them to return home, but they give no heed to his request and hold out in their determination to stand by their poorer sisters.

A few days later, the two daughters, with Olga and Vera, bring their sewing to the factory and are paid by the cashier. Sergius meets them with a pleading look. Helen and Hattie tell the girls they will make one last appeal to their father. They follow him to his office and this time he relents and consents to give the girls their demands. His daughters then tell their father that they will return to comfort and cheer him. Joyously they go back to Olga and Vera, who are assembled with the rest of the factory girls, and tell them the good news, which is received with general rejoicing.

THE DOG HOUSE BUILDERS (Mar. 15).—Two young fellows, one fat and lazy and the other active and progressive, are working in a carpenter shop for a grouchy old boss. They become disgusted with his treatment, quit him and go into business on their own hook, establishing themselves in their uncle's cellar. They receive an order from Mrs. Mealy, for a dog house. They forget to ask the size of the dog and build a kennel large enough to fit any size dog, from a daschund to a mastiff. When it is finished, it is so heavy that they can hardly lift it and when they attempt to take it upstairs out of the cellar, find they cannot get it through the door. They are completely puzzled and one blames the other for being a bone-head. They are obliged to take it apart and carry the material to the yard. After putting it all together again, they carry it to Mrs. Mealy's, where they learn that the dog for which the house is intended is nothing but a little poodle. Mrs. Mealy informs them that it is altogether too large. The boys, very much crestfallen, look at the little poodle, which belongs to Mrs. Mealy's little daughter, and proceed to take measurements by holding their hand apart, the length of the dog and the width, walking home, one with his hands spread apart indicating the width, and the other with his hands spread apart indicating the length of the dog house. This shows they are very poor mechanics. They should have made the measurements with a rule and jotted them down on paper.

Returning to their shop, they build a small house to accommodate the little poodle. The job being completed, they deliver it to Mrs. Mealy's home, only to find that while they were building the house, her little daughter had decided to exchange her poodle for an enormous mastiff, which greets them with ferocious growls and an evident desire to make a meal of them. This is the last straw. They make tracks for home, dissolve partnership and look about for occupation more suitable to their talents.

SELIG.

DIVERGING PATHS (Mar. 10).—Two sisters, Rose and Lily, are brought up tenderly together by fond parents, in the same loving and enlightened environment. Lovers enter the lives of both; but the love of the two girls is of an entirely different character. The one, Lily, acquires the pure affection of Jed, a sturdy young blacksmith, who later makes a fortune through a clever mechanical invention, while the other sister, Rose, is tempted by the attentions of a married man and yields to him the moment he has secured a divorce from his wife. Lily lives the happiest life imaginable, while poor Rose lives a life of regret. Darnley, her captor, proves himself a brute toward her as well as an unfaithful servant to his employer, from whom he embezzles a large sum of money. Rose is finally reunited with her family through the manly efforts of Lily's husband.

THE FERRETS (Mar. 11).—Desmond, chief of the police, admits that Detective Tait is the best man in his service, but says in response to his appeal for the hand of his daugther, "nix on the son-in-law business." He tells him to go capture the green gang of counterfeiters and he may change his mind. The young detective stumbles on the rendezvous of the gang in a seemingly deserted building,, but is discovered and overpowered, and is bound and gagged and left to the rats in the basement. A rat-catcher, who has been sent by the owners of the building to rid it of pests, finds the detective, but before he can get help is similarly conditioned by the counterfeiters. His pet ferret frees him by gnawing the ropes that bind him and eventually carries a note out through the tiny barred window to the street.

JUGGLING WITH FATE (Mar. 12).—Dare Devil Tom Wallace, so called because of his seeming lack of fear, is held up while riding in the stage and robbed by a masked desperado named Morgan. Wallace finds the trail of the robber and follows it to the face of a cliff. After some reconnoitering he discovers that the bandit has been hoisted to the top of the cliff by his two confederates, Manuel and Dolores. He returns to town only to find that other depredations have been committed during his short absence. Sheriff "Bill" Andrews is much vexed over the turn of affairs and implores the further aid of Wallace. By a series of exciting and successful ruses, the foxy Morgan is finally captured. When unmasked, the bandit proves to be a combination of marshal and road agent—a daring double.

THE FUGITIVE (Mar. 13).—Charley Cheddar knocks out an offender at school, and thinking he is done for, makes a quick get-away to avoid the police. He flies to London and conceals himself in the home of his newly-wed sister. He is well night famished, and finding sanctuary in the dining-room, hides under the table and helps himself, reaching up and taking a chance. The cook yells that the house is haunted and through a series of amusing scenes the terrified youth adds to the delusion and confusion. He meets his new brother-in-law for the first time, and finding that he is a judge, believes his chance for having the law on him improving momentarily. He disguises himself, but gets deeper into trouble all the time. Until it is revealed he is not a fugitive from justice, and the man he knocked out has happily recovered.

THE SANDS OF TIME (Mar. 14).—A sorrowing mother, bereft of her infant, visits a foundling asylum and adopts a baby girl. The young widow lavishes her love and care on the adopted infant and her environment is the finest. The story is allegorical in theme. Father Time presents the baby with an hour glass containing "The Sands of Time," which are all in the upper part of the glass. The story of her subsequent life shows how heredity overbalances environment. The girl grows wayward in spite of all the efforts of her devoted parent. With rare tact and patience the lonely mother again and again unsuccessfully attempts to direct the girl's destinies to a noble womanhood. Finally heredity asserts itself—the child breaks away, and in a distant city lives a life of her own choosing. Here she travels the primrose path till the very end. At stated intervals during her life, Father Time appears to her and shows the hour glass with the sands half run. But she will not heed nor change her life. Now in middle age, beauty and its bloom desert her, and on the immediate horizon she sees the sordidness of an unlovely old age. Finally the last vestage of youth departs, old age overtakes her, and in the public almshouse she makes her last stand against the "dreaded visitor with his hour glass." Here she drinks deep of the dregs of humiliation and shame. She finally weakens and is induced by a clergyman to accept religion as a solace for her misspent life. Father Time again appears and the "Sands of Time" are now full run, but she is ready and smiling—happy at last.

THE SOUL OF A ROSE (Mar. 10).—A lovely rose is blooming in the garden. She sees a couple of lovers and hears the youth swear that he will love the maiden through life and that their souls shall love in Heaven. A vision appears and the rose pleads that she may have a soul, that she also may live hereafter. The vision sends a soul into the rose, present her with a basket of flowers and instructs her to sell them on the streets and the basket will be filled every morning.

The rose becomes a human being. She takes humble lodgings in London, dresses neat, but poorly and goes out to sell the contents of the basket, then goes home to rest. In the morning she again goes forth, making her stand usually on one corner. She soon becomes known and customers come regularly. Jack Bellingham buys a flower every morning and being attracted by her beauty pauses for a few minutes chat. Rose is entranced and one day Jack proposes that she shall meet him for an evening's enjoyment. She has saved a little money and with it she buys a simple white frock and hat. She meets Jack as per appointment and he takes her to an Italian restaurant for dinner after which they go to a theater. On the way home in a cab, Jack encircles her with his arm and she lays her head upon his shoulder. On parting at the door the man takes her in his arms and kisses her passionately.

For a few weeks Jack is regular in his visits and attentions; then one Saturday morning he tells Rose that he cannot see her that afternoon as he has to entertain some friends of his mother. The girl is sad and goes to the park, where she sees her lover with two ladies in a carriage. The one is elderly, the other young and beautiful. The girl turns away. The next morning she is not at her post and Jack looks for her in vain. In the evening he goes to the lodging house and the landlady invites him into the parlor and sends the girl to him. She asks who were the ladies, Jack tells her that they were the wife and daughter of his employer and that his mother wants him to marry the girl. Rose asks him if he intends to carry out his mother's wishes. He will not commit himself and when they part Rose refuses to kiss him. She faints and is taken to her room, where she lies ill for weeks. When she becomes convalescent Jack is permitted to visit her in her room. He tells her he cannot live without her and begs her to become his wife. A week or two later there is a modest wedding.

A LUCKY CHANCE (Mar. 11).—Tom Winters, an employee of the Navo Mining Company, is in love with Helen Morton, and his love is returned. Helen's father, who is a wealthy ranchman, does not look with favor on Tom's suit as he wants his daughter to marry a wealthy man. As a means of ending the romance, Mr. Morton uses his influence with the manager of the Navo Mining Company to have Tom discharged. Tom resents the injustice. On the night of his dismissal Tom finds himself with only a few dollars and decides to try and better his financial condition at the gaming table. While in the gambling house, he loses his notebook in which he had written the combination of the mining company's safe. The book is found by Pedro, a Mexican.

That night the Mexicans break open the safe and, when the robbery is discovered on the following day, Tom is arrested and accused of the crime. Helen goes out for a bicycle ride accompanied by her dog and as she is passing a ravine she comes upon the Mexican's rendezvous and discovers them counting their ill-gotten gains. She hurriedly writes a note and after intrusting it with the dog, she proceeds to hold up the Mexicans until help arrives. The dog appears with the note and Tom and the sheriff ride to the aid of Helen. The Mexicans are captured and it is then discovered that the weapon which Helen held the bandits at bay was nothing more than a bicycle wrench. It is needless to add that Mr. Morton now consents to the marriage of Tom and Helen as he must repay the wrong he did the young mining clerk.

WHEN JOHN BROUGHT HOME HIS WIFE (Mar. 13),—John Robins is a young farmer with a deep yearning for the city and a distaste for everything that savors of his country existence. He shocks his parents with his "advanced" ideas when he tells them he is going to the city to make a fortune and to see life. They protest, but seeing no other way out of it allow him to go. John stops at a theatrical boarding house in the city and the taunts and scorns of the theater folks over the newly arrived "boob" only inflame his resentment of his country antecedents.

Helen Phalen, a chorus girl, takes his side and does her best to make him forget his country awkwardness and in his appreciation of her efforts John falls in love with her. They both look for work, John happy to get anything that will give a start toward the fortune he is after and Helen anxious for a place with the chorus of any one of the new shows. Both fail utterly and soon come to the end of their resources. John in his discouragement looks at his last dollar and figuring life as a failure concludes to pack up and go home and admit that he is a failure. Helen enters her room at the same time and throws herself down in a storm of despairing sobs. He comforts her and then a daring idea occurs to him to change their luck by using their last dollar to get married. She agrees and they become the happiest of creatures until they get back from the ministers and face the reality of their troubles again. But luck has changed in the form of a letter from his mother, enclosing him money and telling him they are getting old and need him. Helen discards all her theatrical clothes, cosmetics, etc., and with their few plain clothes packed in the old carpet bag they go back to the farm, where the old folks receive them with open arms.

JANE'S WATERLOO (Mar. 14).—Miss Jane Prue uses her new found woman's rights to make a leap year proposal of marriage to the Rev. Percival Jenks. The minister who really loves Sue Grant, tries to dodge the militant old maid but in vain. He is timid and not self possessed and failing to oppose the proposition at the crucial moment, Jane quickly spreads the news and loses no time in closing the deal. On the day assigned for the nuptials, Jane, not intending to run any risk, calls for the pastor at his lodgings. She pounds on his door but receives no response. In the meanwhile Jenks is racing to the depot. Old man Prue who has been sent on an errand for his daughter encounters the minister and cheerfully assists him to escape. The landlady and her three sons also assist in the exodus which is successfully accomplished.

SIXES AND NINES (Mar. 14).—Jim Nugent and his sweetheart, Bess Forrest, go auto riding. They break the speed limit law, but manage to get away. The auto number is 666 and Jim reverses it so that it reads 999. Later they are arrested and it is discovered that 999 belongs to a car used by a couple of bank robbers who have just made a good haul. Jim and Bess are pretty badly scared until the robbers are caught and brought in. Of course Jim declares that the number was hung upside down in the garage, and promises to make his machine behave in the future.

THE HEART BROKERS (Mar. 15).—Richard Engle, a grouchy old bachelor, makes his home with his sister, Mrs. Mary Walters, a wealthy widow. Richard becomes so grouchy that, taking the advice of his friends, his sister decides to get him married. She calls at the office of Prof. Lover, a matrimonial agent. The professor promises to do what he can to get Richard married, but alas! all plans fail and Richard remains a bachelor.

But during her visits to his office the widow has fallen in love herself, and with no less a person than the large and handsome professor. The widow is one who usually gets what she goes after, but the professor can't see it her way. He rejects her suit. Too true is the saying, "Hell hath no fury like a woman scorned." The widow opens a free matrimonial bureau next to Prof. Lover's and succeeds in taking all his clients away from him. When his money gives out and ruin stares him in the face, poor Prof. Lover with nothing left in the world but a suit of clothes and a statue of Cupid is glad to find the widow's offer of marriage still open to him.

AN ADVENTURE ON THE MEXICAN BORDER (Mar. 15).—On the United States side of the line dividing Mexico from the United States, the U. S. soldiers camped, with a view to protecting the international line and the citizens of the United States. Fifty yards on the other side the Mexican soldiers were camped to do likewise for their country. One of the bright-eyed senoritas of the southern race captivates two officers, one a captain of her own nationality, the other a lieutenant belonging to Uncle Sam. Both of these men, true and stuanch in war and love, have a silent battle to gain the lady's hand. The captain of the Mexican troops being the older of the two, wins the maid by his quiet love and kindness. The irrepressible, impassionate United States trooper, tries to take the senorita's heart by storm, but is repelled. On the spur of the moment, to punish his rival, the United States lieutenant tells a falsehood to his commanding officer, and nearly causes international complications, but after coolly analyzing the situation, the lieutenant raises above all petty personal feelings and delivers the captain from jail, returns him to his fiancee across the line, and goes back to take his place and await his punishment.

MELIES.

LOVED BY A MAORI CHIEFTESS (Mar. 14—Part 1).—As she sits and plays with "poi" balls, Wena, daughter of Chief Te Rangi-Ka-Haruru of the Nagatairuu tribe of Maoris, is approached by a sorceress who predicts that she, Wena, will marry a white man, tall and handsome, with eyes blue as the sky and a fair beard. A little way distant her father is receiving the young chief Te Heuheu of the Kahungunus, who has come to win her for his wife. The two chiefs greet each other with the "Te Hongi," the rubbing of noses—equivalent to our hand shake.

Chadwick, an English trapper, tramping the woods in search of game, is chanced upon and taken prisoner by several of the Nagatairuus and brought before their chief, who orders that he be burned at the stake. Great rejoicing takes place in the preparation, for "white man meat" is in sight. But Wena recognizes in Chadwick the man of the sorceress' prediction, and uses her vast influence to save his life. She induces her father to permit him to escape; helps him carry it out, and returns to prevent his being pursued, but not without having sworn eternal love for him and promising to meet him later and elope. That evening, when all her kinsmen sleep, she steals from the village and meets her lover at the appointed trysting place.

Part 2.—Chadwick folds Wena to his breast, but to remain so near her village is to invite capture. So, folding his coat over her, he guides the way through the treacherous Geyser lands and then takes boat to his hut up the lake. Once inside his door, Wena is his wife. This is the Maori custom.

Chief Te Rangi-Ka-Haruru, learning of Wena's absence, dispatches the young chief Te Heuheu to trace her, and when the latter brings back word that she is with Chadwick, the old chief orders her brought back even though the white man should be killed in the task. When bodily harm is threatened Chadwick, a few days later, she consents to return, provisionally.

Facing the old chief, her father, she demands her husband, but he tells her of her disgrace to the tribe and orders her to be housed and guarded. Five days later the chief finds her in a pitiful condition, overcome by the long separation from her husband. He relents and sends for Chadwick. The Englishman is received into the tribe as a chief and great rejoicing takes place in honor of the event. And Wena once more is made happy and well.

BIOGRAPH.

A GIRL'S STRATAGEM (Mar. 10).—The young man has been deceiving his mother in his letters home and upon the reception of a letter from her his better self is for the moment aroused, but only for the moment, as he finds evil associates hard to ignore. But it seems that the letter has brought with it a blessing and his mother's prayers have been heard because his meeting with a young woman in the tenement district proves to be his moral uplift. She, by a clever scheme, prevents him from committing a crime which would have been his irretrievable downfall.

THE SPRING OF LIFE (Mar. 13).—Billy's father is suffering from a nervous breakdown and the manager of the sanatorium at which he is stopping suggests that he visit a certain spring in the mountains, noted for its curative properties. Of course, the old man took his advice, taking Billy with him. Billy becomes infatuated with the inn-keeper's daughter and wins her through a most unique scheme.

TIGHTWAD'S PREDICAMENT (Mar. 13).—Tightwad refuses his wife's request for pin-money, and, as she has promised to accompany friends on a shopping tour, she is determined to raise some money some way or other. Her plan to do so causes a bunch of trouble for Tightwad and teaches him a lesson that will make him more generous in the future.

THE UNWELCOME GUEST (Mar. 15).—The miserly wife hoards the money which she receives from her husband and when she dies its hiding-place remains a secret. The son is advised of his mother's death and is informed that unless he gives his father a home the old man will have to go to the poorhouse. This the son and his wife are unwilling to do, but to avoid scandal they consent to take him. About this time a little girl from the workhouse comes to the son's home, she having been engaged to do the housework. Upon the old man's arrival at the home of his son he is made to feel that he is unwelcome. He and the little girl, being treated most unkindly by the son and his family, run away, and by a peculiar turn of conditions the son is made to regret the persecution to which he had subjected his father.

KALEM.

THE OPEN SWITCH (Mar. 10).—Grace Lane, the daughter of the operator at Ferndale, is in love with Billy Warren, the engineer on a local train. Jim West, a rough character employed as section foreman in the yards, endeavors to force his attentions on Grace and is roundly thrashed by Billy.

West plans to ditch Billy's train. Grace discovers him tampering with the switch and runs for help, but he overtakes her and ties her near the tracks. During the struggle his revolver slips from his pocket unnoticed and when he leaves to watch Billy's train dash to destruction, Grace, struggling with her bonds, secures the revolver and fires at the telegraph wires. She succeeds in breaking one of the glass insulators and a broken wire falls within her reach. With her hands still tied, she taps the end of the wire on the rail, crossing the circuit which operates the telegraph instrument in her father's station.

Grace's father, receiving the warning, flags Bill's train in the nick of time and releases the girl, none the worse for her harrowing experience. After a desperate struggle with West, Billy leads him off to jail.

ABSENT-MINDED ABE (Mar. 10).—When Abe takes his sweetheart picnicking he has the wrong lunch basket. The girl allows him five minutes to secure the right basket and keeps his watch to time him. Abe's memory plays him a sad trick and coming to the conclusion that his watch has been stolen, he complains to the police. Later, Abe is accused of stealing a basket and his sweetheart is charged with purloining the watch. Explanations clear matters, however, and the young people proceed to enjoy the picnic unmolested.

THE GRIM TOLL OF WAR (Special—2 reels—Mar. 12).—The town of Greenville prepares to welcome its first citizen, Frederick Douglas, who for six years has been connected with the American Embassy in a European country. With the band playing and the villagers shouting, he is escorted to his home, where he hastens to greet his young daughter, Myrtle. Myrtle introduces her father to Miss Virginia Ellis, the governess, who has become a member of the Douglas household during his absence abroad. He finds her to be a superior woman, talented and refined. Her tenderness toward Myrtle strikes a responsive chord within Douglas and one day he surprises and delights his daughter by announcing that Miss Ellis has consented to become his wife.

The Civil War breaks out and a shadow falls over the Douglas home. The wife endeavors to keep secret the identity of her brother, Clel, who is a U. S. Secret Service agent. When Clel secretly visits his sister, Douglas oversees the meeting and unjustly suspects that she is unfaithful. Seeking no explanation, he leaves a note for his wife, announcing that he has answered his country's call and that everything he owns is hers.

Douglas receives a commission of Colonel and leaves for the front. At the fort where his troops encamp he encounters Ellis, but the Secret Service man is busily engaged and has no opportunity to make the acquaintance of the Colonel.

Ellis has been advised that the Federal plans are being disclosed and while hiding in a tree he overhears a conference which a spy from the fort has with a fellow conspirator. He learns that the gate of the fort is to be exploded, opening the way for the enemy to capture the stronghold. While he is listening, the branch of the tree breaks and he falls at the feet of the spies. Ellis is captured and conducted to a Confederate prison.

Through a clever subterfuge the Secret Service man escapes and makes his way on horseback to warn the fort of the impending explosion. Colonel Douglas, presiding at the batteries, sees Ellis' approach through a spy-glass and training a gun on him, mortally wounds the young man with the explosion of a shell. Determined to reach the fort, Ellis struggles ahead of the advancing Confederates and Colonel Douglas is filled with remorse. He gathers a rescue party and taking personal command, brings Ellis to safety. With his last breath Ellis gives the warning, but is too late to prevent the explosion. The enemy sweeps in, but is repulsed and the day is saved.

While arranging the last sad rites, Douglas discovers a letter in Ellis' pocket which reveals his relationship with Virginia. Virginia, knowing that sooner or later her husband will appreciate his grievous mistake, continues to preside over his household and tenderly cares for Myrtle. With his terrible secret locked in his breast, Colonel Douglas returns home after the war and endeavors to make amends by a life of devotion to his faithful wife.

THE INTERNATIONAL SPIES (Mar. 12).—The Hawleys are entertaining upon their palatial houseboat moored on the Thames. Among the guests are Arsene Leblanc and Gabrielle, his wife. Leblanc masquerades as an artist, but is in reality a daring secret agent for a foreign government. Lieutenant Daring, of the Royal Navy, makes their acquaintance and arranges to pose for his portrait on the morrow.

Leblanc and his wife visit Daring's apartments on the following day and the portrait is started. A messenger interrupts them and during Daring's absence, Leblanc searches the secretary and discovers the plans of the mine field. He hastily grasps his brush, loosens the draperies about Gabrielle's shoulders, and sketches a copy of the plans upon her back in sepia.

Daring finishes his business with the messenger and upon his return to the room accidentally discovers the plot. Leblanc covers him with his revolver and with the aid of his wife binds the lieutenant securely to a chair and the couple flee.

Daring's dog worries at the knots binding his master and liberates him. The lieutenant rushes to the Charing Cross Station just as the Continental express bearing the fugitives starts for Folkestone harbor. Daring secures a motorcycle and races against time to overtake the express. The machine fails him. Undismayed he continues his chase upon horseback and finally secures a powerful touring car. The machine catches afire near the aviation grounds and Daring borrows an aeroplane. He reaches Folkstone harbor just as the cross channel steamer, bearing the fugitives, gets under way enroute for Boulogne. With the aid of a motorboat Daring overtakes and boards the seamer. Arriving at Boulogne he follows the fugitives ashore, communicates with the authorities, and brings the spies to justice.

THE INDIAN MAID'S WARNING (Mar. 14).—Starlight, a young Indian girl, is sent to gather wood for the camp. She meets Dick, a young settler, who befriends her and wins her gratitude, which ripens into love. White Eagle, a jealous Indian brave, spies upon Dick and watches him from the brush. The settler unfortunately mistakes the Indian's headdress for a bird and kills him with his rifle.

In order to shield Dick, Starlight covers the Indian's body with branches, but later she is drawn by her superstitions to visit the spot. The Indians discover the body of the dead brave and declare war on the white men. Seeing the Indians depart on the warpath, Starlight makes a desperate ride to warn Dick. A terrific battle takes place and the Indians are routed, but not until Starlight has given up her life in defense of the settlers.

JONES' JONAH DAY (Mar. 14).—Jones finds that he is becoming bald and his barber recommends that he have his hair clipped short. Unfortunately he is made an exact replica of an escaped convict. Mrs. Jones, going to visit her mother, leaves her husband a note, stating that he will find the silverware in the sideboard and plenty to eat in the pantry. Finding his wife is away, Jones goes fishing. He is confronted by the convict, who demands an exchange of clothes. Mr. Convict discovers the note and proceeds to take advantage of Mrs. Jones' instructions. After many adversities Jones succeeds in establishing his identity and the convict's vacation is suddenly ended.

THE WOE OF BATTLE (Mar. 15).—Down the village street the Federal troops advance, led by the valiant Lieut. Gaylord. Capt. Breslow, commanding the Confederate forces, makes a gallant stand, and his sister, Helen, watches the struggle from the window of her home. The battle continues to rage. The Federal troops advance to the barricade and a hand-to-hand conflict ensues between the two leaders. Breslow's sword is at Gaylord's heart as he fires his revolver and Breslow sinks to the ground, leaving a silken handkerchief in the Federal officer's hand. The Confederates are routed.

Gen. Green makes his headquarters at the Breslow house, and Gaylord is attached to his staff. The young officer renders a service to Helen and, despite their different views, their friendship ripens into love.

An attack is ordered upon a Confederate blockhouse, and as Gaylord prepares to leave he knots the handkerchief about his neck. Helen recognizes it as the one she has given her brother and declares that Gaylord is a murderer. With broken hearts they realize that they will never be free to love. Helen seeks solace in a convent, and Gaylord, feeling he has nothing to live for, recklessly leads the attack on the blockhouse.

Repeated charges fail to move the Confederates, and their seige guns mow down the men like wheat before the storm. Gaylord takes the only chance, and, under a scathing fire, he runs to the enemy's stronghold and sets it ablaze. The strategy brings victory to the Federals, but Gaylord, mortally wounded, is carried to the hospital, where Helen, as a Sister of Mercy, brings him comfort in his last hour.

MOTHER (Special—2 reels—Feb. 24).—Tom Dawson, having written his mother that he has been made ranch foreman, loses his job on account of drink. Not having the heart to tell her of this misfortune, he writes her that he has been elected sheriff. He steals two horses and, suspected, has to flee, pursued by the sheriff and his posse.

At this inopportune time his mother decides to visit him. Arriving at the little town, she tells the boys she has come to see her son, the sheriff, and proudly displays his picture. When the sheriff returns they explain the circumstances to him; he pins his badge upon Tom and allows him to masquerade as sheriff until his mother returns to her home. As the train fades away the sheriff's badge is removed and Tom is confined to a cell, while his mother is in happy ignorance of his plight.

A TIMELY BATH (Mar. 12).—Heinie loved Lena, and Lena loved Heinie, but father was obdurate. The meetings of the lovers were clandestine and of the fire escape variety, but Heinie gladly climbed the five flights of iron ladders every day to meet the fair girl of his dreams. Father caught him one day and put an end to his romance, but not for long. Heinie pestered the neighbors with his voyages up and down the fire escape, and they concluded to help the unsuccessful lover. One day, while father is taking a bath, the neighbors steal his clothes and refuse to give them back to him until Heinie and Lena have won his consent and are one.

A TOUR OF THE ALPS (Mar. 12).—If you have not journeyed through the Alps, see this film. If you have journeyed through the Alps, see this film; it will bring back the memory of nature's most beautiful handiwork.

THE LOVE THAT TURNED (Mar. 13). — The story of a Mexican girl who, finding a wounded American on his way to join the revolutionists, nurses him back to health and learns to love him with all the ardor of her wild nature. The American, Milton Brown, sends a note to his sweetheart, asking her to help him back to the United States. His sweetheart's reply, stating that she and her father are coming to his rescue and bringing gold enough to purchase his freedom should it become necessary, falls into the hands of the Mexican girl. Her deep love turns, in a moment, to a deeper hatred. She informs the Mexican government of the situation, and a corps of rurales is despatched to capture the party. But after a wild ride the Americans cross the border to safety.

INNOCENCE (Mar. 15).—The innocent act of a child in hiding a box of jewelry entrusted to the care of his father sends the father to prison, and after he has escaped sends him back again. But finally the little tot is instrumental in clearing his father's name and making life doubly sweet. The youngster uses the jewel box to fasten the head to a broken doll, and it is only after his father has suffered the agonies of a prison cell that the youngster provides the solution to the mystery.

C. G. P. C.

ARTILLERY MANEUVERS (Mar. 11). — In the matter of artillery equipment the French army has been awarded the palm by the greatest authorities on the subject. In this film they perform some extremely hazardous feats, fording rivers, climbing steep hills and riding gullies at breakneck speed.

THE STICKLEBACK (Mar. 11).—An interesting study of a peculiar species of fish, the only one of the vertebrae animals known to build a nest as the birds do.

THE CHATEAU OF CHAMBORD (Mar. 11).—A visit to the favorite residence of Francis I., King of France. The camera follows the balcony around the entire superstructure of the building, permitting close observation of the most remarkable single instance of the beauties of Renaissance architecture in existence.

OVER THE 'PHONE (Mar. 14).—Max Linder conducts a flirtation with a telephone operator, and after he has become sufficiently well acquainted—and you know that doesn't take long for Max—he calls up to invite her to dine with him. The sweet voice answers yes, but at the restaurant the owner of the sweet voice proves to be also the owner of a frightful face and form. However, Max learns later on that she of the sweet voice and sour face was only a substitute operator and that the girl he intended inviting to dine is in reality a "bear."

THE LUXEMBURG GARDENS (Mar. 14).—The Luxemburg gardens were constructed at the order of Marie de Medici, and the natural coloring of the gardens reproduced in the film prove them to be all that the word beautiful can mean.

UNION FEATURES.

THE STOLEN PAPERS.—The young diplomat Phelps is spending a few days at his fiancee's in the country, when he is suddenly called to London by his Minister to copy some very important documents. Phelps is accompanied to London by his future brother-in-law, Harrison, who must see a creditor and try to get an extension, but the creditor insists on being paid immediately. Harrison is embarrassed, he must get money.

Phelps stepped out of his office only a moment and upon his return finds that the very important document is stolen. This so affects his mind that the Minister of War has him taken to his fiancee's home and lodged in her brother's room, where Sherlock Holmes comes to see him, called by Miss Harrison.

During the night Phelps believes he has a nightmare. He has seen a ghost in his room. Everybody believes that he has hallucinations. Sherlock things the matter over and decides to take Phelps with him to London.

Sherlock returns the following night and sees a shadow enter the room, open a little trap in the floor out of which he pulls something. As he passes the window, Sherlock springs at him and after a struggle, seizes a paper which proves to be the stolen document. He also secures the ring of the man who was playing the ghost.

The following day there is a dinner at Sherlock Holmes', the document is brought in on a large dish. Holmes comes to Harrison, who alone does not congratulate him and asks to shake hands. The ring is missing. Sherlock gives it back to him and for the happiness of Phelps and Miss Harrison, he will keep silent on the brother's crime.

THE MUSGRAVE RITUAL.—The strained expression on the face of one maid servant in a group of six, gives to the mind of Sherlock Holmes, the master of all detectives, the clue to the unraveling of this remarkable and unusual mystery.

The maid and the butler planned and carried out a daring robbery in which they secured a mysterious ritual which told of a hidden treasure and gave directions for the finding of the money and jewels.

Following the directions, the butler and the maid locate this hidden fortune, but coming suddenly in possession of such enormous riches, turned the head of this daring woman. The decision was reached in an instant! "I will have it all"—and just as the butler handed out the treasure laden box, she allowed the heavy flag stone to crash down upon him, imprisoning him in this death trap where the treasure had lain for years.

When he arrived on the scene, Holmes wanted a clue. By clever grouping of the servants of the household, he flashed the old parchment bearing the ritual and watched their faces. Only the maid recognized the ritual and her startled look gave Holmes his entering wedge.

The forcing of a confession from the woman is quickly brought about in most dramatic fashion.

THE BERYL CORONET.—A torn piece of cloth hanging on a nail proved the undoing of Moriarty. Sherlock Holmes' keen methods and his daring actions, when convinced that he is on the right trail, have unraveled many a complicated mystery, but in none have his remarkable analytic powers been more forcefully demonstrated than in "The Beryl Coronet."

The very valuable coronet having been left with Banker Holder as security for a loan, is stolen by a daring thief. The fiancee of Holder's beautiful daughter Mary rescues the coronet, after an exciting encounter with the thieves, only to be accused of the theft of two jewels broken from it in the struggle, when it is discovered in his possession by Holder and his family, who were aroused by the commotion.

Mary never doubts her sweetheart, however, and with the assistance of the great detective, the real culprits are brought to justice.

Starting with a piece of torn cloth as his only clue, Holmes rapidly works out in his own peculiar manner, the solution of the mystery.

CALICOWANI (Mar. 16).—Captain Blake bids his wife farewell and starts on a voyage to the Fiji Islands. He and his crew are shipwrecked and he is the only surviving member. He lands on a desert island and after walking for days falls asleep in a secluded spot. There he is discovered by Princess Calicowani, the daughter of chief Etabolelot of the cannibal tribe. At first she is amazed at the strange sight, but becomes reconciled to the fact that the captain is human and claims him as her own. Unable to understand her language he acquiesces in everything she says. She feeds him and he is satisfied. Meanwhile he is introduced to Calicowani's father as her fiancee and his black friends arriving on the spot are notified of that fact. Things go well for a while, until the tribe runs out of food and then the members decide that the captain would make a good roast. They seize him despite Calicowani's entreaties and protests and string him up preparatory to building a fire under him. Meanwhile, the captain's wife thinking him dead marries another man, who she henpecks to her heart's content. However, just as the captain is about to become a royal subject for the cannibals' stew a body of American sailors arrive and rescue him. Calicowani mourns her loss, but the captain goes back with his countrymen. He visits his old home, after his arrival and is surprised to find his wife married again. They believe him a ghost and the captain is left to his own thoughts of the strange wedding he was nearly a participant in with the beautiful negro princess as his mate for life.

WHO IS THE GOAT? (Mar. 16).—Pearl and her husband have saved up $400. Their uncle visits them. Fearing burglars they have the money hid in the writing desk. Pearl removes it and places it in a vase atop the mantel piece. Uncle, alone one day in the parlor, reaches up for a match, and knocks over the vase. He immediately rushes around with the fragments to the ash can and throws them in, together with the $400. He then goes to a crockery store and buys an exact duplicate of the vase he broke. Returning he puts the vase in its accustomed place. Meanwhile the driver of the ash wagon calls and removes the valuable can of waste. Pearl and her husband then pay a visit to the parlor and looking into the vase are mortified to find the money missing. They accuse the servant girl of stealing it and a fight ensues, the maid immediately quitting her job. Pearl in tears and uncle enters to find the small family in confusion. They inform him that the vase was their hiding place, and he rushes pell mell out of the room to the ash can. He finds it empty and he begins to realize that his ruse of replacing the vase was not so easy as contemplated. While the backs of Pearl and her husband are turned he deposits $400 into the vase and taking it down shows them the money, telling them it was there all the time and that they had overlooked it, but all the time he is kicking himself at being the goat.

PCWERS.

THE HAWKINS' ROOMER (Mar. 12).—Hawkins is sacked! Mrs. Hawkins takes a roomer to help matters out. Hawkins is suspicious of the gentlemen who takes the room. He doesn't like the looks or the way of him. He peeks through the keyhole and his worst suspicions are confirmed. He sees the scoundrel disguising himself with a beard and a wig.

Hawkins turns sleuth. He follows the villain and sees him go into the bank. He rushes to the corner and summons the police. The monster is captured. The party is met by some plain-clothes sleuths, who recognize the man. It is Nick Harris, the detective. Hawkins sneaks off home, while the others run to the bank, where they find that the expected burglars have made their visit and that it has been entirely successful. They determine to make an example of Hawkins and visit him in a body. He sees them coming, and taking his gun he creeps out to the woodshed to hide. Inside he stumbles on the burglars, who are in hiding. They see the gun and give up to the dazed Hawkins, who delivers them with much ceremony to the detective and police. Mrs. Hawkins takes the reward and Hawkins has to be content with his wife's acceptance of him as a hero.

THE CURSE (Mar. 14).—Duro Willoughby is a good enough fellow when in a normal state, but has brutal instincts when under the influence of liquor. He neglects his wife, and in order to save himself trouble, persuades a friend to spend some evenings with her. Things come to a climax one night when he loses his temper at cards in the club, and returns home in an especially coarse frame of mind.

He is angry at his friend and his wife for not joining him in a drink, and his friend goes away in astonishment and disgust. His wife makes a pathetic appeal to him, and he strikes her. When she leaves the room he turns to the table and his glance falls upon a book entitled "Because I Love You." In the fly leaf is written "A token of love from Duro to Helen." He pens a note, telling his wife that he is going away and will not return until he has conquered the curse which has blighted their lives.

After staying away for five years, he returns home. As he looks through the window he sees his friend talking to his wife, who has a baby girl on her lap. The passions he has held down burst forth. The friend comes out and Willoughby throttles him. He pushes away his wife, who brings the baby to him and begging him to listen a moment. She shows him a locket on the baby's neck. It contains his own portrait. The baby looks at the picture then at Willoughby, and murmurs, "Daddy!" The veil falls from his eyes and he takes his wife and child in his arms.

REX.

THOU SHALT NOT STEAL (2 parts—Mar. 13).—Little Con Rooney is operated upon for a fracture of the head. Years roll on. It is big Con Rooney now, the leader of the gang. He has grown up from boyhood with the pressure of a small bone on his brain, which has incited his brutal and even murderous instinct. He is worsted in a brawl at a Bowery dance hall and is removed to a hospital. The doctor in examining him discovers the bone pressure on his brain, and placing him under the spell of hypnotism, learns about the fracture. He tells Nellie, the nurse, that by relieving the pressure, Rooney will have a normal man's chance in life.

He is operated on and in due time, convalesces. He is visited by his old companions, who bring him gifts of whiskey and cards. Nellie's good influence is exerted and Rooney is affected and grateful. Nellie teaches him to read and write and gives him a small Bible. She lays particular stress upon the commandments "Thou Shalt Not Steal."

When the time arrives for Rooney's discharge, he begs to be given employment in order that he may not go back to his old haunts and ways. Good fortune comes his way. The hospital janitor is discharged and Rooney is given his place. Things go well for Rooney until one day, a big donation arrives for the hospital after banking hours. It is put in a small safe and its security is entrusted to Rooney. During the night, the window is opened and two of Rooney's old cronies enter and demand the money. In a moment of weakness, he agrees; but a vision of Nellie, the Bible and the words "Thou Shalt Not Steal" comes to him and after a desperate struggle, he throws the men out of the window and summons assistance. Nellie is called and Rooney falls to his knees, crying out, "Miss Nellie, I was true to your teaching and my trust."

AN EMPTY BOX (Mar. 16).—The author is a cynical, somewhat overbearing man who has a very poor idea of woman. There are times when the one woman nearly makes him alter his mind, but she—although she treasures a secret love for him—is chilled by the opinion she knows that he holds of her and her sex.

One night at a Bohemian gathering, the author, in the course of an argument, makes a wager with a friend who champions the women's cause. The author with a smile, states that he has a test that no woman can withstand. The author has a cigarette box in which he keeps his own cigarettes, which bear his monogram. He empties the box and fills it with smoke and his friend manages to leave the box in the presence of a woman, making some remark about it as he goes.

The first woman "falls," the second woman "falls" also. She however, seeking to cover the humiliation and annoyance, fills the box with pipe smoke, but the author quickly detects the imposition and is more cynical than ever. For the third test the friend selects "the woman," and the author finds himself hoping that she will not fall like the others.

She does not open the box; she is not of the curious kind. But the second woman tells her that a trap has been laid for her, and she opens it. When the smoke comes out, she knows what has happened. During the evening she picks up a cigarette which the author has laid down. She places it in her dress. She later smokes the cigarette and fills the box with the smoke. The author detects the smoke of his brand of cigarettes, He goes to her and congratulates her. She feels that she cannot lie to him and tells him the truth. The author tells his friend, who gives him a lecture. He tells him that here is a woman who is worth while—one who was brave enough to err and confess. The author thinks it out, goes to the girl, and the cynic is lost in the lover.

NESTOR.

PAPA'S HELPING HAND (Mar. 10).—Papa Brown is very proud of his daughter Mary. He is anxious that she shall marry the somewhat affluent and highly respectable Mr. Wilks. Mary prefers Bob. Papa Brown insists upon a marriage with Wilks and Bob resorts to stratagem. He dons a suit of overalls and going to Papa Brown, he applies for a job and gets it.

Lizzie, Bob's sister, calls upon Bob and kisses him. Papa Brown sees it and comes to the conclusion that they are lovers.

Papa Brown is a sympathetic soul, and when he sees Bob brooding, he sits beside him and insists upon the young man giving him his confidence. Bob tells him that he loves a lovely girl, but her crusty old father insists that the girl marry another fellow. Papa Brown is indignant. He advises Bob to fool the old curmudgeon and elope with the damsel. He tells him he can borrow his buggy and also gives him money. Bob says he will do it—and does.

That night the handy-man, Jake, hears a noise, investigates and wakes Papa. Papa chuckles and tells Jake to go to bed. Morning comes and Papa Brown chuckles some more when he finds the buggy has not yet returned. He gets worried, however, when Mary does not show up for her usual hearty breakfast and his chuckles turn to growls when he finds that the bed has not been slept in.

Bob and Mary return with a smile and a marriage certificate, and Papa raves until he sees the humor of the situation. Wilks calls, but he poor soul, has no sense of humor and he is called to order by Papa Brown for making objectionable remarks about his son-in-law.

WHEN HUBBY ENTERTAINED (Mar. 10).—Jack looks at his watch, scalds his mouth with that last cup of coffee, kisses wifey hurriedly and rushes off in an earnest endeavor to cultivate an attack of indigestion between his front door and the car line. Wifey weeps, for the brute has forgotten it is her birthday, and therefore, cannot love her any more.

Jack reaches the office, sees the calendar, remembers the significance of the date, sends the boy for tickets for the theater and wires wifey "have gotten seats for the theater. We'll have a little dinner in honor of your birthday." He promptly forgets the matter in the stress of business.

Wifey receives the wire and wipes her eyes. She reads the message—"Have got ten seats for the theater," etc. My, what a good hubby! Wifey promptly invites four other couples and in due course they meet Jack at the station. He is flabbergasted, but being a good sport controls his emotions. Arriving at the theater he tries to get other seats but is informed that all that is left is a $30.00 box. Jack "forks" up, but only has three small bills and a problem left. One performer so pleases the audience that they throw money on the stage. Wifey demands some, Jack shows her the bills and tries to make her understand that they are all he has. She takes them and he is absolutely stoney-broke.

Jack escorts the party to a swell restaurant and tries to cash a check; but the proprietor is suspicious and Jack excuses himself and rushes off to his office, where he opens the safe and takes a sum of money from his cash box. He is seen by a policeman, who, taking him for a burglar, arrests him. As they pass the restaurant Jack begs to be identified by the party within. The request is granted and all is well. Arriving at home, wifey thanks hubby affectionately and shows him the telegram and the cause of the expensive effect is discovered.

WITH A GRAIN OF SALT (Mar. 14).—The Senor Pedro Gonzos lives with his daughter Anita in their once rich home. Gonzos has gambled and is lazy and their fortunes have dwindled. Carlos is engaged to Anita and awaits some rich coup to marry her. Living with them is a young cousin, Leona, who, being adopted, is made to feel her position keenly and her gentler nature is dominated by the more assertive Anita. Visions of gain arise with the arrival of the rich young American, Rob Allison, who bears a letter of introduction informing Pedro that Rob is seeking good investments. Rob soon comprehends Leona's position and his sympathies go out to her, but Anita exercises all her powers of fascination and keeps him by her as much as possible. The trio lose no time in getting as much of Rob's wealth as possible, and Leona rebels as she sees Pedro cheating the young man at cards, aided by the wily Anita.

The grand coup is planned. Carlos carefully salts the placer grounds and Rob is led like a lamb to the slaughter. He takes his own samples, but is unaware that he is led to the right spot to take them. The gravel is panned and big streaks of gold show in the pan, and Rob is delighted and signifies his intention of purchasing the prospects. Leona is aware of the salting and makes up her mind to impart her knowledge to Rob. An idea strikes her, and she sprinkles his viands liberally with salt. He makes a wry face and catches her eye, but mistakes her motive and scraping the salt from his food, continued his meal for fear of getting her into trouble.

Leona is desperate and as the documents are spread out, ready to sign, Leona sees Carlos pour some of the gravel on to a plate in order to emphasize the richness of the prospective mine. Leona creeps up and pours some real salt on the gravel. Her action is observed by Anita in the doorway and by Rob, who, looking up at her, at last comprehends. There is a fight and Rob emerges victorious. He takes Leona away with him and together they look forward to happiness.

THE FLAMING ARROW (Two Reels—Mar. 11).—Bailey, the squaw man, is panning gold on his claim, watched by White Eagle, his halfbreed son, and Chief Black Eagle, who is attached to both father and son. Flying Bird, the mother of White Eagle, has dinner ready and comes out to call the men in. The chief goes unwillingly.

The Apaches declare war upon Black Eagle and his tribe, by sending a bundle of arrows, tied with a snake skin, to Black Eagle. The latter defies him by breaking one of the arrows and returning it to the Apache chief.

Black Eagle plans an ambush for the Apaches. He takes Bailey with him, and Flying Bird and the boy, White Eagle, are sent to the chief's camp, where they are welcomed. The Apaches fall into the ambush and are routed, but Bailey is killed. Flying Bird is inconsolable and when she is able to get away she goes to Bailey's last resting place and kills herself.

Chief Black Eagle sends White Eagle to college. On his return White Eagle again adopts the costume and the customs of the tribe.

A new frontier post is established in the desert. It excites the anger of the Indians. The colonel of the fort has his daughter, Dorothy, with him. She is sought in marriage by one Smalley, but she has no love for him. He is revengeful and allies himself to Pasedo, a Mexican.

Dorothy goes riding. Her horse gets away from her, and White Eagle, who is out in the open, reading, sees her and assists her back to the fort. Later White Eagle, who has been appointed a chief, invites the garrison to attend their games. While the Indians and soldiers are engaged in the sport of the games, Smalley and Pasedo sneak off and, desiring to create trouble, shoot an Indian. The Indian is found and brought on, and White Eagle, with Indian cunning, compares the mud on the Indian's feet to that on the feet of the men present. He fastens the crime on Smalley, who is put under guard.

The next day the colonel receives a message asking that a detachment of cavalry be sent to protect a gold train. Several squads ride out.

With the assistance of Pasedo, Smalley escapes. The two get whiskey and take it to the Indians, who go on the warpath. Black Eagle and White Eagle are disgusted and go and warn the fort. The colonel sees the gravity of the situation and sends an orderly to overtake the cavalry and bring them back. The orderly finally reaches them and they turn back.

Smalley abducts Dorothy and rides away to the Indian camp with her. They meet Moon Face, the hostile chief, and Dorothy convinces him that it was Smalley who killed the Indian. They make short work of Smalley, but send Dorothy to the Indian camp.

The colonel finds a small handkerchief outside the fort and identifies it as his daughter's. He is in despair. White Eagle offers to go and rescue her, and tells them a flaming arrow shall be the signal of success.

White Eagle rescues Dorothy, but is overtaken and they take refuge in a hut, where they hold the redskins at bay until their ammunition gives out. The cavalry, on their way back to the fort, see the Indians attacking the hut and, scenting trouble, rout them and take White Eagle and Dorothy back with them.

Moon Face, unaware of the rescue of Dorothy, goes to the fort and demands surrender. He threatens that otherwise he will burn the white girl. The distracted colonel has but one course. He refuses and the battle starts. In the midst of it a flaming arrow is seen in the air, and the colonel knows that Dorothy is safe and on her way. The fort is hard pressed, but the returning cavalry gives relief and Dorothy is restored to her father's arms, and White Eagle receives the congratulations of every one.

INDIAN BLOOD (Mar. 15—2 reels).—Young Eagle Feather, the old Indian chief's son, is no lover of the palefaces. He thinks he is above them. At college the boys, including Jack Brent, make considerable fun of him. He resents it.

The old chief, dying, bids his daughter, Wana, to send for his son and to tell him to hold up the traditions of his tribe. Messengers are dispatched to bring him back.

At the college ball, Nellie, the sister of Jack Brent, misses Eagle Feather. They tell her that he is sulking. She runs off and, throwing a stone into his window, calls his attention. She tells him to come and dance with her. He goes, and at the dance is told that Jack prefers that his sister does not dance with an Indian. A quarrel is imminent, when the Indian messengers arrive, and Eagle Feather, hearing that his father desires his presence, draws himself up and stalks from the room. Nellie runs after the party as they go, and offers her hand to Eagle Feather, who is gravely impressed. He returns to his tribe and becomes their chief.

Two years later Brent is appointed to be the agent of the Indian agency. Rumors are afloat of unrest amongst the Indians, and Brent decides to ride out and see the chief. On his way he comes to a stream and sees Wana, Eagle Feather's sister. She admires him and walks with him to the Indian village. The two come face to face with Eagle Feather. Brent, recovering himself, offers his hand, which Eagle Feather refuses. Brent insults him, reminding him of their college experiences.

Brent has no idea of keeping away from the attractive Indian maiden, and keeps an appointment with her in the woods. Eagle Feather comes across them and, drawing a knife, is about to step from his hiding place when he remembers Brent's sister, Nellie, and thinks of the rose she gave him as he left. He steps out quietly and takes Wana away with him, altogether ignoring Brent, who is nonplused at being discovered.

Nellie comes to visit her brother and takes him by surprise. Wana, who has waited in vain for Brent at their meeting place near the stream, wants to see him again. Her heart is with him all the time, so she steals away and goes to his house, where she sees him with his sister and notes their affection. In a fever of jealousy, thinking it is his sweetheart, she runs back to the camp and tells her brother of her fancied wrongs. He, thirsting for a good reason to fight the whites, calls his people about him and inflames their natural desires for war.

As the Indians get ready, Wana gloats. Her desire for revenge gets cool and she finds her love taking the place of hatred. She determines to warn Brent. She takes a short cut and comes to the agency. She sees Nellie and, snatching her knife, accuses Nellie of being Brent's sweetheart. Nellie tells her that she is Brent's sister, and Wana is horrified at what she has done. She offers to ride to the fort for help, and starts at a wild gallop.

The Indians arrive at the agency and the house is besieged and the inmates are hard pressed. The troops arrive as the Indians rush the building, and Brent and Eagle Feather meet in a fight to the death Eagle Feather has Brent down and is about to kill him when he sees Nellie standing there. He thinks it is a vision, and as he staggers back Brent shoots him. Wana runs in and kneels by her brother, who raises himself and, calling her a traitor to her people, stabs her and then falls dead across her body.

ECLAIR.

THE LIZARDS (Mar. 16).—This is an exceptionally interesting scientific subject, showing the various forms of lizards. The picture shows the various species, from the common American lizard to the monstrous six-footed lizard known as the Geckos. Other specimens which are shown are the poisonous Mexican lizard, the European asp, which is commonly thought to be a snake, but which is really a lizard without legs; and specimens from Algeria, Australia, the Sahara and other far distant parts of the world. The cameraman secured a most exciting battle between a rat and a lizard.

WHEN HE WANTS A DOG HE WANTS A DOG Mar. 16).—Snookums Newlywed acquaintance with a dog. Snookums decides suddenly that he must have the dog, and he proceeds to let out an awful string of those terrible wows when doggie rides away in the automobile of his owner.

Papa Newlywed does his best to buy the dog, but without success. Finally he decides to become a bold, bad burglar and goes in the night to take forcible possession of the pet, but the result is most interesting, as well as funny, because Papa Newlywed gets decidedly the worst of the encounter. He returns home in a barrel, to find Snookums sleeping peacefully and his wife cautioning him not to make any noise.

THE STRONGER (Mar. 12).—Two young prospectors, while exploring for sites in the Northern wilderness, are arrested in their walk by the report of a gun. The signal is repeated, and following in the direction of the shot they find a little fair-haired child sitting at the edge of an old shaft, weeping. Upon further investigation they find an old miner at the bottom of the shaft. The revolver in the man's limp hand and the broken windlass tell too plainly of the fatal mishap and the victim's frantic appeal for help. The old miner is maimed beyond all human help. In dying he begs the two youths to care for little Babbie. The boys decide to remain on the spot, taking up their abode in the cabin which the accident has left without a tenant. The first few days of mortifying blunders in their attempts at supplying the maternal relation to a little lady of six, convinces them that at least in one department even a squaw can beat the combined forces of two of England's best younger sons. Reed-on-the-Wind becomes the duly accredited nurse and foster mother to the little Babbie.

A dozen years later, when the bud has unfolded into a glorious flower, Jack and Fred become rivals for the favor of their ward. Each vies with the other to outdo him with the gifts. When Fred brings back from Skagway a shawl such as no other girl on the Yukon has seen before, Jack tops him with an offering of a little plaster Cupid. Sentiment enjoys a temporary triumph over lavishness. Babbie takes the little love god to her heart, and a breach is opened between the two men. Before long this settles into enmity. The bad blood is finally precipitated by a dispute over a mining claim. There is a wild race to the claim office. Fred, having borrowed Babbie's wolf to lead his team of huskies, outruns his onetime partner and files a prior claim. The other, enraged at his defeat, challenges the successful man to argue their rival claims both to the mining property and to the girl with Colts at twenty paces.

The duel is just about to start when they are thrown into sudden consternation by the spectacle of flames pouring from the doors and windows of Babbie's cabin in the valley close by. The men forget their quarrel in the urgent necessity of saving the girl they both love from the impending death in hideous guise. Jack finally succeeds in carrying her from the pyre. He then returns to his erstwhile partner, whom he has left inside, over-powered by the smoke. Just as he raises the helpless man the charred flooring gives way and both are hurled far below into the abandoned shaft which twelve years before had claimed the life of Babbie's father.

CALAMITY ANNE, DETECTIVE (Mar. 10).—Calamity Anne went to her one faithful friend, her burro, and arranged breakfast for two. Three miles away Rattlesnake Pete, by way of diversion, soundly and thoroughly beat Mrs. Rattlesnake Pete and took his way with his Ferocious Pal to the cache where the stolen money was hidden.

Simultaneously, the sheriff posted up a $500 reward notice for the same pair and aroused the cupidity of "Know-It-All Jones," who, revolver in hand, went in search of that five hundred.

Now it fell out that Calamity, seeing the notice, also needed cash; so when a suspicious character appeared, hiked him toward the sheriff at the point of her gun. Alas! The sheriff dismissed her with the remark that a harmless old tramp was a poor excuse. So Calamity, in disgust left.

Later she fell upon the real bandit and so knocked the wind out of the husky body of Rattlesnake Pete that the desperado in panic fled down the road. His Pal also fled straight into the arms of Know-It-All Jones, who promptly helped him along toward the sheriff. Then Calamity, overhauling her victim again fell upon him with such frightful effect that the poor wretch fled straight into the sheriff's arms for protection.

And then, horror of horrors, the sheriff refused the reward on the ground that the bandit had given himself up—and, to make matters worse, Calamity beheld "Know-It-All Jones" collect his change and depart.

Heart-sick Calamity left and shortly after with only Calamity's luck, fell straight upon the cache wherein was hidden the dough. With this Calamity, in righteous indignation, decided to vamoose, but on the way, leading her burro, came upon the house of Rattlesnake Pete and there saw his weeping and poverty-stricken wife. Calamity's tender heart gave way. She hauled the bags of dust from her bosom and presented them to the unfortunate wife, leaving, with a light heart and a heavy laden burro, for parts unknown.

BROTHER LOVE (Mar. 13).—Jimmy Mason was blind and lived with his brother in their cabin in the mountains. Jimmy longed for the good things of life and when a noted specialist came to the village, he took pity on the hapless youth and promised to restore his sight. Jimmy was sent to town and the doctor, after giving him a pair of glasses with the advice not to remove them, within a certain length of time, sent him forth.

But sight was so welcome to Jimmy that he wandered about the city admiring its beautiful hotels and streets. He saw and grew acquainted with a girl who discarded him promptly when his money gave out. And then, walking out on the docks, Jimmy fell in with some dock roustabouts, who, for the sake of a joke, tore off the shaded glasses. Stricken blind, the boy fell on the pier.

Meanwhile, the brother, alone in the mountains, grew restless. He went to town, traced his wayward brother and rescued him just when the latter was about to step into the sea. Happy in his love for his brother, Jimmy, now blind forever, returned to his cabin in the hills.

THE ORPHAN'S MINE (Mar. 15).—Grace Calvin prospected alone, independent of "man's help" and quite derisive of its efficacy. Ed Corbin, prospecting close by had repeatedly offered himself as her protector for life, but she scorned that sort of help.

A day came when Grace hit gold, and that in the presence of Blake Williams, noted bad man. He hurried to a nearby saloon, and, from behind a partition, Ed Corbin overheard the plan. He went himself to Grace's claim, and with a rifle held off the thieves. Later, after the would-be bandits returned to town, stopping for a consoling drink, Ed, entering with the sheriff, saw them. With guns drawn, the bandit backed out of the saloon and scurried out of the country as fast as their horses would carry them. And then, Ed, feeling that his suit had been greatly promoted, hastened to the claim where he found Grace willing to listen to proposals.

MAJESTIC.

A KIMONO TRAGEDY (Mar. 2).—Mr. Stone, a high strung man, is returning from a rest cure taken for his nerves. On the train a stupid porter places a kimona in the wrong grip, which happens to be Stone's. Mr. Stone's wife is a very jealous woman, and when she discovers the kimona in her husband's grip she immediately suspects, and trouble brews. To protect himself, because his wife would not believe the true situation of affairs, Stone concocts a story, inducing her to believe the kimona was brought back from his trip as a gift for her. Things seemed smoothed now, but the original owner of the kimona prizes it very highly and advertises for it, requesting that it be returned to her immediately. Now Stone is in a precarious predicament; he is afraid to ask his wife for the kimona, and yet, to be honest, he must return it to its owner. Finally he decides that the only thing to do is to buy another as nearly like the lost one as possible and send it to the lady who advertises. Unfortunately his wife happens in upon him while he is making his purchase. Efforts to explain are futile; she threatens all sorts of things. The excitement and suspense are too much for a high strung man like Stone, and he gives way. The doctor comes—a trained nurse is prescribed. The situation is further aggrevated now, for the nurse turns out to be none other than the lady who owned the kimona that started the trouble. Complications follow, but all are finally settled, and a narrowly averted tragedy evolves into a joke.

BRASS BUTTONS (Mar. 4).—Mr. Gay gets an invitation to join a poker game, but as there is a burglar scare in the neighborhood his wife objects to his going out that night. He persuades her to go to bed early, so that he can follow the instructions of the invitation—to go after his wife is asleep. But the wife reads the note and is wise, and decides to counterplot by locking up Gay's clothes. In the meantime Mary is entertaining the cop in the kitchen.

In the parlor Gay yawns and pretends to be sleepy and proposes to his wife to retire early. The wife, having laid her plans, consents and takes opportunity while he is locking up the house, to take his coat and other clothes and lock them in the wardrobe in her bedroom. Gay patiently waits for his wife to go to sleep; then finds that he cannot get his clothes without awakening her. The cop outside finds it is a cold night; he enters the kitchen, empties the bottle and goes to sleep. Gay hears him snoring. An idea—he will borrow the cop's coat and surprise the fellows at the club. On his way he disperses a gang of toughs, receives bribe and drink from a saloon keeper, only to find when he gets to the club that the other members flee in terror at the sight of the brass buttons. Gay takes the jack-jot.

The cop in the meantime has awakened and starts to look for a bracer. The wife hears the noise, thinks the cop is her husband, tip-toes up to him and hugs him. Mary, the maid, enters to see Mrs. Gay hugging the cop. But Mrs. Gay screams as she finds she has been huging a stranger and runs to her room. Mary is mad at the cop, but he dare not leave the house without his uniform. Gay on his way home from the club recovers the proceeds of a burglary, which had been dropped by the crooks in their flight. He arrives home with it and tells the cop to take it to the station house, it will mean promotion for him. Gay then makes the place look as though a burglary were committed. He calls his wife and poses as a hero. The cop later makes peace with Mary by showing her the added stripe on his arm that he got for his bravery!

RELIANCE.

THE MAN FROM OUTSIDE (3 reels—Mar. 5).—Burt and Albert are twin brothers, so exactly alike that no one is able to tell them apart. The only identifying mark is borne by Burt who has a particularly odd scar on his right wrist. The brothers both love Lucille Dayton, daughter of a wealthy stock broker. She prefers Burt and accepts his proposal. Albert is furious and sets about for some way in which he can dishonor his brother and win the girl himself. Finally he forges his own name to a check—and by appearing at his club, establishes an alibi and makes it appear as though Burt had passed the check. Burt is arrested and sent to jail. Lucille believes in him and vows to be faithful to him. His brother out of the way, Albert ruins the girl's father. The old man dies and the girl is left penniless to earn a living. Albert tells her that sooner or later she will come to him. He has her discharged from every position she manages to get. About this time Burt is released from jail and is unable to find either Lucille or his brother. Despondent he joins an underworld gang and is soon assigned to rob a house. This happens to be his own brothers. He enters the richly furnished room, switches on the lights and the twin brothers are face to face! Burt denounces Albert—and he, overcome, and seized by an attack of heart failure, falls dead. Burt dresses in his brother's clothes and ringing for a servant has the body carried out as that of a vagrant. Unable to get work, Lucille seeks Albert's home. Burt comes down to find the girl he has sought crouching in a chair by the fire. He goes to her, she shrinks away from him, saying only, "I came because I was hungry!" Burt takes her in his arms and makes her understand who he is. Breaking down she sobs out all the horror of the past few months when she was always persecuted by his brother and how she was on the brink of yielding to his demands because he was making life so hard for her. Burt comforts her, saying "We have both been on the brink of sin, but now let us start anew together."

JUST JANE (Mar. 8).—Jane is a little slave working in a boarding house. She is very much abused by the landlady and has no happiness in life at all. A handsome, but very poor young artist moves into the house and is kind to the girl—so much kinder than anyone else ever was, that she soon loses her heart to him, child though she is. He does not dream of such a thing—for there is another girl—rich and beautiful to whom he is engaged. His pictures do not sell and his sweetheart angered at his impoverished condition returns his ring in a moment of pique. Jane sees the artist return to his lonely room and knows he is discouraged and unhappy. What can she do for him? There is but one thing in her life that means sunshine—a poor little kitten. But if it will bring any comfort to him, she will gladly give it. The boy is touched by the gift and accepts it gladly. In the meantime the girl repents and follows the artist to the boarding house. Jane opens the door and when she asks for the boy, the little slave takes her to him though with breaking heart. She sees them make up, hears the few whispered words of love and then hidden against the door, she watches them depart in the big waiting motorcar. Only the kitten is left—forgotten like herself. Gathering it in her arms she weeps with her head hidden in its soft fur.

CHASING A SON-IN-LAW (Mar. 13).—Following the disappearance of hubby, the mother and daughter quarrel, each blaming the other for his having departed so suddenly. Finally mother promises that she will bring hubby back, but hubby does not care for his mother-in-law's society, and there is a thrilling chase through the beautiful city of Nice, in which mother-in-law overcomes many difficulties in trying to reach the unhappy Gaston.

We find Gaston hiding himself in a hotel from a women who desires to see him, he thinking this inquisitive lady is his mother-in-law. It develops that it is his wife, and when the two are re-united they are very happy until mother-in-law breaks in on the scene and starts the trouble all over again, because Gaston immediately makes a hurried departure.

The young couple arrive home and are apparently very happy and contented again until notified that Susie's mother is coming. It looks like trouble for a minute, but this time mother-in-law is as gentle as a lamb and promises Gaston that she will never quarrel again.

LIFE IN INDIA (Mar. 13).—This is a travelogue subject such as is now justly popular, and the beautiful views shown of the harbor of Colombo on the rivers of Ceylon are certainly gems. The divers who fill the little boats in the harbor are one of the most interesting sights in this far-away country. It is in these rivers and harbors that some of the most valuable pearls of the world are found. When we leave the safe harbor of Colombo, the pretty boats and bronzed fishermen, whither do we sail? We see the numerous little boats loaded with intrepid divers, and the famous fisheries of Ceylon, where the most valuable pearls of the world are found. Is not this industry a poem, considering the purposes, scenery and the location? This film reveals to us the beautiful landscapes as they are reflected in many of the rivers. In the sections of the river which retain fish, many fishermen with grave and sincere faces are to be seen, and when the tourist remains for a while in those enchanted places, his soul cannot remain insensible to the artistic caress of the marvelous spectacle offered by the sunset in this beautiful country.

THANHOUSER.

THE WAY TO A MAN'S HEART (Mar. 2).—A "Down East" boy went out West to seek his fortune and succeeded. Like all successful men he had a hobby. His was that cooks had deteriorated and the chefs of today were not in the same class with the housekeepers of his boyhood. He was particularly emphatic when telling of his old boarding-house down East and the landlady cooked a New England boiled dinner such as had never been heard of before or since.

The rich man's thoughts turned to it one day while he was trying to dine in a fashionable mountain resort hotel. Everything brought before him displeased him and he finally left the table in disgust and as hungry as when he entered the place. Driving along moodily in his automobile he noticed a sign on a little cottage which read "New England Boiled Dinner 25 Cents." Hastily he stopped the auto and rushed back to the cottage. At first he could not believe that the sign was true, but the savory odors that were wafted to him convinced him it was not a dream. He entered and ate a New England boiled dinner, then followed it up with several others. To the pretty waitress he expressed a desire to meet the cook, and to his joy he found that she was his landlady of twenty years ago.

Naturally he did not want to lose her. She was older than he, so he did not contemplate matrimony. But the daughter was young, pretty and attractive, so now she presides at the rich man's table as his wife, while the servants, under the vigilant eye of mother, have become past masters in the art of preparing New England boiled dinners.

HIS HEROINE (Mar. 4).—He was a hard-headed old business man and very mercenary, so when he received a letter from a debtor in a little country town asking for more time in which to pay the amount he owed, he decided to show no mercy.

But on the way to the home of his debtor, he had an accident. He slipped and fell from a cliff upon a projecting ledge below. He was thinking less of his money than of the chances of prolonging his life when he heard someone call him, and looking up he saw a girl standing on the cliff. She was quick-witted and resourceful, for she soon secured a rope, lowered herself to where the man was, and helped him back to safety. To his surprise he found that she was the daughter of the man whom he had intended to turn out of his home. He spent a short time at the girl's home, recovering from a slight injury sustained during his accident, and then prepared to return to the city, assuring the anxious father that he could have all the time he wanted to pay his mortgage. His farewell of the girl was very sentimental, for she was fair to look upon and the crabbed old bachelor persuaded himself that he was in love.

As time went by, the old business man kept thinking continually of the girl. He decided that she would consider it a great honor to marry him, so he wrote a letter asking her to marry him, and enclosing the mortgage on her father's place.

Strange to say, the girl was not flattered when she received the proposal. Fortune had been kind to her father of late, and he had ample funds to pay the mortgage. So she wrote a very indignant letter to her ancient suitor, and closed the epistle with these words:

"Must I marry you because I saved your life? If so come back and I will push you off the cliff and give another girl a chance. Take back your mortgage."

The old bachelor received the mortgage and the letter in due course, and at first was very angry, but deep within him was a well of unsuspected humor, and as he read the closing lines of the letter he threw back his head and laughed long and heartily.

And the mortgage was never foreclosed, for its holder tore it up.

HER NEIGHBOR (Mar. 7).—The young artist had determined to devote her life "for art." She wasn't a great painter, she never would be one, yet she believed that she saw her mission clear and "mere man" had no part in her dreams. A number of her girl friends encouraged her in the notion, and all had determined to live in single blessedness for the rest of their days.

While her enthusiasm was at its height, a distant relative died and left the girl an orange grove in California. She determined to share her good luck with her chums, and invited them to aid her in establishing an "Adamless Eden." They accepted with enthusiasm, made the journey with her, and promptly ousted all the men they found at work in the grove, declaring that they (the girls) would look after everything themselves.

For a time all was lovely, but this condition did not, last. The girl found to her sorrow, that her chums were not only unfitted for the work, but they were also lazy. Seemingly all they knew about oranges was how to eat them, and this they did energetically, spicing the dessert with discourses on the uselessness of Man. The young proprietor lamented, but revived somewhat when an interesting man came into her life. He was her neighbor, the owner of the adjoining orange grove, and she soon grew to like him very much. He was always helpful, reliable, and could be depended upon to be on hand when wanted. Their friendship grew and finally the other girls became aware of it. There was a scene, and the young orange grove proprietor was deserted by all of her indignant apostles. Lonely and forlorn, she prepared to go back to the city, although her mission did not appear as important as it once had been. Just at the right moment, however, the Man came along, and in his masterful way solved the problem of the future.

You see, orange groves suggest orange blossoms and orange blossoms suggest brides, and frequently mighty poor artists make loving affectionate wives, and so it proved in this case.

GREAT NORTHERN.

OUTWITTED (Mar. 8).—Kitty has attracted the loving attentions of three admirers, Shaleton, a student; Chringham, an army officer; and Arnold, who devotes most of his spare time to hunting. The three gallant admirers are unaware, however, that the young widow is in love with Dr. Kalart, her son's tutor, and in a spirit of fun she does not take the pains to acquaint him with her secret. Kalert really is an ardent admirer, but in order to test his sincerity, Kitty causes the rumor to be spread that her fortune has been lost through the failure of a bank. At this juncture, Grace, an heiress, and friend of Kitty, arrives, and immediately the attentions of Shaleton, Chringham and Arnold are transferred in her direction. On the day following the arrival of Grace, Dr. Kalert asks Kitty to become his wife, and realizing that he is more than worthy she accepts his offer. Meanwhile, Grace and Arthur have fallen in love and their engagement is announced. When the three admirers learn of the situation, they accept it gracefully, although with sorrow, and extend their congratulations after having confessed that they had been outwitted.

THE UNION ETERNAL (State Rights Feature).—Mera Darvel is singing in the apartment of her invalid mother, whose illness has forced Mera to abandon the stage as her profession.

In the same house is staying James Lathrop, a Naval Lieutenant, and a devotee of music. Through the window he hears the singing. He is charmed. Inspired, he composed a melody which he sends to Mera. Mera sings this love song, and so delightfully that the interest of Lathrop blossoms into a stronger feeling. He writes to her, saying that her tender voice, ringing divinely in the solitude of his heart, makes him feel that he is beginning to live. They meet. The wooing goes on. But in the midst of their happiness he is ordered to report for duty at once.

After a three-years' cruise Lathrop returns on leave of absence. The humble singer is now a great opera singer. He engages a box at the opera house where she is to sing the title role in "Carmen." He writes to her, reminding her of their former acquaintance, and asks that should she still care to know him that she wear the flowers he is sending her. She is pleased to hear from him, and replies that she will be glad to have him call upon her, and that she will sing to him his song.

Lathrop goes to the opera. The singer wears the flowers. It is a signal of happiness. The wooing is renewed.

Admiral Lathrop hears of his son's love for the opera singer. The admiral had high ambitions for his son and considered it a misalliance to have him wed a stage woman. The admiral hurries to Paris and commands the lieutenant to stop "this foolishness." The lieutenant demands the right to be happy. He declares Mera to be worthy of bearing the Lathrop name, and begs that his father sanction the match.

The father, alarmed, decides that the best thing to do is to get him away from the singer. He arranges that the lieutenant be at once recalled to his duties and sent away on a long cruise. In the meantime Lieutenant Lathrop and Mera have married clandestinely. They are spending their honeymoon at Biarritz, when he receives the order commanding him to report at once for duty. He writes his resignation. Mera will not hear of it. She persuades him to respond to the call, although to her it means sadness.

Mera, for consolation, plunges herself into her art. Onward and upward she climbs and greater grows her fame.

Gounod's "Sapho" is the event of the operatic season. Mera sings the title role. It brings to her another triumph. As she goes to her dressing-room she is deluged with flowers. At this moment there comes from her husband a telegram, wishing her happiness on the night of her success. As she is reading this and longing that she might feel his dear arms around her and the warmth of his dear lips, she hears on the street newsboys calling the tidings of a marine disaster. Intuition tells her that it might be her beloved who has died. Quickly she sends for a paper. Glaring headlines whose black type leap at her, tell of the sinking of the government submarine boat, commanded by Lieutenant Lathrop.

Through her sorrow-stricken mind there surges thoughts of the past, and, like the Sapho of old, she fled. Into the dimness of the night she wanders, her harp in her hand, and unconsciously holding the trophy blooms. She wanders on and on until she comes to the waters which kiss the cold rocks in a sinister way. Higher and higher rises the tide as she sits on the clammy stones and raises her voice in song of sorrow. Up and up creeps the sullen flood until its chill had frozen in her blood the life desire.

SOLAX.

WHAT HAPPENED TO HENDERSON (Mar. 12).—Captain Rogers, of Central Police Station, receives a complaint from merchants that a gang of purse-snatchers are terrorizing their patrons. Veiled sneers are directed against the efficacy of the police service, and Captain Rogers decides to check the evil.

He selects two officers and instructs them to furnish themselves with fashionable raiment, such as would attract a purse snatcher to choose them as "ready-money" victims. Officers Henderson and Williams are on the job.

Officer Henderson makes a dashing appearance in his finery, enters a cafe and orders his lunch, keeping a sharp look-out for purse snatchers, in the meantime his attention is soon attracted by the bold glances that a flashily dressed man is sending in his direction.

He starts a successful flirtation and agrees to meet the masher at the same place the next day.

Henderson returns to his home and removes the feminine garments, which he hangs up in his closet. His pretty young wife is visiting her mother for a few days but gets lonesome and returns home ahead of time and finds the garments in her husband's closet.

The next day the wife dressed herself up in the "other woman's clothes" and goes downtown hoping to meet her husband and trap him. Lunch hour being near, she returns into the same restaurant where her husband has made his date with his ardent admirer of yesterday.

She takes her place at a table and is eagerly joined by the flashy stranger, who kisses her hand and vows his undying love. Mrs. Henderson, thoroughly frightened, wishes herself at home, and does not know how to rid herself of the presumptious fellow who is making himself very obnoxious. Mrs. Henderson has a difficult time trying to extricate herself from a difficult position.

In the meantime, Henderson has gone to his house to "dress up" for the day's work and finds the clothes gone. Not knowing that his wife has returned, he is at a loss to know what has become of the finery. The only thing he can do is to wear his uniform till he can locate his skirts again.

Henderson goes on duty on his beat downtown and encounters Williams, all dressed up in the police finery, on the lookout for purse-snatchers. Naturally the officers hold a close, confidential chat and are so interested in each other that they do not see Mrs. Henderson approaching. Her husband has his hand on the fascinating stranger's arm and they engage in earnest, confidential terms.

Mrs. Henderson has found her husband with the goods. Hysterical from her recent experience with her cafe admirer, poor Mrs. Henderson throws herself upon the surprised Williams and tears him to pieces. Henderson, trying to protect his friend from the onslaught of his wife, who is wearing his finery, drags her across the curbing and dumps her in the patrol wagon. Williams, all in pieces, gets in the "hurry-up" wagon with them, and Mrs. Henderson, in blank amazement asks what it is all about. Explanations follow and everybody forgives everybody else.

THE PLAN OF THE HOUSE (Mar. 14).—John Pryor marries Mary Trevor and is very happy. Mary's old father makes his home with his daughter. Pryor is prosperous and plans to build a home. When he shows the plans of the house to his wife she notices that her father is not provided for. Old Mr. Trevor overhears the dramatic discussion between his son-in-law and daughter, and later, in order not to interfere his daughter's happiness, withdraws himself to a "Home for the Aged," where he fares badly. An incident occurs and this is the nucleus of the story, and Pryor experiences a revulsion of feeling, which brings about a change in the plans of the house and the family is reunited.

LUX.

PAT'S BUSY DAY (Mar. 7).—Pat, a simple hearted country lad, decides to go to town to make his fortune. Upon his arrival, he tells everybody that he is capable of working like three. An opportunity to prove his boast soon occurs, and he does not fail to do the work of three people at the same time. This enables him to earn as much as three people, and he is soon on the road to fortune.

WHEN THE STORMY WINDS DO BLOW (Mar. 7.)—'Tis the servant's night out, and the wintry winds are blowing. Mr. and Mrs. Snuff return home after having been unable to obtain seats at the theater. In vain they grumble and growl, but there is no hope for it; they must light the fire themselves. They go down into the cold, dark, cellar, where in the fear of the darkness, they spend an unpleasant time, and finally Mr. Snuff fired his revolver broadcast. One of the bullets enter a cask of wine in a neighbor's cellar, and causes a flood. When the fire is finally lighted,

Mr. Snuff and his wife find that they have to choose between being suffocated or frozen. They prefer the latter, and many exciting adventures befall them whilst the stormy winds do blow.

INDIAN JUSTICE (Mar. 14).—Red Arrow's child is dying of starvation. In vain his father swallows his Indian Pride and craves the white man's charity. The white man hardens his heart, and Red Arrow resumes his weary way in silence.

Later, whilst walking in the forest, the white man's wife and his little child are attacked by a hungry leopard. They fly for their lives, and the fond mother sacrifices her chance of escape in order that her child may not fall the prey of the infuriated beast.

The woman's steps falter, and the leopard is upon her, and Red Arrow, attracted by her cries, is soon on the spot, and with unerring aim he fires. The leopard rolls dead at the feet of his intended victim.

Thus does the red man prove to his white brother that he, too, knows how to return good for evil.

THE BAKER AND THE SWEEP (Mar. 14).—This amusing film depicts the serious complications which ensue betwixt a Baker and a Sweep. It is a study in black and white, which will cause much laughter.

PILOT.

HOW THE SPIRIT OF '76 WAS PAINTED (Mar. 6th).—Willard, an employee of Amos Tripp, a wagon builder of Wellington, Ohio, has been to the war, and on his return is welcomed by his old employer. Willard one day, while painting a wagon, tries his hand at a country sketch on the side of the wagon. This proves to be a success and the wagon is at once purchased. Tripp's little daughter shows him a sketch which she has made, and this sketch gives Willard the idea which caused him to paint his first famous picture, "Pluck." This picture brought him great fame, and it was suggested by many that he paint a picture to be exhibited at the Philadelphia Centennial. Willard then started to paint a comedy picture, but after the death of his father, the comedy did not appeal to him, and he painted the picture now known the world over as "The Spirit of '76."

MISCELLANEOUS

KINEMACOLOR

WINTER SPORTS IN THE SWISS ALPS.—Sleighing over the snowy roads, tobogganing down steep inclines, and thrilling "ski-ing" behind galloping horses divides attention with the more peaceful but still picturesque diversions of skating, hockey, and sight-seeing parties through the heights.

AS THE CANDLE BURNS.—An old woman sits by a trunk in the attic, beside her on the table stands a lighted candle. She takes from the trunk a child's dress and bonnet, a young girl's dress, a wedding veil and gown, a canteen, baby's clothes, an army belt and sword, and last of all a widow's dress and veil.

As she tenderly takes up each treasure from the trunk the attic dissolves to the scene recalled by the article she holds in her hand—we see her a child with the boy lover; a young girl when the lover grows to manhood; her wedding; the journey across the plains in a wagon, when the last drop of water is drained from the canteen; her happiness in her cabin home with husband and baby; her grief as she fastens belt and sword upon her beloved husband and sends him forth to fight for their country; and finally, comforted by her child, she stands beside the grave of the husband who gave his life to his country's cause.

Back to the attic—the old woman lies back in her chair, eyes closed. Surrounded by her treasures, her spirit has flown as the candle burns to its end.

Words cannot describe this picture. At first merely interest is awakened, but as the pictures flash back and forth and the candle is shown burning lower and lower there is a gradual tightening of the heart-strings until in the last scene the candle flickers and goes out.

EGGS AND EGGS-SPERIMENTS.—By the combination of a master of parlor magic and some very clever trick photography, Kinemacolor shows some most mystifying and puzzling tricks. The reel takes its title from the fact that all the tricks are done with eggs.

of the most popular resorts in Switzerland, lies in a green valley surrounded by steep mountains, and is dominated by the huge rock pyramid of the Matterhorn. In this subject many panoramas are given which comprise 50 miles of Alpine peaks. The opening scene gives a general panorama, including the Matterhorn. The whole extent of the Bernese Oberland is seen here. The panorama is continued to the famous Monte Rosa, 15,000 feet high, the second highest peak in Europe, Mont Blanc being the highest of all. Three people are photographed standing at the top of the Gorner Grat. From that point may be seen 50 glaciers. The white expanses on the mountain-sides are all glaciers. Finally is shown a truly wonderful scene—sunset and moonlight near the Matterhorn.

THERE IS A GOD (2 reels).—In a cabin is a lonely wife, her husband seeking gold. A stranger, ill, is brought to the cabin by the husband. Days are no longer lonely for the wife. The stranger pictures to the wife the awful loneliness of her life, and in a moment of weakness she consents to go away with him.

The husband returns. At the point of a pistol the stranger is bound hand and foot to a cactus, and left to death on the desert. To the stranger's breast the husband fastens a note, denying the existence of God. The wife, unable to stand the strain, leaves a note upon the table, begging her husband not to let their child, soon to be born, have a murderer for a father, and goes into the desert. The husband returns, finds the note, and starts to trace his wife's footsteps. Prospectors rescue the stranger, and write across the words, "There is no God," their own message: "We have saved you from becoming a murderer—there is a God," leaving the note on the cactus. The husband finds his wife and forgives her. Across the desert the husband rides madly to the cactus, finds the stranger gone, reads the note and sinks on his knees in prayer.

WITH THE JAPANESE ARMY.—An excellent impression of the Japanese fighting forces is obtained from this subject, which shows the men in the performance of their daily occupations in camp. The Aerial Corps is seen bringing out an aeroplane which is shown in full flight. A dirigible balloon is also photographed.

The transport of rations, field guns and ammunition is next illustrated. In the course of its progress the cavalcade passes over a military bridge erected to ford a stream. The ammunition is drawn through the water, the bridge not being strong enough to carry such a heavy weight.

Some interesting portraits follow. The military attache for the United States passes through the camera on horseback and then the French, Austrian, German and Russian attaches are seen. They are standing in the order given, reading from left to right.

The more practical side of warfare and the soldier's life are next illustrated. The men are seen digging the trenches and taking up their positions at the firing line. As the soldiers discharge their guns the spurt of the explosive is noticed. This is especially the case in the next view of the operation of a quick-firing gun. Finally the soldiers are seen resting and enoying a meal after the exertions of the day.

HER CROWNING GLORY.—The Secret Service Department has traced opium smuggling to the village and sends one of their best men to ferret it out. His jovial manners and sketching outfit avert suspicion from him. He gets board in a fisherman's cottage and becomes acquainted with the daughter of the smuggler; he falls under the spell of the charms of the girl herself.

At last he locates the hiding place of the stolen goods, but the detective is shot by the smugglers, who row off leaving him for dead. He fights for life, buffeted among the rocks by huge waves. The girl misses Jack, examines her father's gun and hastens to the island. There she finds the wounded man exhausted. She binds his cuts and helps him escape Before going he promises to return and make her his wife.

He reaches his office, sends in his report and faints. For weeks he lies unconscious. Meanwhile the father is arrested, and the girl finally is compelled to sell her hair to obtain money. Believing her lover has forgotten her, she spends hours alone upon the island. There her lover finds her, and starts back horrified at the loss of her wonderful hair. She thinks he no longer loves her and tries to escape, but the lover holds the cropped head close to his breast, declaring that from now on his love will be Her Crowning Glory.

THE IRON MASTER.—A society drama, laid in France, requiring gorgeous costumes, beautiful settings and fine acting. Jealousy and pride nearly ruin four lives, but to tell how would spoil the play for the audience.

"The Retreat from Moscow"

Two Reel Patheplay.

THE historical retreat of Napoleon's army from Moscow in 1812, reconstructed with the aid of ten thousand soldiers of the Imperial Russian Army. Every phase of the epoch-making incident is shown with an accuracy which makes this production one of the most remarkable motion pictures ever released. The burning of Moscow after Napoleon's arrival, and the pathetic plight of the retreating army are re-enacted in all the grim tragedy of war.

The scenes were photographed on the actual sites of their original settings, and the ensembles were modeled after the famous paintings by Verestchaguine.

"Red and White Roses"

Two Reel Vitagraph.

MORGAN ANDREWS, a candidate for Governor, is assisted in his campaign by Beth Whitney, his fiancee. His political rival bent on creating scandal arranges a meeting between Andrews and Lida de Jeanne, an actress. Andrews promptly becomes infatuated, sending red roses to Lida and white roses to his fiancee. The plot is successful and Andrews is defeated. Although fully aware of his perfidy, Beth has remained loyal.

Meanwhile Lida finds herself in love with Andrews and tells him so, but is repulsed. Ralph Clark, Andrews' secretary, has been dispatched to Beth's apartments to notify her that Andrews has been defeated. While there, they are confronted by Lida and later by Andrews.

A series of accusations ensue. Andrews disappears, and is found dead the next day. Beth attempts suicide, but is saved by Clark's interest and devotion. Some months later we see them happily married.

"Shylock"

Adapted from Shakespeare's "The Merchant of Venice."

March 3, 1913 Eclipse-Kleine, Two Reels

BASSANIO wishes to marry Portia but has not the necessary money with which to buy the fine clotnes. His wealthy friend Antonio is unable to aid him as his wealth is invested in cargoes on the high seas, but offers to stand security for him with a money-lender. They visit Shylock, a Jew of great wealth, and secure the money but first Antonio is required to sign a bond stating that if the money is not paid by a certain time the lender is entitled to a pound of flesh from Antonio's breast.

Portia accepts Bassanio, and just after a brilliant wedding, he receives a letter stating that Antonio's cargoes have been lost and the bond is declared forfeited. Hastening to Venice, he is just in time to attend the trial of his friend, and witness the plea of the Jew who demands his pound of flesh. A young lawyer appearing at the critical moment so interprets the law of Venice that the Jew is forced to withdraw his claim To the great surprise of all, the learned young lawyer proves to be none other than Portia.

"Until We Three Meet Again"

March 7, 1913 Lubin, Two Reels

THREE college chums agree upon a re-union ten years from graduation day. The date arrives and finds one, a victim of drink and gambling, in the act of robbing the home of the second. The third is the police officer summoned to make the arrest.

The re-union is not as originally planned, but results in a renewal of the old friendship ties and a new start in life for all three. Through a series of strange experiences the drunkard changes places with the one who prospered, and by a trick of fate the new condition is brought about by the third chum.

"The Grim Toll of War"

Two Reel Kalem.

FREDERIC DOUGLAS returns from a diplomatic mission abroad and falls in love with his daughter's governess. Just before the Civil War breaks out they are married The wife endeavors to hide the identity of her brother, Clel, who is a Secret Service agent. Clel secretly visits his sister. The meeting is witnessed by Douglas who, believing his wife unfaithful, enlists, receiving a commission of Colonel.

Ellis is captured by the Confederates, but escapes closely pursued by the enemy and makes his way towards Colonel Douglas' camp. Mistaken for a spy, he is mortally wounded. After discovering his error the Colonel personally rescues Ellis and brings him to camp. A battle ensues. The Confederates are driven back. Ellis has been carrying a letter written by his sister. Douglas finds it and learns the relationship between the two.

The Colonel returns home after the war and endeavors to make amends by a life of devotion to his faithful wife.

"Loved by a Maori Chieftess"

Two Reel Melies.

A NOVEL and spectacular film produced in New Zealand and enacted throughout by Maoris, under the personal direction of Gaston Melies.

Just after the Maori uprising of 1870, when the bitter feeling against the British was growing, a young English trapper was taken captive by a Maori tribe. The influence of the Chief's daughter who loved him to the point where she believed him the man she was predestined to marry, saved him from death by burning. Their escape through the treacherous land of hot geysers, recapture and final union are told in a series of exciting scenes that make the film a real thriller.

TRADE S MARK

THE SELIG STANDARD OF EXCELLENCE IS THE
Measuring Mark of All Picturedom

March 10th DIVERGING PATHS

A tense drama of everyday life, which vividly contrasts the right and wrong paths through life. Harold Lockwood, Henry Otto, and Eugenie Besserer appear in title roles.

March 11th THE FERRETS

A picturesque romance of the underworld, in which two almost human ferrets play most important parts and furnish an exciting climax.

March 12th JUGGLING WITH FATE

An unusual Western drama produced by the Selig Arizona company. The story shows how one man in his time played many parts. No other westerns can compare with Selig westerns.

March 13th THE FUGITIVE

A comedy of errors. Adapted from Tom Robertson's early London success, "The Young Collegian." John Lancaster and Lyllian Leighton furnish the fun. On same reel with

THE GREAT WALL OF CHINA

Remarkable educational subject showing one of the world's scenic wonders.

March 14th THE SANDS OF TIME

A strong allegorical drama depicting the hopeless fight of environment when pitted against scarlet hereditary traits. A powerful drama with a powerful moral.

Several Selig Masterpieces Are on the Way. Watch for Them

The Way to "Easy Street"

The PROFESSIONAL PHOTOGRAPHER would not buy his CAMERAS and LENSES from the CORNER DRUGGIST but he would buy them from the DEALER in PROFESSIONAL PHOTOGRAPHERS' SUPPLIES. He would PAY the DEALER in PROFESSIONAL SUPPLIES TWENTY TIMES MORE than he would pay the DRUGGIST for like supplies but the PHOTOGRAPHER is COMPELLED to DELIVER ARTISTIC RESULTS.

Now, that is the EXACT REASON that we make the MIRROR SCREEN. It DELIVERS THE GOODS and has put more Exhibitors ON EASY STREET than any other single influence in photoplay production.

The LOGICAL time to order a MIRROR SCREEN is RIGHT NOW when you are planning the new play house or changes in the old one. THE MINUTE YOU WRITE US will be the BEST MINUTE you have ever given to your playhouse. DO IT NOW.

Gundlach Projection Lenses

The Only Lenses Which Guarantee You The Best Pictures
The Only Lenses Giving The Greatest Possible Illumination
The Only Lenses Exact in Focal Length To Within 1 100 of an Inch

There were no high grade Lenses on the market until GUNDLACH LENSES were made and none now that equal them in optical quality and illuminating power.

The GUNDLACH NO. 2 PROJECTION LENSES made the long throw possible and already hundreds of theater owners have taken advantage of this opportunity to increase their theaters in length and seating capacity adding to their profits at the same time.

The superior quality of GUNDLACH PROJECTION LENSES is recognized by the leading makers of machines and they will be supplied to order in place of the ordinary lens equipment at very little increase in price.

No matter how well satisfied you are with your picture we invite you to order a GUNDLACH PROJECTION LENS for trial to see the difference. Nearly all our lenses are sold to exhibitors who have ordinary lenses, but are looking for something better. In many cases a customer orders one lens for trial and then re-equips all his machines, sometimes the machines of several theaters.

GUNDLACH PROJECTION LENSES are used by the Kinemacolor Company of America because they must have the best.

THE IDOL OF THE HOUR

THE THANHOUSER THREE-A-WEEK

Sunday, March 9

Sunday, March 9

AN HONEST YOUNG MAN and PASADENA CHARIOT RACES

He was an honest young man! His father said so — to Her father. The young man wanted Her, of course. She was willin', but her pater wanted the youth to demonstrate his honesty. His father's say-so wasn't enough. So a test was made. In it, the young man weakened, wavered and then — pulled up. He showed himself honest! Why, wasn't totally to his credit, and it is the mysterious why and wherefore that the picture gives.

Tuesday, March 11

JUST A SHABBY DOLL

That's really all it was — a very shabby doll, but the memories that clustered about it meant much to one man. His little daughter found him in the library one evening with the disreputable-looking toy in his hands, and she asked him if dolls had again come to appeal to him. So he told her the true history of the shabby doll, and it interested her greatly, for she recognized as principals her very own parents.

Friday, March 14

THE IDOL OF THE HOUR

She was the idol of the hour, the toast of the town, with admirers galore — this pretty model. Her suitors were all of them men of wealth and standing, and yet she rejected all of them for the poor-enough artist, for whom she posed. He, again, rejected her for another. But the story is not of the conventional "scorned-by-the-one-man-she-loved" sort. The Thanhouser Twist puts in its appearance and you will be surprised at the odd ending to the tale.

Never has a production been staged so elaborately or a story visualized with such effectiveness. The atmosphere of the Gothic period veritably permeates each of the fifty artistic scenes. Every detail of the production has been under the masterful direction and supervision of Madame Alice Blache and the sets designed by Beaux Arts Graduates. Some of the scenes are revelations in lighting arrangement and light effects. A big punch at the Climax.

MADAME DU BARRY

is the name of our next release, which will be sold without restrictions in the open market. The film shows one of the love adventures of this bewitching woman, ending in disaster to the man who gained her affection. The story is one of those that take a grip on you from the first to the last foot, and make you wonder how it is possible to compress so many happenings into one reel. The film is hand-colored throughout, in a manner bewildering to the eye. The acting is superlatively good, Mlle. Napierkowska of the Paris opera impersonating Madame Du Barry, with other leading talent in support. Scenery and settings are superb, the opening scene showing a ball in progress, taken in the palace at Versailles. One and three-sheet posters are available for this film. Length about 1,000 feet. Price 12c. per foot, F. O. B. New York.

Read these synopses! Can you afford to be without such films?

"An Adventure on the Mexican Border"

A timely film story, dealing with the troops encamped on both sides of the border between the United States and Mexico. A lieutenant of the United States Army and a captain of the Mexican troops are silently battling for the love of a bright-eyed senorita. The captain is successful. The lieutenant in a fit of passionate anger tells his commanding officer of an alleged breach of the existing martial law by the Mexican captain. Complications follow, but a careful analysis of the situation prompts the lieutenant to release the imprisoned captain and return to face his punishment.

"Notre Dame"

A beautifully colored film based on Victor Hugo's literary masterpiece, "Notre Dame de Paris."

The tragic story into which the love and passions of Esmeralda, the gypsy beggar girl; Captain Phoebus of the King's Archers; Quasimodo, the old and deformed bellringer of Notre Dame Cathedral and Claude Frollo, the faithless Archdeacon of the Cathedral, are curiously interwoven, is given a production that for artistic merit and dramatic effect has never been surpassed. From the moment that Esmeralda. through her dancing, fires the heart of Frollo, to the climax, when Quasimodo throws him over the parapet to his death, there is not a scene in the three reels that does not hold the spectator tensely expectant.

"The Strength of Men"

A thrilling tale of the North Woods. Marie, the daughter of the foreman of the lumber camp, is loved by Jan Larose and Clarry O'Garry. The two men quarrel over the girl. Jan discovers gold, and stakes his claim. Clarry observes him in the act and decides to stake the claim as his own. A race to the Recorder's office and back again follows. The men are overtaken by a raging forest fire, and their race for gold becomes a fight for life. Jan is pinned under a falling tree, and Clarry's sight is blinded by fire. Enemies then become friends, and both men finally reach safety. When Marie later decides between them, Jan is the man of her choice. Clarry congratulates his former rival, and admits that the vital thing with him is to see Marie happy. The disputed claim is jointly worked by the two, and the past is all forgotten in the strength of brotherly love.

"Tamandra, the Gypsy"

Walter Clark and Beatrice Irving, cousins, are engaged, but Walter meets the gypsy Tamandra and they are married. Later she goes back to her tribe and a child is born to her. Ignorant of this fact and believing his wife dead, Walter and Beatrice arrange to be married. The untimely arrival of a message from Tamandra brings the wedding ceremony to an abrupt ending. Walter enters a monastery. Beatrice takes up work in the slums and meets Tamandra. The latter dies and Beatrice assumes the care of the child. While walking one day with the monks, Walter sees Beatrice and his child. A struggle between love and duty ensues, but duty finally conquers and he goes back with the others to the silent life of the monastery.

The single reels released through General Film Service are admittedly the best that the industry offers. # Facts and Comments

THE dealing in special sites for the erection of motion picture theaters is becoming a recognized department in all the big real estate offices in every part of the country. These offices have men on the watch for suitable sites in the future as well as in the present. It would surprise many an exhibitor to know to what extent this specializing in real estate is carried and how thorough and intimate is the knowledge of the motion picture business acquired by these realty specialists. They are familiar with the requirements of the city or State regulations touching motion pictures; they have studied the relation of space to seating capacity, and know not a little about the quality of films. They can guess to a shade what kind of service is good for this neighborhood and what is needed for that vicinity. It is no uncommon thing to find complete plans for a possible motion picture theater in a real estate office before building operations are commenced and before a purchaser has been sought. All of this shows to what an extent the commercial value of the picture has been appreciated by men who devote their lives to the study of commercial values.

Right here a serious question will suggest itself to the friend of the motion picture and to a student of present film conditions: Upon what foundation does this hopeful view of the future rest? What kind of pictures are to draw the thousands and tens of thousands into these new houses? We cannot help feeling that there is a happy optimism in these speculations, which on closer view might but too easily be "sicklied o'er with the pale cast of thought." Spread your net for quantity and it will come back to you filled to overflowing, but cast it over for quality and how meagre will be your returns! Is the average of quality falling or rising? Is there any danger of the tares choking the wheat? Can we shut our eyes to the fact that the output of cheap, stereotyped, monotonous and offensive pictures is alarmingly large? Perhaps the offensive pictures are on the decrease—we like to think so at any rate—but what of the cheap, the meaningless, threadbare and tiresome picture? How many pictures of today are worth screen-room, when we strike an average? There are thousands upon thousands of feet which demonstrate nothing in particular except the mental poverty and the lack of inventiveness of their producers. The new houses must have new pictures if they are to live and prosper. We do not mean new releases, but new varieties of releases.

LIGHT is breaking in the most unexpected of places. Puritanical Maine, with its record of narrowness, is seriously considering the advisability of allowing the exhibition of motion pictures on Sundays. A bill has been introduced into the House of Representatives of that State providing for a restricted Sunday entertainment of motion pictures. It is proposed to amend the Revised Statutes for that purpose by conferring the right of granting Sunday licenses to the authorities in each political subdivision of the State.

As this particular bill is well drawn and embodies the very suggestions which have been repeatedly made in these columns, it seems advisable to deal with its provisions more in detail. Here is the language of the proposed statute: "The Mayor of a city or the selectmen of a town may grant, upon such terms and conditions as they deem reasonable, a license for theatrical exhibitions, public motion picture shows and public entertainments to be held on the Lord's day as shall be in keeping with the character of the day and not inconsistent with its due observance, to which admission is obtained upon payment of money or some other pecuniary or valuable consideration." The measure would provide further that no such exhibition shall take place before one o'clock in the afternoon, and not at all unless the proposed public entertainment shall be approved in writing by the Mayor or the selectmen as being in keeping with the character of the day.

This seems to us an ideal bill. It is essentially in the nature of a referendum, for it leaves the final decision of the matter to the local authorities, which, of course, are in nine cases out of ten entirely amenable to and under the influence of local public sentiment. Such a bill is the best possible for the exhibitor, for it really places the whole power and responsibility in his hands. If he is able to select a proper Sunday program the approval of the authorities seems little more than a matter of form. It will be of incalculable value to the cause of kinematographic education, for then the educational picture will come into its own at least once every week. It will draw a class of people who will learn for the first time what a power for good the motion picture is able to exercise. This will mean new patrons for the rest of the week. We have no means of knowing just what the prospects of this bill are, but the very fact that it has been introduced is a good sign, and shows at least some public sentiment in favor of its passage.

THE complaints frequently heard from exhibitors as to the predominance of foreign pictures are not always well founded, but in one respect at least, they are entitled to immediate practical notice. The foreign producer seeking a market here puts a great burden upon the exhibitor when he gives him a picture which is unintelligible to the average American audience. Some of the foreign pictures, French, Italian, German and Danish, cannot be understood outside of those countries, simply because they deal with conditions which are peculiarly French, Italian, German or Danish. If manufacturers and importers of foreign films would bear this point in mind, they would earn the heartfelt thanks of every exhibitor in the country. What Americans like best in the foreign picture are the natural settings, the splendor of costume and spectacular features generally. They do not like, because they cannot understand, situations and plots which derive their point from peculiar European morals or peculiar European political institutions. Every once in a while a picture makes its appearance here, and it is a sore trial to the average exhibitor.

The A B C of Censorship

By W. Stephen Bush

As so many of the friends as well as the foes of the motion picture seem to be unable to graduate from the "kindergarten" class in censorship, we make no apology for taking up the A-B-C of this most mooted of questions.

Official censorship, i. e., censorship by the public authorities, is illegal and impossible. The scope of the proposed official censorship does not matter at all. The principle of it is equally vicious whether the censorship is planned for the nation or for the State or for any political subdivision of the State. We regard this point as fundamental and not subject to controversy or compromise.

The fundamental law of every State and of the United States guarantees freedom of expression as an inherent political right. The method of expression makes no difference; the printed and the spoken word are free and, logically, the pictured word must be equally free. In the one case the medium of expression is the printed page, in the other case it is the screen. We have the undoubted right to put on the moving picture screen whatever we like, being of course responsible for an abuse of this liberty. Take for example the language of the constitution of the State of New York, which is substantially the language of every other constitution in any of our States. Here are the words: "Every citizen may freely speak, write and publish his sentiments on all subjects, being responsible for the abuse of that right." Could anything be plainer? These words mean the freedom of the screen no less than the freedom of the press. The newspapers in this country have always freely used pictures, and the cartoon is esteemed one of the most effective weapons of modern journalism. As long as you do not libel a person you may draw and print and publish as many cartoons as you please. Has anyone ever heard of a censorship for cartoons? To be sure, if cartoons are immoral or indecent, there is plenty of law to deal with them, but who would have the hardihood to suggest that the cartoonist must submit his work to the police for approval? Who has ever heard of slides requiring the approval of the police before they can be shown on the screen? If the printed and the painted pictures share in the constitutional guarantees of freedom, why not the moving picture? To be sure, there have been men, and we are sorry to say there are men now, who abuse this liberty and turn out ultra-sensational, immoral, indecent and offensive films. Is that any reason why the decent picture-maker must submit his product to the police before he can display it upon the screen? The police, under laws now existing, have the right to deal with indecent and immoral pictures.

Of course, no one objects to a proper official supervision, but there is all the difference in the world between censorship and supervision. What we object to is the demand to have the films examined and passed upon before they are displayed upon the screen. Such a demand is in plain contravention of the constitutional guarantees. Freedom of speech and freedom of the press are nothing but variations of the freedom of expression. This freedom was gained after centuries of struggle. It is the result of the experience of one of the most progressive and enlightened races in the world's history. After all these centuries of experience both here and in England, we arrived at the conclusion that the benefits conferred by the freedom of expression will always outweigh the concomitant evils. A different view prevails in Russia and other despotic countries.

Now, when we may justly claim the franchises of the press, is it wise and self-respecting to be content with less? It is entirely possible that State censorship may for a year or two be satisfactory to the exhibitors of any particular State, but that does does not alter the fact that the principle of official censorship is absolutely unsound. At the very best, the motion picture would under such a condition of affairs be subject to the fluctuations of politics. It would mean as many different brands of censorship as there are States in the Union. No gigantic effort of the intellect is needed to see to what extent such a condition would hurt the whole industry. It would impose burdens and taxes without number on the exhibitor and on the producer. The most conscientious manufacturer, full of laudable ambition in his art and possessed of a keen sense of his moral responsibility in the premises, would have to suffer the same outrageous and degrading censorship as the unscrupulous panderer to vicious instincts.

If there is to be any censorship of the motion picture let it be from within and never from without. A judicious self-censorship is the plain solution of the whole problem. There is one studio at least where the censorship begins at home. If there is any reasonable doubt as to whether a play will look bad in the films, it never gets on the films at all. The pillars of effective censorship are the blue pencils of the director. How would a newspaper look if it were printed just the way it gets into the hands of the editor? It would not only be confusing and of frightful length, but the chances are it would be full of libels and other offensive features. The newspaper censors itself, and so must the motion picture.

The burden of unofficial censorship should not rest upon the shoulders of the exhibitor. The manufacturers have made a most laudable effort to have an unofficial censorship of national scope. If for any reasons the work of the individuals on this National Board of Unofficial Censors becomes unsatisfactory, the personnel may be changed, but the principle of voluntary censorship by the manufacturers themselves remains as sound as ever.

In the meantime we realize that there is a fight ahead for the motion picture interests. They must win their enfranchisement in the sweat of their brows, but of the ultimate result there can be no doubt whatever. Just as soon as an aggrieved exhibitor or manufacturer takes the question of censorship into court we will have a definition of the rights of kinematography which will lay the ghost of censorship forever and a day.

Sir Geo. Alexander told a good story to the select company at the opening ceremony of the New Gallery Kinema, in London. When the management asked him to officially open the theater they asked him, "What are your terms, are they your terms as an actor, an actor-manager, or as a music hall artist?" The reply was that in his capacity as actor-manager he would accept the promise that not less than fifty guineas should go to the League of Mercy. Sir Geo. and Lady Alexander then saw the first program of pictures put on the screen.

The unique distinction of being the first peeress to write a picture drama must be ascribed to the Marchioness Townshend, who perpetrated the scenario of "A Strong Man's Love," which will shortly be released by the Clarendon Company, of London. The Marchioness pays many high tributes to the picture theater and states that scenario work is most fascinating. I have also heard both Mr. Seymour Hicks and Miss Ellaline Teriss are about to enter into an arrangement for the taking of films of their principal plays and sketches.

United States vs. Motion Picture Patents Co.

Hearings Are Enlivened By Spirited Clashes—Lewis Swaab of Philadelphia Recites His Grievances—William Fox, William Devery, James L. Carlton and A. H. Sawyer Heard on the Stand.

THE taking of testimony in the suit of the United States against the Motion Picture Patents Company and others is about half finished. At the conclusion of the last hearing, which occupied three days and ended on March 1, Mr. Grosvenor, counsel for the government, told a representative of the Moving Picture World that in his opinion the proceedings have nearly reached the half-mile mark.

"We do not expect to resume these hearings," said Mr. Grosvenor, "until I return from my engagements in the West. For the next ten days I will be busy with the action of the United States against the National Harvester Company, which is set down for argument in the United States Circuit Court at Omaha, Neb. I expect to resume the hearings against the Patents Company on March 17 at the Hotel McAlpin in this city. We will then have continuous sessions lasting for two weeks or perhaps longer. I do not expect any of the future hearings to be held in Philadelphia."

Mr. Grosvenor was asked what the prospects were for the final argument and decision in the United States Circuit Court in Philadelphia. He replied that he hoped to be able to submit the case in the early summer, but was not any too sanguine about it.

At the hearings just concluded most of the evidence adduced referred to the time when the General Film Company bought and absorbed the various film exchanges licensed by the Motion Picture Patents Company.

Swaab Recites His Grievances.

The most sensational testimony in connection with these events was given by Lewis M. Swaab, a well-known film exchange man of Philadelphia. After the witness had testified that he had been in the motion picture business for fifteen years, six years as an employee of S. Lubin and nine years on his own account, the examiner took him to the time of the signing of the Edison agreement in 1908. Swaab told of a meeting of about sixty film exchanges in the Hotel Imperial, where the secretary of the Film Service Association, Mr. Dwight McDonald, recommended the signing of the proposed agreement. Witness said that a majority of the exchange men opposed the agreement and that a committee was appointed to confer with the manufacturers to see whether some of the provisions of the agreement could not be modified. Nothing came of this effort, and there being no adequate supply of films in sight the exchange men signed the agreement, though they were opposed to it. Witness declared that before the formation of the Motion Picture Patents Company the exchanges in Philadelphia had been in keen competition. He said that after becoming a licensee under the new agreement in 1909 he always lived up to all the terms of the agreement. Witness then submitted some correspondence with the Motion Picture Patents Company which had taken place in May, 1910. From this it appeared that Swaab had been fined a hundred dollars for an alleged violation of the "release day rule." He said he had supplied the Wizard Theater in Baltimore with a first run and in order to get the reel to Baltimore in time for exhibition he had been compelled to send it out of his office five or ten minutes before eight o'clock. The rule of the Motion Picture Patents Company provided that there could be no release until after eight o'clock. Swaab finally paid the fine under protest.

Q. How much film did you buy per week in 1909 and 1910? A. From 23 to 24 reels per week, paying about a hundred dollars a reel.

Q. Was your business prosperous? A. It was.

Q. What became of the other Licensed exchanges in Philadelphia? A. They were bought by the General Film Company about May, 1910.

Q. Was one of these exchanges owned by Lubin? A. Yes. Siegmund Lubin, the manufacturer.

Q. Did you know him personally? A. I had been in his employ for six years. In the summer of 1910 he sent for me three different times and spoke to me in reference to selling my exchange. I went to see him in his office at 926 Market Street. He told me the Patents Company was going to take care of me; that he and I would control the film situation in Philadelphia. I asked him just how this was to be done, but he would not go into any details

Q. Did you have any conversation with Mr. J. A. Berst, of Pathe Freres, the vice-president of the General Film Company? A. Yes, in the summer of 1910. This was after the other three exchanges had been sold to the General Film Company. One of his salesmen told me Mr. Berst wanted to see me. I went over to New York and saw Mr. Berst, who introduced me to Mr. Waters, who introduced me to Mr. Kennedy. I was asked whether I wanted to sell and I said "Yes." Mr. Kennedy said he could not make an estimate of the value of my business without an examination of the records, so we went to 80 Fifth Avenue. After a little while I was taken into a private office, while Mr. Waters and Mr. Kennedy went into an adjoining room. After a while Mr. Waters and Mr. Kennedy came out and I was offered $37,000 for my exchange.

Q. How much were you earning through your exchange at that time? A. About $25,000 to $30,000 a year.

Witness then went on to tell that he felt he could no longer stand the competition of the General Film Company in Philadelphia and for that reason was inclined to sell, but he wanted a little time to consider and to talk the matter over with his counsel. Mr. Kennedy, according to the witness, would not hear of any delay. He told witness he could not leave the room without either accepting or rejecting the offer made by the General Film Company through Kennedy. Witness said he finally accepted and asked that he be allowed to continue until September 1. This was agreed to by Kennedy. Later witness asked for a contract of sale in writing, saying that he wanted to submit the paper to his legal adviser. Kennedy would not accede to this, and after some correspondence between witness and the General Film Company the sale was called off. In December of 1910, witness said, he was accused of sub-renting and of failing to furnish to the General Film Company the name and address of an exhibitor whom he was supplying with film. He denied both allegations and asked for an opportunity to disprove them. The witness said:

I received a letter from the Motion Picture Patents Co. to the effect that I must show cause why my license should not be canceled for these alleged violations of the License exchange agreement. The letter also assured me that I would be given an opportunity to be heard in my own defense. I went to New York and called on H. N. Marvin, the vice-president of the Motion Picture Patents Company, to present my defense.

Q. Did you get an opportunity to do this? A. None whatsoever. Marvin took me into a room and began reading the License exchange agreement to me, not only the parts I was said to have violated, but every single paragraph in the agreement. I tried to interrupt him and get in my explanation but he kept on reading the agreement to me and I could not stop him. I stayed there about an hour, and as I could not offer my defense, I returned to Philadelphia. A few days later, on January 4, I received notice that my license had been canceled and I was ordered to return all reels in my possession within twenty days. On January 24, 1911, four men from the Motion Picture Patents Company and four deputy sheriffs walked into my place of business and put me out of business in about three hours. All ten of the Licensed manufacturers had brought writs of replevin against me. One of the men went behind my counter and grabbed the reels and another took them and handed them to the deputies. While this was going on, customers came in with reels in their cans and the men from the Patents Company stopped them and took the reels out of their cans.

"Predatory Acts and Unfair Means."

Here the counsel for the defendants made emphatic protests against the reception of this evidence, buttressing their objections with all kinds of legal phraseology. Counsel for the government declared that the evidence was entirely proper "as showing the predatory acts of the defendants and their employment of unfair means," and the evidence went in subject to the later decision of the court as to its admissibility. Witness was asked whether he had begun action against the licensed manufacturers to recover the value of the reels taken from him, and he replied in the affirmative, saying that one of these actions, the suit against Lubin, had been brought to trial, and that he, the witness, had recovered a verdict of $1,800 against Lubin. Mr. Swaab will be cross-examined later, as counsel for the defense were not prepared to go on with the cross-examination at the end of his direct testimony.

Fox Told He Was a Splinter.

Another witness at the hearing was William Fox, president of the Greater New York Film Rental Company. In some respects the story of Fox resembled the testimony given by the witness Swaab. He told how he was sent for by Mr. Waters, the confidential man of Mr. Kennedy, and was asked whether he did not care to sell out his exchange. This was in September, 1911. Fox, who, according to his estimate, was earning not less than $60,000 a year from his rental exchange, declined to sell unless he got an amount proportionate to the earnings. He said that Kennedy offered him $89,000, which he declined. The offer, witness said, was tentatively raised to $150,000 and was again declined. The witness testified that Waters professed surprise at his temerity in defying the wishes of the General Film Company and told him that he was "only a splinter, a stumbling block in the way of this gigantic organization." A short time after that the license of the Greater New York Film Rental Company was canceled by the Motion Picture Patents Company.

The cross-examination of Mr. Fox was marked by spirited passages between himself and the counsel of the defendants. At one stage of the proceedings one of the lawyers complained that they were losing time, to which the witness replied "that the lawyers in the case ought to be glad to be here anyway." When at another time the witness declined to answer a question in the categorical way insisted on by the lawyers, one of the latter threatened to have the witness taken into court and punished. The witness seemed to be quite amused at this and shouted back at the lawyers that "they could not begin quick enough to suit him." After this episode the cross-examination proceeded in a more quiet and orderly manner. It elicited nothing worthy of record and was often tiresome and apparently without purpose.

There was also a further cross-examination of the witness Swanson, which was equally futile and brought out nothing new. The new attorney conducting this cross examination went over exactly the same ground as the old attorney. Despite the repeated objection of the counsel for the government the record was incumbered with all this dreary repetition.

James L. Carlton, a mechanical engineer and technical expert now in the employ of the Universal Film Company, was another witness before the examiner. His testimony related solely to technical matters, and at the request of Mr. Grosvenor he gave a detailed description of the processes of kinematography from the preparation of the film to the projection upon the screen. He also explained at great length the mechanism and the history of projection machines. There was no cross-examination of this witness.

The Plaint of Kinemacolor.

He was followed by Arthur H. Sawyer, who described himself as the manager of Kinemacolor in this country. He explained that the Kinemacolor Company of America was the exclusive licensee of a Delaware corporation which controlled the Urban-Smith patents in this country. Witness briefly described who Smith and Urban were, describing Urban as an "American, who has lived in England for a number of years." Witness in answer to questions put by Mr. Grosvenor described the Kinemacolor processes and emphasized the difference between hand-colored pictures and Kinemacolor pictures. Witness declared that there was a great demand for Kimenacolor pictures in the best types of houses, but as most of the best type of houses were using licensed service he found it impossible to supply them. They were not allowed by the Patents Company to exhibit any independent films, among which were included the Kinemacolor productions. Witness added that he did not mean to say there were no high class houses using the independent service, but the big theaters, such as were owned by Keith or Proctor and which were devoted to both vaudeville and pictures, had been warned that if they used independent pictures with licensed films the licenses for all their houses on the circuit would be revoked. Interrogated as to the character of Kinemacolor films, witness testified that they were largely of an educational character and instanced "The Coronation," "The Durbar," "The War in the Balkans," and "The Panama Canal." He said that his company had received many applications for Kinemacolor from licensed houses. Witness said that the refusal of the Patents Company to allow the exhibition of Kinemacolor pictures together with licensed pictures had crippled them and prevented their expansion.

The Troubles of the Imperial Film Exchange.

The last witness was William Devery, formerly manager of the Imperial Film Exchange. He told in detail of the extent and the connections of the Imperial Film Exchange, how it became a licensee of the Motion Picture Patents Company and how prosperous all its branches were. In answer to further questions by Mr. Grosvenor witness declared that the Imperial Film Exchange had always scrupulously observed all the provisions of the agreement under which it had obtained its license. He said that charges were preferred against the Exchange for having supplied the Winter Garden, an unlicensed house, with a certain reel of Biograph make. This, witness said, was made the subject of a personal investigation by Mr. Kennedy, who called at the office of the Imperial Film Exchange and demanded to see the four Biograph reels of a certain subject with which the exchange had been supplied. One of these four reels, it had been claimed, had been supplied to the Winter Garden. Only three of the reels could be found and Mr. Kennedy told the exchange managers "that they had a lot of crooks working for them." Later witness said it was shown that the missing reel had been sent to Porto Rico. The license of the Imperial Film Company was thereupon canceled. The witness continued:

> To keep our customers we continued to pay the weekly royalty of $2 for them. We thought possibly matters might be adjusted and it would be well to have the royalties paid up to date. It availed nothing, however, for the Licensed companies forced us into bankruptcy. Upon their petition a receiver was appointed and he took charge of our business, which had been reduced in value through the action of the defendants. They had notified every one of our exhibitors and every exchange even. We were cut off from the only available source of film supply.
> Q. Did you ever try to get back the royalties you sent as you told before? A. Yes, we wrote several times about that to the Patents Company and asked for a return of these moneys.
> Q. Did you ever get any of it back? A. No, not a cent, but the receiver got a letter from the Patents Company urging him to pay more royalties.

Witness went on to tell of the trial of the action in bankruptcy. He told Mr. Grosvenor that after a hearing before the referee in bankruptcy, the petition of the creditors, who were the defendants in the present proceeding, was dismissed and the bankruptcy terminated. The petitioners, witness said, took an appeal in the matter to the Circuit Court of Appeals, and that court sustained the findings of the referee against the creditors. W. S. B.

MR. PONTING BRINGS CAPTAIN SCOTT FILMS.

Mr. Ponting, the photographing artist with the British Antarctic Expedition, will arrive in New York, March 12, on the Kaiser Wilhelm with a complete new series of films of Captain Scott's expedition to the South Pole. The pictures will show the entire work of the expedition from the time of reaching the Antarctic right up to the final polar journey. The last scenes illustrate the daily camping life of Captain Scott's immediate group, the members of which later met such an unprecedentedly tragic fate in the Southern wastes.

We understand Mr. Ponting is the only authorized representative of the British Antarctic Expedition and that he has sole powers to negotiate with those seeking American rights. He announces that he will take suitable action against all parties who may be concerned in the duplication of the films recently shown, which it is said merely show the preliminary stages of the expedition and of the voyage to the Antarctic, where the real work began.

TAKING PICTURES UNDER DIFFICULTIES.

David Miles and the Kinemacolor stock company in California recently ascended Mt. Lowe for the purpose of taking some motion pictures with real cloudland scenery. Scarcely had they taken the pictures and were preparing to return to Los Angeles when a heavy snowstorm caught them and made the descent impossible. Always prepared for emergencies on these field expeditions, Mr. Miles established a camp for his company in some deserted log cabins, where they lived very comfortably for three days. By that time the food supply was running low, and although almost snowed in, they managed to send a messenger on snow shoes to the nearest telegraph station. The relief expedition from the Hollywood headquarters of the Kinemacolor Company found that Mr. Miles had drafted a realistic new scenario, founded on memories of Whittier's "Snowbound" with scenic settings like one of Bret Harte's Sierra stories, and the half-famished actors had played their parts with such genuine feeling and appreciation of the situation that it was pronounced one of the finest productions of the Kinemacolor stock company—much better, in fact, than the story which they originally started out to take.

ROAD SHOWS FOR KINEMACOLOR.

Such a success has the Kinemacolor representation of "The Making of the Panama Canal" and "Actual Scenes of the Balkan War" proved at the Carnegie Lyceum, New York, the Kinemacolor Company of America has decided to send out two road shows to play at the regular prices of first-class theatrical attractions. The Eastern show opens at the Tremont Temple, Boston, on March 17, and the Western show opens at the Olympic Theater, Cincinnati, on March 16. Each of these shows will be an exact duplicate of the show now running at the Carnegie Lyceum and will be accompanied by a competent speaker to supply explanatory comment in regard to the Balkan War and the Canal.

BERNARD M. CORBETT WITH MOTIOGRAPH.

Bernard M. Corbett, formerly of the Thomas A. Edison, Inc., of Orange, N. J., but now with the sales department of the Enterprise Optical Manufacturing Company of Chicago, announces that he has installed the latest 1913 improved model Motiograph, with motor drive, and known as the Massachusetts Special, in the Majestic Theater, Buffalo. At the smoker of the Buffalo Local of the Exhibitors' League held on February 26 the 1913 model Motiograph came in for a lot of favorable comment from the exhibitors.

A MOTION PICTURE ADVERTISING COMPANY.

F. E. Nemic, of St. Cloud, Minn., president of the Princess Theater Circuit Company, is the president of a newly organized company to be known as the National Motion Picture Advertising Company. The company will manufacture films showing views of big manufacturing plants and exhibit them in theaters for advertising purposes.

"The Hero-Coward" (Essanay)

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

PRODUCER WHARTON and an Eastern company of Essanay's have given us a photoplay with a strong punch in "The Hero-Coward," which will be released March 28th. And this is acomplished without the usual sentimental element. There is no love-making, but there are tender scenes between a strong man, who has been misjudged, and his good, old mother, and these stir one strongly as they recall past associations.

E. H. Calvert appears in the title role (Frank Wallace), and his acting throughout is in admirable keeping with the part. The struggle between Wallace and the desperate criminal Snell (Wm. Bailey) is terrific in its fury. Miss Helen Dunbar gives a fine portrayal of Mrs. Wallace, the hero's mother.

Frank Wallace, a police officer, was injured in early childhood by a runaway horse and ever afterwards was afraid of encountering one. Once it became his duty as an officer to stop a runaway, whose rider was in imminent peril, but the old fear seized him and he was reported to the chief as being guilty of cowardice. He admitted his offense, without referring to his early experience, and was discharged from the force.

Scene from "The Hero-Coward" (Essanay).

He is utterly cast down, but his mother consoles and comforts him and gradually restores his confidence in himself. In the course of time he secures employment as elevator man in an office building. One day a criminal named Snell breaks away from two officers, who are taking him to a cell, and seeks refuge in the building in which Wallace works. He is closely pursued by the police and, hard pressed, jumps into Wallace's car and asks to be taken down. Wallace refuses and is immediately shot in the back by the desperado. He soon recovers from the shock and engages in a desperate hand-to-hand encounter with Snell as the car goes downward. Wallace succeeds in overcoming Snell and when the car stops at the ground floor he delivers his prisoner to the waiting officers.

During convalescence Wallace is visited by his old chief and several officers of the force. The chief has learned from Wallace's mother of the accident in his youth, and noting his determined and persistent bravery in the capture of Snell, he decides to restore him to the force with the rank of sergeant.

"The Lesson" (American)

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

THE American's second Western company has been very successful in the portrayal of the characters in "The Lesson," a full reel photoplay with a good story. The characters number only four, and they have been very happily assigned. Miss Carmen Sobranes, a most captivating looking girl, plays the part of the country maid, who throws her rustic lover over for a well dressed stronger from the city. The country boy is in the care of Edward Coxen, who gives us some fine illustrations of the art of expressing emotions by facial changes. Chester Withey appears as the father of the girl and wins our approbation by his dignified characterization. The stranger from town is well depicted by George Field.

Scene from "The Lesson" (American).

Sue Thompson and Ned Williams are rustic sweethearts. Sue is quite satisfied with her country lover until a stranger from the city, Herbert Randolph, chances to stop at her father's little inn, while on an automobiling trip. Randolph is struck by Sue's pretty face and makes up his mind to pass some time at the inn.

Fickle Sue draws a comparison between the well-bred, well-groomed Randolph and poor Ned, with the result that the latter is held at a distance, while she smiles at the attentions of the city-bred youth. Her father shows disapproval of her course by his looks and manner, for he knows that Ned is the better mate for his only child.

The gulf between Sue and Ned gradually widens and he is seldom permitted to see her alone. He has grown to hate Randolph with his sneering face and well-bred ease. On one occasion he comes between his old sweetheart and Randolph, and is about to administer chastisement, but he is ordered right about face by Sue, and retires in deep humiliation.

Sue had grown to love the handsome stranger and eagerly awaited his naming of the date for their marriage. One day a letter arrived at the inn for Randolph, and, to her surprise, he informed her that he must go East on urgent business, without stating when he would return or giving his city address. He left shortly afterwards. In deep distress, Sue chanced to catch sight of a letter which had dropped from Randolph's pocket. Reading it she discovered that he was a married man and that the letter was from his wife.

"The Lesson" will be released on March 20th.

Remarkable Civil War Picture.

To Be Released by Selig Polyscope Company, March 24th, In Two Reels.

A new, special, two-reel, war time play, "Pauline Cushman, the Federal Spy," will be released by the Selig Polyscope Company on March 24th, and it promises to be one of the most important feature productions of the season. History has been followed with unusual care for exactitude in details, and woven in with a big romance that never allows interest to flag for a moment. It was a happy discovery to find a heroine so dashing and so distinctive as this modern Valkyrie, who deserted the feverish sentimentality of the theatrical footlights to frequently dare death on the battle field or on the dangerous debatable ground "between the lines." As an actual fact, she was twice sentenced to death by Confederate officers and many times made wonderful escapes.

Scene from "Pauline Cushman" (Selig).

The truth of the story has been attested to by many Grand Army officials who have manifested an unusual interest in this masterly and massive production. The Selig people have won an enviable position for themselves in the field of features and a Selig "masterpiece" is always looked forward to with exceeding interest. Over 1,000 extra people were utilized in the present mammoth production and several thousands of dollars were expended on the elaborate staging of gigantic interior and battle field settings.

NEW FEATURE FILM DISTRIBUTOR.

The Fidelity Film Company, 145 West Forty-fifth Street and 1202 Race Street, Philadelphia, is entering the field with a feature release each week. Their representative has just returned from London, after closing arrangements with the Moving Picture Sales Agency, one of the largest film distributors in the world. The company will be ready to show its first offerings at its New York office next week. The policy will be to show every production in advance so that purchasers can make a selection and secure every benefit of advance notices. Ample paper of all sizes will be at the disposal of all state right buyers. The Moving Picture Sales Agency buys the world's rights to all productions it handles and will assign American and Canadian rights to the Fidelity Film Company, who will absolutely protect the copyright on all its releases in this country.

Moving Pictures in Opera.

Battle Scenes Taken by Kalem Company Used in the Production of Sousa's "The American Maid."

Through the introduction of motion pictures a striking piece of realism is presented in John Philip Sousa's latest opera, "The American Maid," which had its New York premier at the Broadway Theater, Monday night, March 3.

In the third act the stage setting represents a location in Cuba during the hostilities of 1898 and a large troop of American soldiers, under the command of a young lieutenant, marches off stage. Their progress is immediately taken up by motion pictures and the audience sees the troop pass along the tropical road. A change of scene depicts a large body of Spaniards in possession of a blockhouse, and as the Americans approach they are fired upon. A charge is made up the hill and one can almost hear the Mausers flying through the air. The color bearer is shot down and the young lieutenant, the hero of the day, rallies his troops and leads the men to a hand-to-hand combat with the enemy. The Americans carry the day and the soldiers march out of the picture, back to the stage. The pictures and the stage setting, as well as the marching order of the soldiers, have been arranged with such skill that the illusion is perfect.

The Kalem Company, which specializes on military productions, made the motion picture scenes in Florida, in accordance with specifications furnished by Mr. Sousa, and the tropical locations are very impressive. Several companies of the state militia and a complete hospital corps were engaged for this work and the fineness of the trained military men is apparent.

CINES AND ECLIPSE NOTES.

George Kleine's releases for the week ending March 8th consist of two highly entertaining comedies and a splendid drama, thus offering a well-balanced program. A story of intense heart interest and one which will hold the rapt attention of young and old is offered in "His Grandchild," the Cines release of Tuesday, March 4th, which was reviewed in the Moving Picture World of March 8th.

"The Lost Wager" is the title of the Wednesday Eclipse. It contains a rather unusual plot and teaches a little moral lesson quite effectively. A wealthy nobleman becomes dissatisfied with the luxury and ease of his everyday life and to create a little excitement at his club makes a wager that he can live a month as a roustabout without spending a penny that he does not earn. Dressed in his old clothes he succeeds in carrying out his purpose, living on what he can earn in doing all sorts of odd jobs, but on the last evening of his allotted time, he is tricked into losing his bet by a base deception.. However, returning to his club he gladly pays the wager, but complacently announces that he has gained some things more valuable to him during this month of toil—health and happiness.

On the same reel is an interesting travelogue subject entitled "Picturesque Spalato," which spreads before us many beautiful sights in and about the town and some magnificent sunset scenes on the Adriatic Sea.

"The Girl and the Horseshoe" is the Saturday Cines, describing how a pretty girl finds a horseshoe and depends upon it to bring her good luck. It does, but not at first nor just as anticipated. The various incidents come very unexpectedly and keep the audience in suspense to the very last.

On the same reel is a highly amusing comedy entitled "Winning Smiles." It tells of a young fellow who goes out in search of smiles upon pretty womens' faces, but his attentions invariably meet with most disastrous results. He finally concludes that smiles are generally dangerous and whenever a lady approaches he makes himself scarce.

HAYES BUILDING NEW THEATER.

John F. Hayes, of 2420 Oxford Street, Philadelphia, Pa., has just bought a plot of ground on the south side of Girard Avenue above 61st Street, Philadelphia, upon which he is to build a first class moving picture theater. Mr. Hayes says that the people of that section of Philadelphia will be proud of the house. The dimensions of the land purchase are 150 feet by 110 feet.

POWER'S CAMERAGRAPH INSTALLATIONS.

I. W. Smith, of Lynche's Theater, Woonsocket, R. I., has purchased two No. 6A Power's cameragraphs through the R. D. Harson Moving Picture Company, of Boston.

The new Lyric Theater, controlled by the Fox Amusement Company, was opened in Bridgeport, Conn., this week. A Power's cameragraph No. 6 was installed.

"The Pride of the South"

Three-Reel Kay-Bee Release.

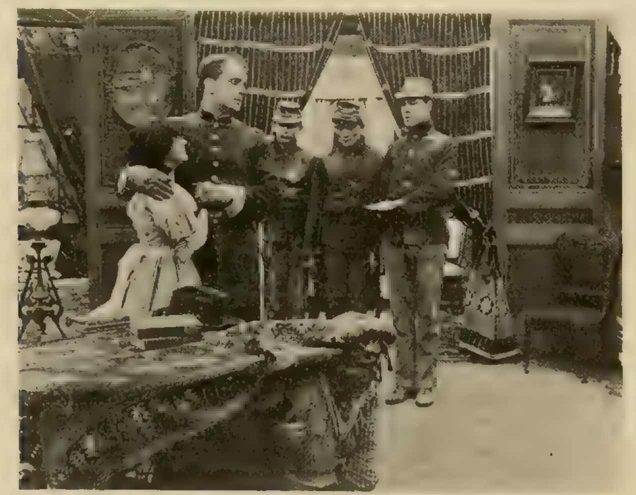
Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

IN this beautiful play Director Ince raises his curtain at a critical period of his story, where separate lines have converged, with a result that interest is strongly enlisted from the beginning, and it is held through a running fire of battle scenes straight to the artistic conclusion. Interest is concentrated on a small group of characters, not frittered away on subsidiary personages, and the battle scenes are so short, so swift, so tremendous in action, and so cleverly used in contrast with those of the touching story that there is no lapse in the tension though a dangerous lapse of years, so fatal in most stories, is an essential feature. While the photodrama presents a series of episodes, they grow out of each other plausibly enough, almost as if by preordained necessity, and they lead up to scenes of unusual tenderness at the end.

"The Pride of the South" is one of those stories so dependent on characterization that it would be of small account without it. Colonel Mosby, widowed father of a pretty daughter named Diane, has such an unreasonable estimate of his own superiority and is so overbearing in his treatment of others that he well represents that much vaunted pride of the South that went before a fall. For all that he is high-tempered, stern and unforgiving; he is a man of courage and splendid spirit, ready to fight to the bitter end for "The Cause" to which he is passionately devoted. His distinctive qualities are enforced with great skill until we know what to expect of him when he receives information from General Lee that war is declared, together with orders to join his regiment, and he finds that Diane has become engaged to a young Northern officer. The latter becomes an object of utter detestation in the eyes of Mosby, nor will the old man be moved by his daughter's prayers. He is an irreconcilable. The young people are commanded to see each other no more, but love finds a way. The tide of war sweeps over Colonel Mosby's own plantation, and Diane is united in marriage to the man of her choice by a chaplain of the Northern Army. Even as this occurs, Colonel Mosby, alarmed about his daughter, penetrates the Union lines to assure himself of her safety and encounters many perilous adventures on the way. He arrives too late. The marriage has been consummated. He comes upon his daughter and her husband in each other's arms and attempts to take the lives of both.



Scene from "The Pride of the South" (Kay-Bee).

So bitter, so implacable is the old man, so wild and extravagant in his devotion to the cause, that his hate is transferred to his disobedient daughter, and Diane is driven from the house with orders never to return. In the fearful scenes of carnage that follow, both men fall desperately wounded and the Northern husband dies within sight of his wife's home. She finds his body, and a pitiful scene quickens sympathy for her. She is dragged away by an old negro mammy and given shelter in one of the shanties, henceforth her only home. Mosby recovers from his wounds after losing one arm, but his wounded pride is not to be cured after the war is over. He is not to be moved by the petitions of his body servant in his daughter's behalf, so Diane lives on in the shanty with the negro mammy. There she becomes the mother of a beautiful little girl, and the child grows up with the pickaninnies for playmates.

Little Diane is bound to meet her grandfather in the course of time, and when she does so she becomes the object of sympathetic interest. She clashes with him before her identity is revealed. A little barefoot girl of great beauty, a wild rose, she invades his property and plays on the steps of his house with two little coons. The tiny blacks runs when the stern old man comes to drive them away with uplifted cane, but the white child stands her ground and defies him to do his worst. The fighting blood of the race boils in her veins at the idea that God's little ones may not play where they list, and she gives the stony-hearted old man a piece of her mind with a spirit and courage that penetrates his egotism and stirs his admiration. He makes inquiries about the little dare-devil and learns that she is his own grandchild. Finding that she has left her shoes behind, he picks them up and carries them to where she is playing in the field. He gradually wins her confidence and induces her to return to the house.

Because of an admirable selection of types and because of fine characterization, the scenes that follow between inexorable old Mosby and his grandchild are very affecting. In all the years that I have reviewed plays I have never reproached the actors—where there are no great actors there are no great parts—and I am always glad to recognize them where I can, but I do not know the name of the man who impersonated Col. Mosby in this photodrama, nor that of the child who performed her role to perfection, so I must impersonally compliment them. By their own personality, quite as much as by the training given them, they stimulated interest to the highest point. It is only to be regretted that the author of the play did not see that here was a chance for conflict more exciting than that depicted in the splendid battle scenes.

I do not insist that conflict is absolutely essential to the drama, but that between will and will should be made as intense as possible. The unforgiving old man could have been made to hold out defiantly against reconciliation with his daughter even more strongly until his granddaughter used his own methods of brutality, such as by striking him with one of his weapons, but the characterization is exceptionally good as it is. He yields at last and goes to the shanty where Diane lies in fever and delirium. She raves in her sickness, but not of him. She no longer cares about him. Her thoughts traverse the weary years to the few bright moments she knew in the arms of the Northern officer she loved. Realizing that her portion of happiness has been meagre indeed, Col. Mosby breaks down at her bedside, to which he has been induced to come by his plucky grandchild, and there his own heart breaks in one of the most affecting scenes ever thrown on the screen. Not only is the motive of the play beautiful, but the atmosphere is clean, wholesome and far superior to the ordinary run of photodramas.

ANDERSON MAKING REMARKABLE HEADWAY IN THE WEST.

G. M. Anderson, the great "Broncho Billy," since returning to the Golden West, has made wonderful progress in photoplays. Only seven days has elapsed since he arrived at Niles, Cal., and in that short period of time he "turned out" three corking good "Alkali" Ike pictures, and two "Broncho Billys." It is the opinion of the Eastern studio that they work by moonlight in the West. The most appreciable and exceedingly eccentric and hilarious comedy constructed and produced ready for exhibitors on a minute's notice is "Alkali Ike's Homecoming." For a laugh-getting, side-splitting comedy of errors, this comedy of errors, this one is a masterpiece.

COLEMAN BROTHERS OPEN NEW HOUSE.

Coleman Brothers, of New York City, have opened another picture theater in the Bronx. The new house is named Coleman's Theater and it is situated at the corner of Westchester Avenue and One hundred and Fifty-sixth Street, the Bronx. On the opening night, February 1, 1,500 people attended. The theater has a seating capacity of 1,200 persons and the proprietors say that it is the biggest house in Bronx borough. Coleman brothers are also the proprietors and managers of the Avenue Theater, Third Avenue and One Hundred and Forty-fifth Street, the Bronx. Both houses are reaping a splendid harvest of "greenbacks" for the owners.

PALMER LEASES HOUSE.

G. L. Palmer, of Sidney, N. Y., has leased the Arcade Theater in Deposit, N. Y., and will open it in a few weeks. Motion pictures will be the main attraction, but it is Mr. Palmer's intention of giving a legitimate offering once a month.

Photoplaywriters Hold Second Dinner

Many Interesting Speeches From Many Angles—An Inquest Club Is Organized—Representatives Present from Chicago, Boston and Hartford—It Is a Most Pleasant Occasion.

THE Photoplaywrights held their second dinner at the Taverne Louis, Twenty-third Street and Broadway, on Saturday evening, March 1. Like its predecessor, it was a real time. There were good things to eat, and, still better, many interesting talks by leaders in their lines of endeavor, from the hardened and toughened scenario writer, including the founder of the Photoplayers, with a record for the last six months of fifty-four accepted scripts, ten of which he has personally produced; from the stern scenario editor, from the director, aptly described by Mr. Brenon as the "court of last resort"; from the critic, and from an authority on projection. Letters were read from James Carroll, the winner of the Powers prize contest of last year, and the Rev. Sydney S. Booth, of Waterville, Me., whose last picture, Edison's "The Minister's Temptation," has received such unstinted praise. A result of the dinner is the formation of the Inquest Club, which will hold stated meetings for the discussion of photoplaywriting. One of the interesting announcements of the evening was the statement that the Famous Players intend to release one feature every week. Mr. Schulberg aroused the enthusiasm of the diners when he said that the company would pav the highest prices on record for two and three reel scripts.

Epes Winthrop Sargent, the founder of the Photoplaywrights, was toastmaster, aided by his associate leader of the Inquest Club, the Rev. E. Boudinot Stockton. Mr. Sargent talked between speeches, emphasizing salient points of the preceding remarks, and kept things moving. The speech that aroused the diners more than any other was that of W. Stephen Bush. Mr. Bush was not in serious mood. Far from it. His remarks were adapted to that peculiar condition which at times will threaten with apathy a gathering which feels it is about to suffer from a plethora of heavy discourse. Mr. Bush's first sentence brought a hearty laugh, and the mirth was continuous throughout his scintillating talk. Spirited addresses were made by Herbert Brenon from the director's standpoint and by F. H. Richardson, who pleaded for the operator. Others who spoke were Marc Edmund Jones, of Chicago; Cora Drew, of Boston; Henry Albert Phillips, William Edward Blaisdell, Frank J. Sheedey, of Schenectady; Phil Lang, William Robert Daly, and "Bennie" Schulberg.

Mr. Jones told of the formation in Chicago, four months ago, of an Inquest Club. While there are only four members, much has been accomplished in the way of mutual assistance. Meetings are held every two weeks. "Whenever there is a release of a picture by one of our members," said Mr. Jones, "we make it a point to see it together. We afterward hold an inquest and tell the author why his picture is rotten."

Mr. Sargent then launched the Inquest Club for New York. The first meeting will be at the Herald Square Theater at 7:30 on March 10.

Mr. Bush was the next speaker. He admitted his trepidation confronted as he was by confessed scenario writers. He expressed his gratification that everyone had some other prospective and respective occupation—else indeed would the sanity of the nation be seriously menaced. "As confession seems to be in order," Mr. Bush said in the course of his remarks, "I am going to make one." He told how he had submitted two scenarios and how they were accepted. "Fortunately," continued the speaker, amid the laughter of his hearers, "neither of them has so far been produced upon the screen, although they were accepted and I received the checks nearly two years ago. Believe me, this has been a sore blow to my pride. I have been watching the progress of that studio for two years—was even tempted upon one occasion to rush upon that studio and demand that its controllers complete my productions or else I would demand their return. I have felt that I have been a martyr." Mr. Bush's philosophic reflection at the close of his talk indicated his changed frame of mind: "A check in the hand is better than two scenarios in the bush."

Mr. Richardson spoke for the operators. "The work of you gentlemen," he said, "lies in the hands of the operators. The photoplaywright may be one of the world's best. He may create a play that is excellent; the producer may spend any sum in making that play; it may turn out splendid in photography, the settings may be magnificent, and the acting superb—but when it is sent to the projection room and put into the hands of a ten-dollar operator, what happens to your beautiful work? It comes out in jumping and dancing figures and is ruined. The result is always the same if pictures are handled by incompetent operators." Mr. Richardson said he had labored for three years for improved conditions for operators and for better pay to the end that better men might be secured and the good ones encouraged.

Mr. Sargent enlarged upon Mr. Richardson's remarks. He pointed out how if a poor operator may through indifferent projection spoil a picture, on the other hand a picture that may be injured through careless work on the part of a cameraman may be saved by a good operator. "In the last resort," he said, "the picture is right if the operator is right; if the operator is wrong the picture is wrong."

Mr. Sargent next introduced William Edward Blaisdell as the junior photoplaywright, as he had that noon got word of the acceptance of a script and in the afternoon received a letter from California that a second one was under consideration by a director. Mr. Blaisdell said that his ordinary vocation was entirely different from the work involved in scenario writing. It had been his experience, though, that if under these circumstances it was labor to try to write a script it was in a measure a labor of love; there was the inspiration of trying, at least, to create an artistic piece of work, knowing that if success came it would not only be a satisfaction to himself; it might also give pleasure to others.

Phil Lang, scenario editor for the Kalem Company, made some humorous references to the product of the photoplaywright schools and to the marked similarity in the wording of many of the letters of inquiry that come to his desk. Mr. Lang said that oftentimes an editor might receive a worthy script, but be unsuited to the requirements of his particular company, yet he would not feel at liberty to indicate to the writer just what studio would use the script.

Mr. Brenon paid tribute to the work of Mr. Sargent in helping those striving to write successful scripts. "There has been much said here to-night," said Mr. Brenon, "about the editor. You have got to go a little further. You have forgotten about the director—because, no matter what the scenario department says, a picture will not be produced unless the director says so. Get your situations in a few words in your synopsis. Get to your director in your synopsis. Then we are going to put it on. We are not going to read through all that scenario. I am talking to you as a director who has left a scenario desk. Put everything in your synopsis and we will buy your script—put in the tear, the laugh, the thrill. Get in touch with your director through the editorial department and everyone of you will be successful. Good scenarios are not plentiful. The good ones are coming from the outside, from the little fellows; the little fellows write the good ones, not the staff writers. Give your director a great big punch in your synopsis—and put it in 250 words."

"If the director does not want a script," grimly commented Mr. Sargent, "the editor can't make him take it. If the director wants it the editor can't stop him."

"The scenario writer is the keystone of the arch of the moving picture," said William Robert Daly, fellow-director with Mr. Brenon in the Imp Company. "The producers, the actors, are but stones in the formation of that arch. If the scenario writers and editors will make that keystone bigger, firmer and stronger, we, the stones, the producers and actors, will try our best to make that arch the greatest in the theatrical world."

"Bennie" Schulberg said he had been requested to express the regret, at his inability to be present, of Daniel Frohman, who, Mr. Schulberg added, was a firm moving picture advocate. Referring to his own experience as a scenario editor, the speaker said he believed the scenario department to be the most vital factor in the organization of a manufacturer. He disagreed with Mr. Brenon as to the importance of the writer reaching the director, saying that if the editor did not pass a script on to the director the latter would never see it. There was an interesting colloquy between the two for a moment.

Those present were: Marc Edmund Jones, of Chicago; Miss Hetty Gray Baker, of Hartford; Miss Cora Drew, of Boston; F. J. Sheedey, of Schenectady; Dr. R. Ralston Reed and Elmer W. Romine, of Morristown, N. J.; Steve Talbot, of Philadelphia; E. J. and Arthur Montagne, Herman E. L. Beyer, Newark Town Talk; Stanley E. Todd, Mr. and Mrs. Edmund S. Hirsch, George Hennessey, the Rev. E. Boudinot Stockton, A. Van Buren Powell, J. E. Kellette, B. P. Schulberg, Leon Demachy, Benjamin Barondess, Henry Albert Phillips, author of "The Plot of the Short Story"; Clarence James Fleming, Hamilton Smith, Phil Lang, Herbert Brenon, William Robert Daly, Hugh C. Jackson, Miss A. Cowrey, Miss E. J. Chalmers, John Wylie, W. Stephen Bush, Miss Margaret I. MacDonald, Ben Hur Lease, Frank H. Richardson, Louis Reeves Harrison, William Edward Blaisdell, Mr. and Mrs. James L. Hoff and Mr. and Mrs. Epes W. Sargent.

CHICAGO LETTER

By JAS. S. McQUADE

WHAT is the destiny of the moving picture is a question that frequently forces itself upon us. Looking back over its brief past, we have seen it housed amid squalid surroundings and looked upon merely as a novelty that enabled one to pass away five or ten minutes leisure time. Gradually it forced its way until it was considered worthy to form part of a program that was chiefly devoted to cheap vaudeville. Soon it outgrew this humble and degraded use and was deemed important and strong enough to stand alone as an entertainment. It holds that position now; but there are some people engaged in the field of public entertainment today who are not treating the moving picture fairly. These people are impressed that they must continue to dabble in what they call "high class" vaudeville, and with several acts of this they associate several reels of pictures. They assume that their patrons want pictures as well as vaudeville, and vaudeville as well as pictures. They dislike to take chances in running really high-class vaudeville on its merits or high-class picture programs on their merits. It is cheaper to compromise, and they give their patrons programs that offer neither standard high-class vaudeville nor standard high-class picture entertainment.

I have always held that really high-class vaudeville can and will continue to stand by itself and that really high-class moving picture programs can stand by themselves. Vaudeville and pictures do not assimilate. Vaudeville at best is low art; moving pictures at their best are high art—in some respects even superior to famous paintings, which are classed among the fine arts. Moving pictures assimilate with high-class singing acts, for here we have arts of the same standard and class associated. Music, whether instrumental or vocal, harmonizes with moving pictures. Both make an appeal to the imagination. The motif of a great moving picture can be suggested at the very beginning of its presentation, by appropriate music; and, throughout the presentation, scenes and incidents can be artistically enhanced by musical accompaniment, because eye and ear are both made subservient to our delight and pleasure.

The destiny of the moving picture, as we all know, is still higher than the mere furnishing of entertainment. It has already been shown that its greater value lies in instruction. Its educational domain has scarcely, as yet, been entered upon, and we can only guess at the marvelous results that will be accomplished in this respect. Its high mission makes one zealous for its present good name, and all true friends dislike to see it affiliated with unworthy associates.

When one reads of the building of beautiful new theaters, with large seating capacities, and learns that the programs are to consist of "high-class" vaudeville, so called, and moving pictures, and that such theaters are pronounced by their owners "picture theaters," there is a mingled feeling of sadness and resentment. What we need at the present time are more managers of the Saxe Brothers and Sievers type, and of the same type that is so prevalent in the far West. And we need, too, presentors of moving pictures of the Rothapfel type. The time is close at hand when greater intelligence must be supplied for the conduct of picture theaters, both for their business management and for the presentation of pictures. The exhibiting department of the moving picture industry has not kept pace with the manufacturing and distributing departments.

New Saxe Enterprises.

It has just been announced that the Saxe Brothers of Milwaukee have planned a new million-dollar theater in that city in the near future. The building will be a fourteen-story structure, which, in addition to the theater, will contain hotel and offices. The site is 100 by 150 feet and includes the ground of the Princess Theater, a moving picture house already owned by the Saxe Brothers. The house also covers that of the corner building adjoining, which is now occupied by a business firm. It is said that the theater will be of the latest Hippodrome style, and that it will seat at least 3,500 people. When this theater is completed, it will make the Saxe Brothers the largest theater owners in the state of Wisconsin. They control at present in Milwaukee five picture theaters, including the famous Alhambra, and they also own a vaudeville house of importance in the city.

The Saxe Brothers, it is rumored, will take over within a few days, large theaters in Minneapolis, St. Paul and Duluth. Messrs. John and Tom Saxe were in Minneapolis and St. Paul a few days ago, inspecting theaters with a view toward securing leases on them. Though the names of the theaters have not been divulged as yet, it is known that one of them is one of the largest in St. Paul, which is owned at present by a big eastern theatrical syndicate. It must be remembered that the Saxe Brothers already control the Lyric Theater, Minneapolis, devoted exclusively to moving pictures, a large vaudeville house in Omaha, and a fine picture theater in St. Joseph, Mo. In addition they own large interests in the restaurant business, both in Milwaukee and Minneapolis.

Chicago Film Brevities.

Phil. H. Solomon, who has so successfully managed the Chicago office of the Warner Feature Film Company, has been promoted to the position of district manager and has assumed the duties and responsibilities of that office. Chicago will still be his headquarters, and he will still be found in the same offices as heretofore. Mr. Solomon has now supervision over branch offices in Indianapolis, Minneapolis, St. Paul and Kansas City. He left for Indianapolis for a short stay on March 1. Mr. Solomon reports very flourishing business throughout his entire territory owing to the satisfaction given by recent Warner feature releases.

G. P. Hamilton, general manager of the St. Louis Motion Picture Company, arrived in the city Sunday, March 2, and returned the following date to St. Louis. Mr. Hamilton stated that his company is now putting out the Frontier brand. One release weekly has been made during the past four months. A second release will be announced for April 12. Mr. Hamilton's visit was for the purpose of engaging people for a second company, which he will take on to Albuquerque, N. M. He has already a big company there, which has been busy at work for the past five months. Mr. Hamilton will handle both companies. "Charlotte's Atonement," a two-reel feature for the Universal program, is a fine subject, Mr. Hamilton says. It will be released some time in May. The story is laid in old Mexico, and is said to be thrilling. The scenes are all out of doors and reveal many beautiful natural, scenic backgrounds.

Tom Quill is now interested in the Sherman Theater, 5619 Center Avenue, which will be open about March 10. The Sherman seats 300 people. The admission will be 5 cents and licensed service will be used. He still runs the Maywood Theater, in Maywood.

* * *

J. Eugene Pearce, of Josiah Pearce & Sons amusements, New Orleans, paid a brief visit to the city last week and renewed acquaintance with several of his numerous friends.

A postal card recently received from C. Lang Cobb, Jr., the hustler for Ramo films, showed that he was in Kansas City and that he had almost recovered from his recent attack of grip.

J. W. Barlow, sales manager of the Mirror Screen Company, was in Chicago Tuesday, February 25. He called at the World office after taking a trip over the northern part of Indiana, and stated that business was very satisfactory. G. W. Mann, special representative and installer for the Mirror Screen Company, was also in the city last week, putting in several mirror screens. Among these was a special large one at the Orpheum Theater, which cost $1,000. This screen is giving great satisfaction at the Orpheum. F. P. Bloomfield, Western representative of the Mirror Screen Company, is making quite a record in Chicago and adjacent territory, as the mirror screen is in great demand at present.

M. G. Watkins, general manager of the Du Brock Feature Film Company, of this city, left for New York on March 3, in the interest of his company. It is rumored that the Warner Feature Film Company is negotiating for several Du Brock features, and this in all probability is the object of Mr. Watkin's present visit east.

C. H. McCreedy and Louis Novotny, of Milwaukee, have purchased the Imperial Theater in that city from Joe Ornstine and Emil Matuschka. The Imperial seats 712 people. It has a large stage and plays stock twice a week, at an admission of 10 cents. Other nights in the week four reels of pictures are offered for 5 cents. The Imperial has been running for over two years, and Mr. Novotny, who paid Chicago a visit last week, stated that business was very good.

J. Maurer, a camera man who formerly worked for the Western Film Mfg. Co., and the Parisian Film Mfg. Co., this city, died about a month ago of consumption. He left a widow and three children, the latter aged six and three and one-half years and 10 months. All his savings were expended before his death, with the result that the family is now destitute. Mrs. Maurer speaks only a few words of English, and is very much in need of financial assistance. This is a case well worthy of liberal consideration by people engaged in film circles. Any contributions will be gladly received at the offices of the Moving Picture World, in New York City and Chicago. Mrs. Maurer's present address is 5138 Princeton Ave., Chicago.

C. W. Wellman, general manager of the Oshkosh Metal Products Company, Oshkosh, Wis., called at the World office February 27. Mr. Wellman's company manufactures various musical novelties for moving picture houses, chief among them being orchestral attachments for pianos.

H. A. Jones, who has been traveling with the Paragon Feature Film Company as manager and lecturer throughout Wisconsin and Minnesota, called at the World office last week. He reported fine business with Sarah Bernhardt's "Camille" and in Rejane's "Sans Gene."

* * *

W. W. Black, temporary manager of the new Lyric Theater, 112 South Halsted Street, called at the World office last week. He is running that house temporarily for M. H. McMahon. The Lyric seats 275 people and is doing fair business with moving pictures exclusively.

Paul Le Marquand, general manager of the Starland, Ltd., Winnipeg, called at the Chicago office of the World Monday, March 3. He was accompanied by his father, A. Le Marquand, secretary and treasurer of the Starland, and by C. Gross, architect of the company. They are making a tour of the country east, taking in Detroit, Cleveland, New York and Philadelphia, for the purpose of gaining all the information possible for their big circuit of houses, now built and in process of building. General Manager Le Marquand stated that the company's beautiful new house, the Empress, in Omaha, was opened on Feb. 20, and is making a big success, playing to capacity most of the time. A description of the Empress, with illustration, will appear in a later issue of the World. It is the intention of the Starland, Ltd., to change headquarters from Winnipeg to Chicago in the near future. This will be necessitated by the fact that the Starland, Ltd., is building a big chain of high-class theaters in the United States. The capital stock of the company will be increased from $500,000 to $1,000,000.

"Tigris"

Itala Multi-Reel Detective Drama.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

IT is refreshing to come upon an Italian drama that does not depict that form of vindictiveness which has become a burned out theme in the drama as well as in real life, cold and inveterate revenge. The vendetta is a relic of the past; men hit back as soon as they can; and it is man to man from beginning to end in the exciting story of "Tigris." Incident swift and fast, mystery after mystery, and above all that matching of wits between keen detective and clever crook that made the tales of Sherlock Holmes so fascinating.

"Tigris" is an elaborate criminal, such as only can be found by sounding the abysmal depths of humanity, and has a fine side to his nature that we recognize instinctively as belonging to those bold spirits who set the laws of yesterday aside with open contempt that those of tomorrow may sooner be framed. This subject of man's double nature and his revolt against existing conditions has haunted literature in a thousand forms since the days of Robin Hood and his merry men, and it possibly expresses man's natural longing for complete freedom.

The author of "Sherlock Holmes" said to the author of "Doctor Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" that "as long as man remains a dual being, as long as he is in danger of being conquered by his worse self, and with every defeat finds it more difficult to make a stand against his baser nature, so long will 'Doctor Jekyll' have a personal and vital meaning to every poor, struggling human being." No matter how close the analogy and how direct the application, "Tigris" of the Itala photodrama presents the fascinating picture of a bold villain who opposes his skill and daring to the brains and determination of an exceptional detective named Roland and is helped out in his nefarious schemes by the fact that he plays the role of a respectable and successful merchant devoted to an only sister named Lydia.

There is thus presented a Doctor Jekyll with an overwhelming passion for misdeeds, a passion for whose gratification he would imperil his immortal soul, opposed in perpetual conflict to a keen-witted and implacable officer of the law. Roland has right and might behind him. Tigris has a gang of desperadoes at his bidding and a thoroughness of organization that enables him to struggle against social law, against the police, against those protected by social law and the police and against all but himself. He is in a constant state of escape from the toils set for him and so infatuated with his own destiny that he dares impersonate the very men who are constantly looking for him that he may aid them in the search. It is a stand-up fight between will and will.

I am not minded to pick to pieces the probability of events in a story of this kind. We accept the improbable as an integral part, and the intervention of chance naturally results from the hot-headed impetuosity of the characters. Besides, what of it? There is no time for us to survey situations calmly in such a rapid series of them. There are desperate fights in motor cars, in a den of thieves, in a palatial dwelling, wherever the elements of order and disorder clash, and the amazing escapes only rouse admiration for the ingenuity of all participating in the production. Memorable piece of work is the escape of Roland from being torn to pieces by the engine of a train after he has been tied to a railway track. We see him struggling with his bonds as the locomotive swiftly approaches, release himself at the last moment and manage to clutch the buffers as the wheels are about to pass over his body.

I am afraid it would distress some of our critics of the "hitherto" standard, those who insist that fiction shall be "true to life," to review a photoplay where detective and criminal are able to completely disguise themselves on short notice, or even make up to marvelously resemble some one else, but that never kept any of us from reading a good detective story. Sherlock Holmes is not only an obviously improbable character, but his death-proof adventures are delightfully beyond what is likely to happen to any one individual, and I do not think any of us ever weighed the rational amount of confidence with which we might expect the events of his career to be duplicated in real life. Our interest once enlisted, we were held by the spell of what is known as "tension."

There is, indeed, a large class of plays of no particular verisimilitude that are very popular in spite of this fact, and Tigris is almost sure to be one of them. Without attempting to more than indicate the principle which makes them entertaining, I pass upon them favorably in the knowledge that they will prove attractive to others. We cross the threshold of preparation in a few strides, jump into the action and find ourselves held in suspense as long as the tension is not relaxed. Even when it has been heightened so that an occasional relief may be injected, we find ourselves in harmonic vibration with the main idea.

Tigris is an outlaw; we secretly envy his freedom and his defiance of constituted authority. He would be more interesting if there was time to show his antecedent circumstances, but it is not difficult for us to take him as he is and watch his conflict with bated breath. There is no suspended attention; the action is constant; and a photoplay that holds from start to finish is at least a diversion. During the progress of this thriller there are some fine opportunities for the scenic artist and the cameraman. Best of these is a festival of beauty to which Tigris dares Roland to come in disguise with a view to penetrate his own. The detective is detected and given a potion in a glass of wine. His head sinks down on the table at which he is seated and we are given a highly interesting picture, or series of pictures, of what passes in his confused mind.

The ball-room rocks; the dancers are doubled and even trebled; strange shapes appear; we are treated to a confusion of dreams, and the agonizing termination of his nightmare is the most consistent and amusing spectacle during the entire play. This is a motion picture advantage over the stage performance which has been skillfully utilized, and it contributes heavily to an entertainment that I am reasonably sure will delight millions of others besides the small group of critics who watched every phase of the photodrama with absorbed attention during its first presentation in this country.

KINEMACOLOR IN LONDON AND PROVINCES.

Beginning with this week, Kinemacolor is added to the program of the New Gallery Kinema, the handsome house whose opening a few weeks ago by Sir George Alexander attracted such widespread notice in the general press. Electric Palaces, Ltd., will install Kinemacolor at all the houses on their extensive circuit.

Photoplayers in New Home—Question of State Censorship Arousing Much Discussion—News Briefs.

After three months of wanderings The Photoplayers have finally come to rest in a home of their own. Members of the board of control this week signed a lease for the three-story building at 349 South Hill Street, in the heart of the downtown business district. The club will occupy the two upper floors, the ground floor being occupied by a cafe. The building was erected for the use of the University Club and was occupied by that organization until its membership grew so large that it was compelled to seek more commodious quarters. However, there is room for a club of up to 500 members and The Photoplayers at the present time has a little less than 300, so the rooms will probably not be overcrowded for a year at least.

No sooner had the lease been signed than a force of decorators was put at work redecorating the entire interior. The rooms will have practically every convenience common to men's clubs and will be one of the most comfortable in the city.

Changes in Universal Directing Forces.

The Universal forces have taken on two new directors this week. One of them is Henry McRae, who for the last two years has been a Selig director, and lately has been producing some of the Selig animal pictures in this city. Old-timers in the theatrical profession will remember him as head of the Henry McRae stock company. The other new director is Jack O'Brien, who was assigned to assist Lincoln J. Carter when the melodrama king came out here to put on a series of his own well-known melodramas. Now O'Brien, having made good, has been given a company of his own. Meanwhile the announcement is quietly made from the Universal studios that Frank E. Montgomery, a Bison director, is directing the Carter pictures. Carter is still out at the Universal ranch, where the pictures are being made, and is on the job every day, but Montgomery is "the director." Apparently some one has been finding out that just because a man happens to be one of the best stage directors in the business it doesn't follow of necessity that he knows how to put on motion pictures effectively. Wilfred Lucas, who was brought here from New York a month ago to take charge of a Powers company, has been assigned to work under the Bison brand instead, which means that he will have chances at multiple reel stuff.

Miss Hunt Breaks an Arm.

Miss Irene Hunt, leading woman for the No. 1 Lubin company in this city, fell from a horse this week while out on a picture with the company and broke one of her arms. She was not working in a picture at the time, but was amusing herself by riding about between scenes. Being unaccustomed to riding and wearing a costume which made equestrian feats next to impossible, it was easy for the horse to tumble her off. Miss Hunt was game, and after a surgeon had put the broken arm in splints suggested to Wilfred Melville, the producer, that he have Scenario Editor McDonald write a photoplay calling for a leading woman with a broken arm. Pending Miss Hunt's recovery, Mr. Melville is trying out a new leading woman, Miss Dolly Larkin.

State Censorship Under Discussion.

Motion picture censorship by the State promises to be a sweet mess if the members of the legislature attempt to reconcile all of the suggestions which have poured in within the last two weeks as proposed amendments to the bill which has been introduced. Apparently everyone in the State who has any original ideas about motion pictures, and particularly those persons whose ideas are based upon complete ignorance of the technic of the industry, is ready to step forward and save the day. The exchanges are lining up to fight legislation and are attempting to secure the united backing of the exhibitors, an effort which probably will not be very successful, since many of the exhibitors seem to believe that censorship by the State will tend to guarantee the quality of their entertainment and stimulate patronage. Some of the exchange men are advocating an amendment which will create a divided board, with three members in San Francisco and three members in Los Angeles, and a seventh member, who will act as chairman, alternating between the two cities. Also they want at least one and, if possible, two of the members to be chosen from the industry. Many of the newspapers are taking the matter up and discussing it from different angles. One of the local newspapers published a sympathetic editorial praising the motion pictures and insisting that censorship must be intelligent and uplifting. In reply to this a writer signing himself Frank E. Woods and disclosing an understanding of the question which pointed to "Spec," who is now a resident of "this fair city," submitted a brief for criticism without actual censorship. It may be possible in this department within the next two weeks to forecast substantially the bill which will eventually pass the legislature.

Mr. Mackley Experimenting on Mr. Static.

Arthur Mackley, director of the Essanay's Los Angeles company, gets into the news this week on two counts. First, the recent troubles with static which have afflicted all the local companies with only two or three exceptions, set Mackley to experimenting, with the result that he believes he is on the track of a cure. He is still making tests of his device, which looks more promising as each test proves successful. If he satisfies himself that he has found a sure way to avoid static, he says, he will publish the details for the benefit of the industry at large. "I always make it a rule," says he, "to share with my brother directors anything that I have that tends to improve the business."

The other item relates to a circumstance which has impressed upon Mackley how large and widely scattered is the audience he reaches every week. Mackley was born in Scotland and has not been home for 26 years. A number of years ago when his mother died correspondence with his brothers and sisters in Scotland gradually died out until he had lost all track of his family. Recently Mackley turned out a picture in which he played the part of a Western dentist. In casting about for a name to put on the sign in front of the dentist's office he chose "John Mackley," and it appeared in the picture. In Soctland two of his sisters attended a motion picture theater and saw the film. They thought they noted a family resemblance when Mackley came into the picture, but when the name was flashed later they became certain it was their brother. Without further investigation a nephew of Mackley's whom he had never seen —a young man of 25—was sent at once to the United States to seek his uncle. Landing in New York he addressed a letter to Mackley, care of the Vitagraph studio. It was promptly forwarded to Los Angeles, and the day he received it Mackley telegraphed his nephew to come West at once. He is now on his way to this city to make his uncle's acquaintance and take all the news back to Scotland later.

News Briefs.

Los Angeles now has a theater devoted exclusively to motion picture features, producing each week a single multiple reel subject and charging prices based on a 25-cent maximum. It is the Lyceum, on South Spring Street, formerly the refuge of the dollar road shows. Last week the annual round-up at Pendleton, Ore., was the bill, and the week before the house had Blanche Walsh in "Resurrection." This week "The Palace of Flames" is being shown.

"From the Manger to the Cross" is back at Temple Auditorium for a return week after a couple of weeks' nice business in the suburban cities. During its first run at the Auditorium the picture is said to have played to the largest business ever done by a feature picture in Los Angeles. One reason for this is that it has had better and more intelligent publicity than any motion picture ever had before. F. R. Dyas, publicity man for the Clune theaters, took charge of the advance work as soon as "Billy" Clune bought the state rights. He is an experienced newspaper man who knows good publicity when he sees it as well as how to get it; and he got it.

All the actors, directors and cameramen of the various producing companies in the local field had a couple of holidays this week while the greatest amount of precipitation which has occurred in a like length of time since 1879 was falling.

Karl Coolidge, who was one of the most successful of the local photoplay writers and who probably sold more scripts than any of the rest, with the possible exception of Bill Wing, until he became photoplay editor for the Ammex company at San Diego, has returned to town and incidentally has acquired a better position. He is now photoplay editor for the Keystone company.

The form now being used by the Selig company in returning unavailable scripts sent to the Edendale studio contains a statement which throws an illuminating sidelight on the present policy of the company and the standards at which it is aiming. Here is the sentence: "We do not accept manuscripts containing any of the following incidents or characters: Theft, kidnapping, smuggling, murder, forgery, lewd women, drunks and other types or actions not consistent with upbuilding of the motion picture business."

The Moving Picture Educator

MOVING PICTURES COMPARED TO "OLD MASTERS."

An Extraordinary Sale.

A special cable message to a New York paper announces that moving pictures are beginning to fetch the prices of old masters. The Cines Company's picture "Quo Vadis," which is an 8,000-foot film, sold at auction in London for $38,000. The price includes fifteen copies of the picture and the exclusive rights thereof for two years in England. It is noticed that this is the first time a moving picture and the exclusive rights of showing the same have been sold at auction. That moving pictures are now beginning to possess literary, artistic and commercial merit is very important; this sale places them in a position of unassailable superiority and power. It also carries with it its own lesson as to the character of pictures which at once become the head and front in the estimation of all classes of people and is an example of value.

Another Clergyman's Opinion.

A clergyman in Ohio who uses the moving pictures in his church with great success writing to us regarding the educational power of the pictures says: "I consider the moving picture to be the most powerful teaching agency the world has ever known; it is going to make the office of the pastor more and more that of a teacher. I am sure also that the churches will adopt the pictures more in the future when they open their eyes to the good that is in them." While these views are not new to the readers of this page, where they have been so often expressed, they are given as a sample of the emphasis that is now constantly being recorded in establishing the moving picture as an educator. We shall be glad to receive similar expressions from all who wish to add the power and weight of their experience and authority.

The writer of this page desires to make a special note of the fact that the clergyman above referred to says in his letter, "I take the 'Moving Picture World.'" If only more clergymen could take or even see the "World" great advance would be made in the teaching power of kinematography, and "more would open their eyes to the good in the picture." There are surely many subscribers of the World who could allow their neighbors at the head of the church or high school to see his copy, even if only for the purpose of helping forward the growing interest in the educational side of the picture.

KINEMACOLOR EDUCATIONAL.

Kinemacolor is increasingly educational; itself, an example of progress, it is likewise advancing along important, instructive, and interesting lines. A study of its releases show that it has a splendid combination of current events, topical, nature-study, and generally entertaining features.

The study of growing plants has always been interesting; the fact that they are now seen in their natural colors enhances their value. Scenery has an added charm when the masterpieces of nature's grandest colorings are so splendidly reproduced. The Balkan War pictures are perhaps the highest tribute to the wide scope and efficiency of the highest art of kinematography.

Young people have always delighted in so-called trick pictures, their joy is increased in the growing and changing effects of a new kinemacolor process which seems to give a wider and more beautiful scope. An occasional film of the Indian Durbar is always welcome and will not become old for a generation.

A COMPOSITION CONTEST.

In Peoria, Ill., the Paul Rainey animal pictures were the basis for a composition contest among the school children; while perhaps the first thought was to exploit the pictures, the second thought (always best) is a worthy one; the idea of having school children write upon the instructive and better class pictures will be helpful to them. About two years ago the Moving Picture World printed a synopsis of opinions of young people; this proved very enlightening, from it a surprising amount of information was gathered giving a thorough idea as to what class of picture best satisfied the youthful tastes; to their credit it was recorded that their preference was in favor of the instructive, and against the sensational pictures.

Now that exhibitors have such a goodly array of educational and other high class films, it is an exceedingly easy matter to interest the young people, even to the extent of getting them to write a composition upon the subjects they have seen. This again is another suggestion for a working together between the picture house and the religious and educational authorities.

Anything that will bring to the front the best that is in the moving picture should be encouraged; as the field of usefulness is growing larger, and the opportunities increasing, those who first avail themselves of them will prove the gainers; may there be an increase of such conditions as shall bring together the children and the best that is in the pictures.

THE SUNDAY PICTURES AND CHARITY.

In Indianapolis the moving picture theaters have been giving one hundred dollars of their Sunday takings to charitable causes. If every motive connected with this benevolent plan is equally pure it deserves special commendation. These same interests are also going to purchase a farm to aid in "fresh air work" in that locality. It appears that a worthy woman who had distributed this charity died recently, and the farm is to be a memorial one.

Actions of this kind can only serve to make the moving picture more appreciable; any exhibitor, or set of exhibitors, who band themselves together for such noble work, must also of a certainty be a class of men to whom every advantageous interest of the moving picture must be dear. It would be very helpful to know that the instructive, as well as the entertaining pictures are given an important place on their programs; it may also be inferred that these same people are working as harmoniously with other local interests as with those devoted to charitable causes.

In Vermont a Women's Club gave a moving picture exhibition for the benefit of a Day Nursery, charging 25 cents and using films supplied by the General Film Company.

NOTES.

An educational theater party was recently held in New England by an association whose interests were such that a campaign of an educational nature was considered helpful; the result was more than satisfactory. Pictures of special industrial and topical subjects were used. This is an innovation which may be profitably followed by many others.

In Kentucky two sets of school commissions have favored the use of the moving picture in the schools under their control, one commissioner being especially enthusiastic in advocating their educational value.

A Kentucky newspaper is devoting a special department to a regular description of the latest pictures, with illustrations, wisely used; they have a good opportunity before them. A Boston daily has recently come out very strongly in advocacy of the educational picture. In a strong editorial they ask, why this force is not more used for the purpose of education. The answer is an easy one—because the public press has itself been so slow in recognizing the educational value of the picture.

Two State dental associations have recently allied themselves with the proper authorities for the purpose of having the pictures on "The Care of the Teeth" exhibited as widely as possible, especially before school children. Civic and hygienic committees in many cities are doing the same.

In Omaha the Board of Education have especially voted a sum of money to cover the cost of showing pictures of "The Panama Canal" to all the school children under their control. If this enlightened board will only follow on this good work with other and perhaps more immediately helpful pictures they will be doing more good than can be readily calculated.

The International Harvester Company are exhibiting a picture—"The Dawn of Plenty"—before agricultural associations and corn growers of the West.

NON-PROGRESSIVE.

There are still those whose little knowledge, and limited vision, prevent them from knowing and seeing the great and widespread growth of the moving picture as power in educational, commercial and industrial circles.

It might not be necessary to notice this fact in the face of such conspicuous progress everywhere, if it were not for the admissions which these critics make. One acknowledges that he does not see the pictures, but depends upon hear-say. Another condemns them wholesale because of the abuse by unscrupulous persons, not stopping to praise the great efforts of those who are devoted to "higher and better pictures." There is only one common enemy to the moving picture today, and that is the spirit of non-progressiveness; healthy growth is the great enemy of disease, this kind of growth is that which marks the picture of to-day. There is now not a realm of human knowledge, investigation, exposition or learning where the picture is not triumphant. Under these circumstances it is clearly apparent to everyone, that the time has come when kinematography is above and beyond criticism; as a necessary part of human existence it needs only those regulations which are common to society to cause it to render its best results; those who see and know this are progressive and wise.

THE BUSINESS-MAN VS. THE SCHOLAR.

In a strange way occasion has arisen to ask the question as to relative merits of the business man and the scholar in their methods of dealing with anything that is of equal value to each one.

The great progress made with the moving picture has made it a bone of contention among many parties, each of whom sees in it some merit, value, or profit, as a result these contentions find their way into the courts of justice. It was while attending a judicial hearing of one of these important causes, that the writer was led to the study of the question, as to the manner in which the commercial world, and the educational authorities, viewed and handled the kinematograph.

It appears commercially that the moving picture is a most tremendous affair, no section or part of it can be spoken of in a small way. Everywhere, in no matter what direction we turn, we are confronted with "millions;" the people who see the pictures are—millions; the people engaged in the industrial arts and sciences, are—millions; the capital invested is—many millions; the profits are—millions. How wide awake somebody must have been, and that "somebody," no matter in what direction we look, was a business-man. The scholar appears only at rare intervals, and even then in no great capacity. Occasionally he is seen in the studios of the manufacturer, and here we are greatly indebted to him for what he has had the courage to prepare for us. Again he is seen carrying his moving picture camera in the unexplored parts of the world, and again we appreciate him. Still once more he is found on the platform, and we admire both his courage and example. Too often we are sorry to admit that he has appeared as a critic; neglecting to notice the advantageous uses of the moving picture, he has allowed exaggerated accounts of its misuse to be impressed upon his slow inquiring mind. It is a singular fact that the criticisms of the moving picture which have come from the business men have been full of compliments which were never intended. The brewers complained that the picture theaters took the nickels and dimes which previously found their way into the saloons; while the cheap theater managers complained that the counter attractions were depleting their treasury. As a business proposition therefore, the moving picture has proved more than a success, it has often proved lavish in its profitable results. The credit of much of this is due to the business man's wide awake readiness to appropriate the opportunity of catering to a profitable popular benefit.

The scholar with characteristic deliberation, of studious, habits, with "slow and measured tread," has however not been entirely oblivious to the advantages around him. His inquiring mind has been busy, and after making logical deductions, he is coming above the horizon of our view, and will soon be in the full light of the center of activities. Again it may be proved that "The race is not to the swift, nor the battle to the strong." The hare may cover quickly and prosperously the major part of the race; but it takes the safe, sure, and patient plodding of the tortoise to cover the whole distance and accomplish most. In like manner the essential differences between the business man and the scholar are, that while the former is looking at the present, and demanding immediate results, the latter is looking into the future, for results that shall be as permanently helpful as they are immediately profitable. The kinematograph is not for passing pleasure and fleeting profit only, it stands for those abiding principles which are founded upon the rock of human intelligence. Every day marks the nearer approach of its educational value as also each day widens the sphere of its industrial power and profit. Seized at its birth as a toy, the business man gave it a great industrial and commercial standing, and his profit is deservedly earned. It now remains for the scholar to prove its adaptability to the advancing of universal knowledge for the benefit of the human race.

"WONDERS OF THE WORLD."

A firm of New York publishers are just issuing a ten-volume edition, the "Wonders of the World." It is interesting to all believers in kinematography and admirers of moving pictures to know that the kinematograph is accorded a place in this compendium of the "World's Wonders." Notice of this is not mentioned here as a surprise, but rather for the purpose of drawing attention to the fact that the highest authorities are giving the moving picture its proper place in the relative position it occupies in the world. The world's wonders have, as a rule, been beneficial to humanity, otherwise they could not be so classified; this emphasizes the status of the moving picture and removes it from the doubtful column of any other less important opinion.

AN OPINION AND A PREDICTION.

The Rev. Frank O. Hall, of New York, in an address recently said: "When the time comes to estimate the great inventions of the present age, the moving picture will take the same relative place given to the printing press." This is certainly no mean expression, and one in which the Moving Picture World entirely agrees. Taking the power of the press as an example, the moving picture will also be the news-giver, and public opinion moulder of the future. Dr. Hall further said, "I have also noticed the changing sentiment and demand for the intelligent, if not for the educational picture." Surely these opinions of those in high places cannot fail to have their effect upon those who are responsible for the supply of that which is to satisfy the "changing sentiment and demand." Let it be clearly understood that the great demand is not all for strictly educational pictures as for a school; but for that grade of intelligent picture, which shows that the popular taste is of such a character that it cannot be satisfied with anything that does not carry with it a respect for their enlightenment and culture.

A VEST POCKET LIBRARY.

The Moving Picture World has now completed and offers to the industry a Motion Picture Annual, which is full of the most valuable data and information for everybody who is at all interested in pictures. The special appeal, however, is made to the exhibitor. To him the little book is nothing less than a vest pocket library. It contains a complete list of all the releases of film issued in 1912 and an accurate trade directory. Its literary features are particularly fine and useful, containing, for instance, a history of the motion picture from its early beginnings up to the present day. In fact, the Annual provides an answer for pretty nearly all sensible questions that can be asked by the public or by exhibitors. It is the only book of reference of this kind and covers the field thoroughly. Price of the book, in paper covers, $1.25, and in cloth boards, $1.50.

WARNER'S FEATURE NOTES.

Mr. A. Warner, president of Warner's Feature Film Company, left New York City, Saturday, February 22nd, on an extended business trip. He expects to go from Pittsburg to New Orleans, from there to Dallas, Tex., and on to the coast, stopping at Los Angeles, San Francisco and Seattle.

J. H. Gilroy is now in charge of the rental department of the New York office. He has comfortable quarters on the 11th floor of the 45th Street Exchange Building.

The first release of the Satex Film Company, featuring Miss Martha Russell, has arrived in New York and will be shown at a private exhibition in the near future.

OBSERVATIONS

BY OUR MAN ABOUT TOWN

WELL, at last they are falling into line. The skeptics and adverse criticis who have heretofore made the lives of the motion picture manufacturers, actors, dealers, exhibitors and all others connected with the business targets for ridicule have come to life. The New York Evening Journal is the latest to rush to the support of "the movies." In its issue of the 15th inst. two full pages are devoted to a declaration of hearty support. "Zit," the vaudeville critic of the paper, says that hereafter the Journal's new department "will be as great, if not greater," than the dramatic and vaudeville departments from a standpoint of opportunities offered. And "Zit" wants everybody to understand "that this department has been started because there is an imperative demand for it." We welcome Brother "Zit" to the fold, notwithstanding his transgressions of the past. Like many others who, by the way, will also soon come to life, he could not grasp the situation when the motion pictures were struggling for deserved recognition. He could not see in them a serious competitor for the vaudeville acts and that they could possibly display the real straight goods was to him the silliest of thoughts. We make this declaration notwithstanding his statement that "Zit" was the first to see the value and the possibility of moving pictures when they were in their infancy, and notwithstanding his statement that "when Marcus Loew began his career it was 'Zit' who brought Mr. Loew's activities to the attention of the public."

The people who were the first to discover the value and the possibilities of moving pictures were those who backed up their confidence with investments in them; people who spent thousands of dollars in developing the possibilities and people who established papers and magazines to support the industry when almost the entire press was either arrayed against motion pictures or could see them only in the form of a joke. People who saw the possibilities should not be robbed of credit. If "Zit" can reproduce any of his writings wherein he urged fair play for motion pictures during the "bitter period" there will be a disposition to allow him some of the credit. If he cannot do this we must stand upon his own statement that the co-operation he now offers is based upon an imperative demand and is not a result of his foresight. His reference to Marcus Loew may be true so far as it applies to "Zit" personally, but when Marcus Loew began his career in the motion picture field "Zit" was to some extent quite unknown, and it is rather presumptuous for the latter to insinuate that he built up Mr. Loew. It can be stated without fear of contradiction that when his career started Mr. Loew saw as little of the possibilities of motion pictures as "Zit" did during a more recent period. But he had enterprise and grit and when he found what they brought forth he was about as much surprised as the man who discovered he was in love with his mother-in-law.

Like "Zit" most people think Mr. Loew's first venture in the motion picture field was on the same lines he is now following. They are mistaken. He was like William Fox, feeling his way, and the first "possibility" he saw was in a rental exchange. He decided that there was more money in renting films to exhibitors than in exhibiting them direct, and he opened an exchange. Later he saw more possibilities and took a chance on opening a picture and vaudeville house. We cannot recall of ever having read any comment, one way or the other, by "Zit" on either of these ventures, but they were the subjects of considerable discussion among others in the business and particularly among his fellow members in an organization of film renters that was in a flourishing condition at that time. Mr. Loew was by no means confident of success for the new venture. But he had grit and felt that at least he could "get the people coming" and bring prestige. One afternoon, at a meeting of the film renters' association, somebody asked, "Have you heard the plunge that Marcus Loew has made?" When the answer was given and the news bearer stated that Mr. Loew was paying $1,200 for a vaudeville attraction at his new house for that week the astonishment that prevailed was of a paralyzing character. One of the first to recover was a gentleman now among the foremost in the photoplay world and his first expression was, "Can the man be losing his head?"

Soon after "Dave" Bernstein (all who know Marcus Loew must know "Dave") arrived upon the scene and from all quarters of the room came the question, "Say, Bernstein, what is Loew thinking of? Is he trying to put Keith & Proctor, Percy Williams and Hammerstein out of business?" When told of the statement that had been made Bernstein confirmed it and added that he thought Mr. Loew had the right dope. Subsequent developments proved that he had. But at that time not more than, possibly, two or three of the men there, all of whom were closely in touch with the motion picture business, saw "the value and possibilities of moving pictures" and those who may have been able to see more than the others did not dream that the business would become what it has. They knew the business was growing, that the film productions were being steadily improved, more money was being spent in perfecting the work and securing better talent, but all of them were trying to get a line on how long the pictures would last with the people.

It may as well go upon record now as any other time. When Marcus Loew made his first plunge into vaudeville no critic, manager, film renter or exhibitor saw that motion pictures would attain a grade making them a healthy Broadway attraction. The people who first saw the possibilities were the manufacturers and they said little until they were satisfied that their plans were feasible. The great question was, "Will the returns and encouragement from the market justify the outlay and labor?" They took a chance and won out, encouraged by the journals devoted to the interests of the business. These are the people who saw the possibilities and developed them and the journals that stood by them in the time of doubt and adversities deserve credit for helping achieve success, not those who have been forced into line by public opinion.

So let "Zit" come into the field like the rest of us, with the conviction that motion pictures are good things and a determination to give them a square deal, and he will receive the hand of good fellowship on all sides. By doing this he will avoid discounting the merits of those who have stood by the pictures when loyalty was needed and save himself the awkward duty of trying to explain why he did not get on the right side long before this. Let him, like Daniel Frohman and others, admit that the great change has been wrought by reflection; that it is a logical and natural matter; and quote from Mr. Frohman: "I believe the time is not far distant when the motion picture will be the universal teacher and a powerful force in the schools of the world." Perhaps more reflection will bring to the mind the truth that even now motion pictures are in their infancy and an unlimited field for enthusiastic work is open.

There is an excellent opening for "Zit" to become of great service to the "movies" right now. They are not in need of advertising, what they do need is fair play. For months so-called reformers have harassed the public with propositions to have motion picture houses operated in accordance with their views. The Laws and Legislation Committee of the Board of Aldermen had another hearing this week and the Cannon Chasers were there in force. An adjournment was taken without anything being accomplished except perhaps the discovery of an intent on the part of the Chasers to befog the real issue. When the Folks ordinance was last before the Board of Aldermen and defeated, the Chasers fought to have it passed over veto with the unconstitutional censorship amendment tacked on it. At last Saturday's session they objected to the Folks ordinance because "it would give the moving picture trust a valuable franchise." Perhaps "Zit" can find out what the Chasers are driving at and devise a plan by which the tiresome matter can be effectively disposed of one way or the other. Up to the present this has been made impossible by the resourcefulness of the "reformers" as objectors. Nail them down to something, "Zit."

FRED R. SULLIVAN JOINS RELIANCE.

Mr. Fred R. Sullivan, one of the oldest, in point of service, and best known of stock directors, who began his duties as a director with the Reliance Company in New York on February 24th. Mr. Sullivan has had a long experience as a stock director in the largest of American cities, including Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Pittsburg, Cincinnati, Chicago, New Orleans and Los Angeles.

A REMARKABLE PERFORMANCE.

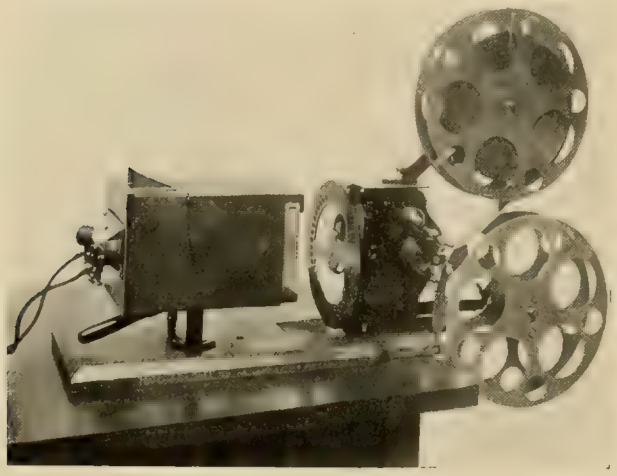
F. H. Richardson.

The writer was recently invited to examine a new projection machine, the invention of a Mr. Jenkins, of Washington, D. C. The machine is designed for home use and for use in educational institutions, in government departments and for like work where a comparatively small picture is adequate to fill all needs.

The invention of Mr. Jenkins is remarkable in its performance. Its general appearance is shown in the accompanying photograph. But unfortunately the picture does not show all of its peculiarities, not the least of which is the fact that the projection is at right angles to the machine and to the condensing lens. The resistance is contained in the lamp house itself. The lamp uses between three and four amperes of current, pulling about five at the instant of striking the arc. All that is necessary to start the light, however, is to screw the socket into any ordinary house lighting fixture and bring the carbons together. The carbons set at an acute angle to each other and are 7/32 of an inch in diameter. An ordinary pair of four and one-half inch (diameter) condensing lenses of six and one-half inch focal length are used. The machine uses standard film. Its mechanism consists of one sprocket, one pair of gears, and a revolving shutter, which is between the condenser and the film and upon which is mounted the cam actuating the wire claw which moves the film. The movement of the film is claimed to be accomplished in one one hundred and eighty-fifth of a second, and herein lies the real secret of the whole proposition. This enormously rapid movement allows of the shutter blade being reduced to an almost negligible quantity, hence almost the entire light from the arc lamp is utilized, although the film may be stopped at any time and left standing indefinitely with the full light on it, thus throwing a film stereopticon picture on the screen, the illumination of the moving picture is remarkably brilliant. Mr. Jenkins projected a ten-foot picture on the mirror screen at the Circle heater, Washington, D. C., which it is said was very well illuminated, using between three and four amperes of current. The light in passing through the film, encounters a prism which reflects it at right angles into the objective lens, therefore the screen sets opposite the farther side of the machine as we show it in the picture. The stereopticon lens is opposite the off side of the lamp house. In stereopticon projection standard slides are used, the lamp house merely being turned at right angles to its position in the picture by means of the handle at its lower rear edge.



View of the Jenkins Home Projector.

One of the features which will undoubtedly appeal to the school teacher and to governmental departments is the fact that the film can be stopped at any point and projected as a stereopticon picture, thus allowing the student to examine minutely any desired picture. Inflammable films may be used with perfect safety, so far as the arc lamp of this machine is concerned. However, the fact that inflammable film will probably be used in the machine, will no doubt predispose the insurance companies against its use. The arc lamp of itself is not an arc lamp at all in the ordinary sense, but merely two insulated holes, the size of a carbon, in the back of the lamp house as shown. The light is handled by moving the carbons with the fingers. In fact the whole thing is ridiculously simple and easy of manipulation.

PACKING A CAMERA.

Every cameraman who has lugged forty or fifty pounds of camera and tripod across the country all day will appreciate some of the recent attempts to make a camera that does not produce that tired feeling after a day's work in the field. Among the several devices of this nature should be mentioned one made by Eberhardt Schneider and named by the maker the "Junior Professional Camera." While this device has been on the market for some time and is being used quite extensively, it has not been mentioned in these columns before, but some of the work produced by its use is equal in quality to that made by cameras in more general use.

Victor Miller.

When Mr. Schneider undertook to produce the "Junior" he had in mind an instrument that would combine all the requirements of a first class professional camera and, at the same time, give lightness in weight and cheapness in price—qualities that should appeal to every practical camera operator. The inventor's ability to construct such an instrument was a guarantee that something novel would result from the attempt. Thus he offers in the "Junior" a camera that is light and effective and which has many improvements that will recommend it to the professional as well as to the amateur motion picture cameraman.

The mechanism is of hand-turned aluminum with bearings of phosphor bronze. It has a safe take-up and "losing the loup" is impossible. "Static" is almost unknown and scratching of film "cannot be done." The shutter can be adjusted for any speed; it has a self-closing, side-focusing device with a strong magnifying glass, a finder to match the lense and a reliable film counter. There are a number of other little kinks that will appeal to the critical cameraman.

Victor Miller Showing Junior Camera to a "Hiawatha" Indian.

The camera box is 6½ inches by 9½ inches by 11½ inches in dimensions and is made of well-seasoned satin mahogany, weighing about seven pounds. Genuine Zeiss-Tessar lenses are sold with each camera.

It was this camera that was used by Victor Miller in taking Moore's feature film, "Hiawatha," reviewed on page 980, issue of March 8, 1913. Mr. Miller has charge of the motion picture laboratories of Mr. Schneider's establishment on Second Avenue, New York, and in the course of his duties has traveled many thousand miles with the "Junior" camera, visiting Egypt, Palestine, Italy, England and other foreign countries.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Two and a Drug Store.

SAENGER BROTHERS, Shreveport, La., run a very nifty looking drug store and the Saenger and Palace Theaters. They clean up the lot with a four-page program giving a general front and a page each to the theaters and the back page to the store.

We gather that they have some of that foolish opposition where a manager tries to fight three good reels with a greater number of commercials, for at the bottom of one of these pages appears the line:

> "It's not the number of shots fired—it's what hits the mark that counts."

Three reels are plenty for any program. A greater number will tire the audience and they do not always realize that it is the number rather than the pictures that tires them. The program makes no effort to list more than the title and occasionally some favorite player, each list carrying the full week.

The front page carries this orderly arrangement:

> Retain this list for reference.
> New Program issued every Sunday.
> Procured at the box office upon request.

But we suppose that other methods of distribution are also employed though no information is volunteered.

Has a Weekly.

T. H. Alexander, of the Delite Theater, New Decatur, Alabama, sends the second number of his weekly bulletin, an eight page announcement with plenty of advertising patronage. The advertising runs top and bottom and at both sides of the daily program on the six inside pages. There is a front page cut and the back page is used for special work. We think that if Mr. Alexander will frame each program in three on six point border, boxing off the rest with one point as at present, he will get a vastly more effective display. This is not a publication where the use of uniform rule is required and by boxing in his programs in heavier rule he will throw up the program without detracting from the foreign advertising. Apart from this, the typographical work is done rather better than the usual run.

As much may not be said for the program matter. It is not well edited and it is not interesting. As an example of the former is this use of the singular and plural: "Thrilling moments of peril which leads, etc." The rule is simple. If your noun has an "s" the verb does not, and vice versa. In the matter of interest we do not think that this will pull much:

> Harry is his mother's spoiled darling and is adored by all the girls until pretty Anna arrives from the country. A clever comedy.

That is too non-committal; too general to interest. There is a great deal more than that to the story of Harry's Lesson. Try something like this:

> From mother's pampered pet to a household drudge is what happened to Harry after he married, but it made a man of him and he liked it—afterward. A new idea—and funny.

Talk to Them.

And with the entire back page at the disposal of Mr. Alexander, he merely calls attention to the fact that he runs two two-part features every week. He doesn't tell when the performances begin, what the prices of admission are, what nights he runs the specials or any of the other things that a stranger to the house might be supposed to be interested in. He does not even name the advance specials. He just states that he has a couple. Reading through the program you find that the specials for the week will be on Monday and Friday, Lucile and The Battle of Gettysburg. All you learn about the latter is that it is "KayBee Greatest three-reel feature." Maybe everyone in New Decatur knows all about the Kay-Bee features, but we've an idea that even those who do know will want to know something more than the title of this particular three-part subject.

When you have your own publication, talk to the people, talk to them if you have to throw out paid advertising to get the space. Tell them about the stuff you have coming, remind them of what you have done as an earnest of what you will do. Remind them of the hit that the last Kay-Bee feature made and venture the opinion that the coming subject will be even better. Give a snap and a tang to your stuff. Make your people want to come every night. Make the outsiders look you up just to see how much of a liar you are—and then prove to them you speak only the truth. If it pays some other man; some grocer or butcher to advertise in your program, surely it should pay you. Be chatty, be friendly, talk about yourself and your house modestly but convincingly. Be proud of your house. It's worth the extra time and trouble it will make you. If you simply cannot write, it is worth the five or ten dollars you will have to pay some one to write it for you. But no matter how it's done, do it.

Helpful.

The Kraus Manufacturing company, largely influenced by our agitation last fall, has arranged with the Kay-Bee, Broncho, Reliance, American, Thanhouser, Kalem, Majestic and the Universal companies to manufacture sets of reproduction of scenes from all big releases on 8 by 10 cards. These are actual photographs and are being handled by the specialists in photoplay advertising. You can buy them direct and resell, or rent from the exchanges if you do not mind second-hand stuff. It will be a useful addition.

We Wonder.

The Tenth Street Theater, Kansas City, carries in its excellent program an announcement of the Twelfth Street Theater, stating that "On and after August 31st" the admission will be ten cents. Is the date 1912 or 1913?

Want Him Again.

Earl B. Tinker, of the Aroostook Mutual Theaters, with headquarters at the Dreamland Theater, Caribou, Maine, sends a very chatty letter and apologizes for the space he consumes, which is something wholly unnecessary. We'll be glad to have him come in again, not because he saves us writing, but because we think that he is a man of ideas.

> I have been for some years, a reader of your valued paper, and since its inauguration, have read with much interest, the department devoted to exhibitor's advertising. So far, however, I have contributed nothing.
> Being somewhat conscience stricken, I am enclosing some of our recent advertising matter. It is not exceptionally valuable, but some of the things may interest you. We, in the country towns, as you of course know, do not have the facilities and advantages that our city brothers enjoy. And instead of stepping in and renting a few mounted posters, and ordering something that we want, we have to dig for it, a great many times being forced to accept poor printing, and other things too numerous to mention.
> I am the booking manager for the Aroostook Mutual Theaters, and in many instances, where a feature is to be used in all the houses, I have run off on one form, a quantity of heralds such as the one enclosed for the "Merchant of Venice," having the outside form changed and dated as we require.
> The "Dreamland News," which you will find enclosed is something new, and seems to be meeting with favor. The adv. just about pay the cost of publishing, at a $4.00 a page rate. We have tried several schemes for increasing our attendance, one of them being as follows: Mr chief operator is a photographer, and we make our own slides of local events, etc. We made arrangements with a local studio to supply us with negatives of people they had taken, we getting permission to make a slide from the sitter. In two weeks, changing slides every day, we became disgusted and stopped it. This was the scheme: If the person whose slide was on the screen, was in the audience when it was run that person would get $1.00. It didn't work at all. The people got the idea in their heads that I stood by the door and except as an accident, never ran the picture of any one present. Can you beat that?
> We are running straight "Mutual Films" bucking a house using licensed service and high-class (?) vaudeville. Both houses charge ten cents admission. We had no kick coming, though, on the amount of business done, until the R. R. strike, which has put the whole of Northern Maine in the hole. There is scarcely any money in circulation, but we are getting our proportionate share. But, this, I don't claim is due to my managing.
> We have them all trimmed on service, and it is due to that more than anything else. Anything that the Mutual Office has in stock, is at our disposal, and you believe me, there are few city theaters that run a program equal to ours. I will select one at random from my lists, viz:
> "Jess," 3 reel Thanhouser.
> "Plague Stricken City," hand-colored Gaumont.
> "Gaumont Weekly," No. 34.
> "The Twins," Thanhouser comedy-drama.
> Rather short on comedy, I admit, but we have any quantity of comedy on hand. You would naturally think that "Jess" would be rather "junky" but it runs like a new film, in fact, we have used year old films that were as good as could be desired. Our average service though, is 2 to 6 months from date of release. Getting 2 or 3 features per week, with privilege of selection. On account of the booker being a "good fellow," though, I don't waste much time selecting programs, for it would be a waste of time to select when we get the programs we do. My chief difficulty is to route the stuff after it is here, without losing time in transit. And with the strike on, we are paying the livery stables a good bit of coin, in order to get shipments around. One night recently when a train was delayed, I had to drive to another nearby town in order to get the reels there. I didn't mind the drive, it was only 12 miles, but the cold was what got me. It was 25 below zero.
> Oh, yes, we have lovely weather here in Caribou. Ten below is like summer, while I think the weather averages 15 below the last couple of weeks.
> When I started this letter I only intended to write one page. This makes four. I hope you don't think I am too "fresh" for a new comer.
> Am encloing a post card photo of myself, to give you an idea of what I look like.
> I wish to thank you and contributing managers, for the many ideas I have seen in your paper and of which I always try to take advantage.

We Might, But—

We would like to run that photograph, but we are afraid that other managers will be jealous.

We do not think a lot of that home-made Merchant of Vehice herald. It really isn't a herald but just a four page folder giving the names of the producing staff and the cast and stating that it was made by the Thanhouser Company from the play. The most interesting thing in it is this arrangement:

C

Which looks very well in large, black type.

More snap is given the regular printing with such lines as "Did you ever have 'the Finger of Scorn' pointed at you?" A good folder is gotten out for Called Back and the reader is reminded of other characters played by those having the leading roles in plays seen at the house. One line, for example, reading:

> GILBERT VAUGHN—James Cruze, who was also the knight in Undine.
> PAULINE MARCH—Florence LaBadie, who has been seen here in Undine and many other pictures.

The story is not run but intelligently discussed and is apt to make for interest and interest makes for business.

The Dreamland News is an eight page paper about average program size. This is chatty and confidential and we think it makes for more real business of the solid sort than all the rest put together. He also uses postcards for specials, the cards giving one free afternoon admission with the frank explanation that it is to build up the matinee business.

Now that Mr. Tinker has found the door, we hope he comes in often.

Another Chat.

Walter Murphy, who is willing to give credit, sends from the Star Theater, Two Harbors, Minn., this chatty letter:

> Following the suggestion of Mr. J. Willis Sayre, Seattle, Wash., in the issue of February 8th, I wrote up our weekly ad. as you will note on the enclosed front page.
> I also made a slide (using a Typo-Pad) on which I put the first paragraph of the advertisement: "Do You Realize That ——— It Is a Fact. Think It Over." I am running the slide at each performance.
> You will also find enclosed a hand-bill in regard to our Prize Night. This was the first attempt at a Prize Night. I obtained my suggestion for the same from Mr. Will Glazer, Faribault Theater, Faribault, Minn. He conducts one every Monday.
> As to the drawing effect will say that it surprised us. We could not handle the crowd, a great number going home without seeing the show. Others stayed outside until the first show was over. We decided that it was too good a drawing card for one show only, as the people all tried to get in for the first show. Next week we will try it another way, giving away about thirty prizes, fifteen to each performance.
> The Bale of Hay caused more laughter than any two vaudeville acts we have ever had in the house. (We are not using any acts now, and will not in the future.)
> The beautiful ring and pin caused a good laugh. We gave the winning person a rolling-pin and a ring of the gong off stage.

That Country Store.

We think that perhaps Mr. Glazer got the "country store" idea from this department, for it was given out very shortly after the Miner burlesque houses tried it out. We do not like the drawing part of the idea for most states have their own lottery law and if the mail is used it brings the advertiser under the Federal law which is a more unpleasant matter still. More than this, it is found that by selecting the recipients rather than by drawing an even better comedy effect may be had. At one of the Miner houses the other night a negro was presented with a live chicken, a razor, a pair of dice, a bottle of gin and two hundred cigarettes, while a whiskered Hebrew of the most orthodox type was given a small live pig—which he promptly swapped for a sack of flour. By electing the people, the contrast heightens the effect, the house manager standing by the door as the audience enters and taking up the cards of those he wants. In the Miner scheme each patron writes his name and address on a card and he gives this up as he enters. These cards selected are marked with the prize and double the fun is gained while the chance of a winner repeating is obviated.

The Slide.

As Mr. Murphy points out, the start of the Sayre advertisement, which appeared in this department in full in the issue dated February 8, is particularly well suited to use as a slide. There is a lot to be done with slides if only you do it right, and lots of people cannot realize all they get unless they are told. We think a succession of slides run about once a week or so would be a good investment for any manager. Do not preach any particular picture but just pictures in general. You can get a lot of material from back numbers and drive home the fact that in the pictures nothing is cheap but the price.

And speaking of slides J. C. Groat, of the Bijou theater, Salamanaca, N. Y., writes that he gets good slides by simply coating the glass with whiting. Even better is adding a little mucilage or weak glue. The pigment sticks better. Any opaque substance will do for that matter, with a little binder, but whiting is cheaper than photographic opaque.

We'll Excuse the Poetry.

We'll excuse the Haynic brand of poetry because Hay and Nicholas, Fairmont, Minn. (we never know whether it is Hay or Nic that writes), told us a long time ago that they did not claim to be Alfredaustins. There is argument behind this alleged rhyming and sound sense behind their letter. We'll run the poetry first:

HAYNIC JINGLES.

(With apologies to the real poets.)
You parents of the little tads
And growing girls and larger lads,
What do you do to help them see
Only things which from guile are free?
The youngsters like the photoplay,
And it does them good in every way
If it points a moral sound and good
And teaches the lesson that it should.
But then, upon the other hand,
They're just as quick to understand
The play or picture that is shown
That lacks a mite in moral tone.
We frankly ask you; do you know
That your child gets at picture show
Something better for every dime
Than bloodshed, violence and crime?
If you but send them to our show
You quickly answer that you know,
For we no picture run, nor will,
That wrong idea can instill.

And a Letter.

With this comes a letter and half a dozen 6 x 9 inch cards.

Will the small-town managers please note that portion of the letter that asks them to come into the experience meeting. Tell what you've done in return for what the others tell you. There's a lot of meat in this letter —much more than the average. Here's what they say:

> We are enclosing for your inspection some of the advertising which we are using.
> The weekly bulletin cards are printed on the multigraph; the cards cost us 80 cents a thousand, we do the work ourselves and they are mailed under a one cent stamp. We put out 300 of them every Monday morning, addressed to the women. We have found them a good advertising medium, as in many cases they reach people who do not take the daily paper.
> We also use the daily paper and enclose a sample of our advertising in that. We have, however, discontinued the daily "Haynic Jingles." We ran them for about one hundred days and while they were excellent advertising, we found the cost prohibitive.
> Another plan which we have found effective is the placing of the advance story in the frame with the poster. Our theater is out of the business section of the town, and we have rented wall space on the side of a drug store on the most prominent corner in the town for our poster display. We have a neat three-sheet board fastened to the building, and use three frames with glass, and with each poster we put the manufacturer's advance story. We then run locals in the paper, such as:
> "Don't buy a pig in a poke. Read the complete stories of the Haynic films in the frames on the Edwards' corner and find out in advance whether it is the kind of a show you like."
> "You don't have to pay ten cents to find out whether the Haynic show is to your liking. You can read the complete stories each day in the frames on the Edwards' corner."
> In a country town of 3,000 or 4,000 people, where the business has never been developed, the advertising proposition is most perplexing. We have received a lot of help from your Department, but we wish that more of the small-town exhibitors would send in their ideas.
> The Hennegan line is excellent if the exhibitor can make use of it, but as far as we are concerned we seldom have a chance to use it. We get our bookings a week or ten days in advance; it takes about a week to get goods from Cincinnati, and the expressage on a thousand heralds is 90 cents. If Hennegan & Co. would keep a supply of their stuff in some city in the Northwest where the exhibitors in this territory could get it quickly, and where the carrying charges would not be so high, it would be a great help.

Sort of Kinda'.

MISS MAIBELLE HEIKES JUSTICE, who is a member of the Chicago branch of the photoplaywrights and who has done a number of stories for Selig, "sorta-kinda" hits us a backswipe when she opines that this department must be "instructive to beginners." It is, in part, what we run it for—to instruct the beginner, who lacks instruction, and some others who are not yet too old to learn new books. We think it sort of interests Miss Justice, who takes a couple of pages to tell us what she thinks—and she is no beginner, at that. Here is what she had to say:

> Your department in the World is always very interesting to me. And it must be most instructive to beginners who have had no previous experience in literary work. Particularly amusing to me are your "injured author" complaints, and their fierce admonishments that none of their rejected scripts be misappropriated. It must be even more amusing to scenario editors. Meanwhile, I think that the duration of retaining scenarios could be shortened. The best magazine editors of New York consider from three days to two weeks amply long to make a decision upon a fiction Ms. The same courtesy should apply to the photoplaywright. In the same way, prices for scripts should be materially increased, for, after all, it is the "plot" or "idea" which swings the play, and for a reputable film company to offer a scenario writer $15 for an original idea, which may be converted into a play in the regular scenario department, is ridiculous. Had it not been the idea, where had been the play? With regard to prices, however, I cannot make a complaint. Ever since I began writing photoplays, last October, I have, in every instance save one, received the highest professional rates. Nor do I ever put a price upon my scenarios. By the offer I receive, I always feel, so is the merits of the script judged. My treatment with the Chicago film companies has been so encouraging, and acceptances so prompt, that most of my work has remained right here. For this appreciation I shall naturally try to turn out the very best possible in the motion play script, and in the meantime do what I can to raise the prices and standards of other playwrights. Still, the play's the thing. No good script goes begging long. And an author cannot expect something for nothing.
> Although it may have proved an excellent thing for some authors, personally I do not approve of the idea of having a dozen or more scripts flying helter skelter over the country like tarantulas. It shows that most of those scripts have been rejected "somewhere"—and an author does not want his name advertised through his possibly rejected scripts. Two or three good scenarios—those in which an author feels he has put his very best efforts—is what counts. Too much good material is divided into too many scripts. Condense the best in a few; send them out; then—wait. A good check may shortly be the proof of the pudding.
> Some authors may have all the "systems" in the world for going about their work. Exploitations of these "systems" always amuse when I read them, for when I began script writing I had not one. For some time I studied the best plays on the screen, to see how the scenes were regulated and how the characters were presented; then I began, hit—or miss. Almost every one, I believe, has a faint idea of the climax with which he wishes to end his play. If he has the dramatic instinct with which to carry the plot along he is still happier. Accordingly, now, when I begin a scenario I slip the original and carbon copy in my typewriter, begin with act I, having made no preliminary notes, except sometimes jotting down the names of my characters, for fear I forget them in the rapid composition of the play; then let the scenario write out itself. I very seldom cease till the scenario is completed, but if a scene should come along which annoys me, I do not sit there and stew all day. A brisk walk out of doors or the performance of some other duty will soon swing that scene into proper shape, sometimes entirely different from what I planned, and the play receives new life and ends in a wholly different manner. Of course, my literary training has been an invaluable help to me in photoplay writing—still I find the dramatic instinct an entirely different thing. We treat a play differently from fiction. Still the plot element is always present in both, and without plot both play and short story must fall flat. I do not believe any of us can explain how or why we write. The germ is there. It is probably a gift. But all I can say, to either amateur or experienced writer, is to let the germ or gift out of your system in its best possible form; then send it where you think it most available. I have the greatest admiration and compassion for the scenario editor, and I am never going to load him down with "flying script" when one or two earnestly written scenarios, to my mind, will serve far better toward engaging his attention.
> You may not wholly agree with me, but no two of us are the same, or will ever be likely to do things the same. To tell the truth, in Boston vernacular—and I am Eastern—I did not know "beans" about scenarios when I began, but I simply went at them in my own way, as I do in everything else. Each of the eleven plays I have taken now is entirely different from the other. When I see them on the screen I will try to judge my "forte" and follow them up in the best direction.

Miss Justice writes from her own point of view, and the point of view of a successful author is always interesting. That is why we publish the numerous systems that rouse Miss Justice's mirth. We think that for many writers the discussion of systems is more or less helpful, according to how intelligently they are understood. We have our own system, for example, which is to give the best hour of the day to photoplay when we can. In any event, we do not write a story until we have it clear in our minds. Then we write it——not with a cast of characters, as Miss Justice does, but with an idea that we have a leading man and a leading woman. We may have a dozen other characters in mind, but we do not put them on the cast slip until we are certain where they really belong.

We'd like to bet we've written about a thousand fiction stories more than Miss Justice has, and we never found that it brought a regular income to have three or four scripts out. In our syndicate work we have had as many as forty stories in one office at the same time, and in our contract photoplay writing we have had almost as many. But it is not numbers that count. It is the availability of that story to that particular concern. In general work it is not numbers, but the number of good scripts out.

We think Miss Justice's views interesting, and we publish them because they are, but the objection to having "a dozen scripts" out proves that she has yet to learn from this column. If you want to earn regular money keep as many good scripts out as you can, and keep them going.

Script Records Again.

Mortimer Riley, who seems to be a new reader, sends in a neat reproduction of his script record. It is in book form with twelve columns down the page for as many companies, the full line across being sub-ruled to permit the going and return dates to be entered. There are other columns for the date of the release slip, the size of the check and remarks.

The idea is good, but we like our card system better, because it is handier and more compact. We are going to give it again for the benefit of those who did not see the earlier issues in which the form was given. We take the card file box that sells for fifty cents and reverse the alphabet cards. On th backs of these we write the names of the companies we expect to deal with. The card themselves, the usual 3 by 5 inch card, we use without ruling. In the space above the red line we enter the name of the script. On the first line below we write the name of the company to which it is to be sent. We stamp in the date with a rubber stamp and slip the card into the proper section. If it comes back we enter another name, stamp the date of return and the date of the fresh start and slip the card into another department. The card looks something like this:

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Majestic | Sept. 16, 1912 | Oct. 24, 1912 |
| Edison | Oct. 24, 1912 | Dec. 3, 1912 |
| Lubin | Dec. 3, 1912 | |

Release slip received Dec. 12.

Paid $20 Dec. 15.

When the story was written the card was placed in the division of the catalogue assigned to Majestic. When it was returned we took it from there and put it in the Edison division. Later it was taken out and put under Lubin. When the acceptance came and the release slip was signed, that fact was entered and the card was filed under accepted. When the check came it was marked paid and filed under the "Paid" tab.

We go a little further than this by numbering our scripts. A card of another color lies in each manufacturer's division. When a story is sold the number only is marked on this card together with the date and the price. If we want to see just what the story was we turn to the "Paid" section and find the card filed numerically.

The trouble with any record book is that you have it prepared for certain companies and have no space for new ones as they are added to the production end. The card works as well with fifty companies as with five as only those companies dealing with that particular script are entered. By filing by manufacturer we know how many cript we have at that studio. By filing under "Accepted" we have the card as a "tickler" if the pay is slow, and the "Paid" gives the record of the business. Cards for scripts not out are kept in the front of the box where they will be seen each time the record is used.

If desired the character of the script; full reel drama, split reel farce, etc., may be added, but your carbon copy (also filed numerically) will give all this information in a moment.

One George Washington.

Here are two announcements, both from Denver:

> This is to notify you that our business has been discontinued. We are informed, film manufacturers in general will not receive manuscripts for consideration if submitted through agents. It is plain that manuscripts should now be submitted by the authors themselves, direct to the producers, if they expect to receive any benefits.
> We hereby cancel our Contract or any other agreement we may have with you, for the reason that it would be useless for us to continue in business under the circumstances.
> Yours truly,
> THE PICTURE PLAYWRIGHTS CLEARING HOUSE,
> Exchange Building.

> You also ask regarding our terms for disposing of plays from our pupils. As it is necessary for us to keep up a correspondence with several large film companies with which we are in touch, and submit Scenarios to the various companies, we ask a 10% commission for such sales.
> Our school is in touch with the largest moving picture companies in America, and we are in a position to give you the best service possible.

There is one George Washington in Denver and one Ananias. It does not require deep thought to arrive at the fact that the Clearing House has seen the light. Perhaps the other concern will, in due time. We hope so.

Likes the Universal.

A photoplay writer sends in an account of his experience with the new Universal reading department that doesn't sound a bit like the complaints of three months ago. He writes:

> I recently read in your department about the Universal Company's new, or more correctly, revised, photoplay department, so I decided to send one of my scripts there. They are as prompt in replying as one could wish, they are fair and the pay is good.

And in return the correspondent is informed that his name has been sent along to the head of the Boston circle.

Seeks the Sea.

Nell Shipman writes that she has contracted for so much work that she has closed her Los Angeles office for a time and has gone to the shore where she can work in greater privacy and catch up with the order. As she adds she is taking two stenographers and a dictaphone, we opine she must be running a photoplay factory.

Selling Talk.

Steve Talbot happened along the other night and began to talk shop. One of the first things he said was that the market was narrow.

"Ninety per cent. of the stuff," he began, "seems to be written by staff authors and chaps like you get most of the rest. I don't see where the average outside man gets off."

We gently explained to him that the average outside chap did not get off because he never got on, and that chaps "like us" sold stuff because we delivered the goods, not because we had been dragged on the "inside" wherever that may be, but because we forced our way in with the sort of stuff that directors could use and not the stories we thought that they should use. And here's the rest of what we told him:

Most studios have one or more men who can write scripts. They do it as a part of their work as editors or producers and generally get little or nothing extra for it. If they could write a lot of good stuff, they would not, as a rule, find it profitable to stay on the payroll of a single studio, but they can write as good stuff as most of that which comes in and more than that, it is written in practicable working-script form that the director can pick up and use.

This being the case, why should an editor buy a script from John Smith, of Painted Post, for $25, when Bill Jones can write precisely the same story and Bill is down in the studio yard? It is part of Bill's regular work to write scripts, and if the best that the mail turns up is a story of a little boy who coaxes his father to stop drinking, Bill can be called up into the office and set to work on a story of a little girl who induces her mother not to elope. Bill can write one of those to the last, sad sob, for he has written six or eight just like it.

If that's the best the "outsider" can do, Bill can do better than that and save the company money, but if the outsider sends in a script that Bill can't touch, pretty soon the outsider is brought inside like the rest of the insiders, for the "insider" is merely the "outsider" who writes such good scripts that the producers cry for them. There always will be a certain percentage of the work done in the studios, but if the idea is good and the editor and producer can see it is good they snap it up and encourage the outsider to come inside.

Undoubtedly there are a lot of directors and some editors who do not see the scripts as the authors can. We had a story passed up the other day because the director said it would never, so long as time existed, get over with any audience. And when we told A. D. Hotaling about it, he kicked because we had not given it to him.

There is the simplest sort of way of getting on the inside. Try out the editors until you find two or three who can see stuff from the same view point as yourself. Then give them all you can that is really high grade and do not give them stuff that is not up to the standard. That's the way—and about the only way—to work in on guarantee. Then you'll not talk about insiders or outsiders, but we gather that Mr. Talbot's work has been too desultory to command attention anywhere.

The Reason Why.

"I don't see any plot in it. I am a dummy about plots. I don't understand it. I have Leslie W. Quirk's 'How to Write Short Stories.' I took his magazine for a time. I read so much about plots that I despise the word."

Then she came to us—and got more about plots.

That's the reason why some writers fail. They despise the word "plots." They do not understand "plots." They are dummies about "plots." And yet they want to write photoplays which are nothing more or less than plots, fully developed and properly displayed by technique.

This correspondent is not alone by several thousand. She read in the advertisement of a certain school that anyone could write plots. She took the course. They took her money. She came to us and we returned her fee because the stuff was so bad we didn't have the heart to charge her for telling how bad it was. She bought a copy of Technique and tells us she read it several times. In the next paragraph she explains she has put in no leaders because she did not know how to mark them, though this is very clearly explained.

To put it in a word she wants to write photoplays, but she is either unwilling or unable to study and assimilate what she learns. Writing photoplays is just as much a matter of hard work as writing stories or chopping wood. It requires thought, intelligence and imagination, but above all other things it requires application.

If you are not willing to work and work hard, if you are not willing to work hard for a year or two, perhaps, don't write photoplays. You'll not succeed and you merely make things harder for those who are willing to put in the time.

You may not be able to write fluent English and your grammar may not be all that it should be, and still you may be able to get by; but if you lack imagination and application, keep away and leave the field to those who are willing to make a fight for a chance.

There is a difference between writing photoplays and fiction stories, but the photoplay is not any easier to write. Keep that in mind and if you are not willing to give the best that is in you to the work—to give ALL that's in you, for the love of the business and your own peace of mind GET OUT. You don't belong.

Inquiries.

NOTE—No questions can be replied to by mail. Look for your answers here. A list of addresses to which photoplays may be sent will be supplied on receipt of a STAMPED AND ADDRESSED ENVELOPE.

M. H.—Exchange prices differ with localities, but we do not note an appreciable difference in cost between licensed and independent service of equal age. The cost of film is the same in both cases.

L. W. P.—"The Better Man," Reliance, was released March 9, 1912. "The Seal of Time," Rex, is dated April 14, 1912. We do not find that third title in the last eighteen months.

DOUBLE U—Sign your name and address next time, please. If you are told that your story is identical to a magazine story, we would advise you to retire the script, even if you never have heard of the published story. It hurts you to send such stuff around, no matter how innocent of plagiarism you may be.

P. S. G.—If you've yet to find a company taking six weeks to reject your stuff you are lucky. We do not think your story was plagiarized.

J. M.—Peter Lang was the father in "The Guiding Light." We do not know the doctor.

HARRIETT—What do you mean by "composer of "The Higher Duty?" " If you mean author, we do not give names. We lack the Powers cast. Miss Fields is not working at present. Never heard of Pathe's "Alice Shore." Do you mean "Jane Shore?" We do not give the names of European casts because we cannot get them. Miss Lawrence is not working at present.

EDNA—Your question is vaguely put. Vitagraph released a large number of pictures in which Miss Helen Gardner appeared, but the Helen Gardner company has made but the single release, "Cleopatra." Miss Grace Henderson was the rich woman in "The String of Pearls." She has returned to the dramatic stage. Selig released "Cinderella" with Miss Mabel Taliaferro in the name part. Tom Carrigan was the prince. He has lately returned to Selig. William Christie Miller was the old man in "Man's Genesis." In "For His Son," Charles West was the son, Charles Mailes the father and Alfred Paget the clerk. We do not know that anyone has a husband or wife, officially, that is.

INQUIRY—Address the New York office in future and sign your name, please. Miss Blanche Sweet was the young wife in "Three Friends." We do not get the Pathe casts.

J. M. P.—We do not regard subjects more than eighteen months old as of general interest and the cards are removed from the files. Harold Lockwood was David and Henry W. Otto, Frank, in Selig's "A Little Child Shall Lead Them."

STEVE—We know of one company that accepts the synopsis alone. Keystone. Pronounce it to rhyme with steps. In "Fatty and the Bandits," Fatty's sweetheart was Miss Saunders. You are right as to Mr. Herron.

EDISON FILM BUG—The first issue of this paper was dated March 9, 1907. The early volumes are not for sale, nor can we refer you to any other publication that can give you synopses of early subjects.

E. S. U. R.—We consider the player you name a good actor. Why he plays certain parts is purely a matter between himself and the company he works for. He was cast in the play you mean, though you state the title incorrectly.

A. D.—It's been nearly two years since the Nestor Company had an office in Bayonne. It is now a part of the Universal Company and located in Los Angeles. You'll have to keep up to date. Stick a United States two cent stamp on an envelope addressed to yourself, send it to us and we'll send you a list of the correct addresses, as we offer each week at the head of this column. You might write the Dead Letter Office, Washington, for the script, but it will be quicker to copy your carbon.

J. E. S.—Miss Blanche Sweet was the girl in "The God Within."

MARIE.—You've got to break yourself of asking for "the girl" and "the fellow," or we cannot answer. Miss Mae Marsh was the girl in "The Civillian." Ray Myers seems to be the man you mean. We think the Keystone player you ask for is Fred Mace. He is a former Biographer.

EXHIBITOR.—E. H. Allen was the sheriff in "The Struggle." We do not know the man who played the sheriff. Mr. Stanton is still with Kay-Bee. Joe King was the ball player in "The Ball Player," and the bandit. He is still with Broncho.

C. E. C.—The Identifier has not yet located the player you want. Miss Marguerite (not Helen), Loveridge, is still with the Biograph so far as we know.

B. L. D.—In "Kissing Kate," Miss Grace Lewis was Kate and Dell Henderson Bob. J. Jiquel Lanoe was Miss Sweet's sweetheart in "Pirate Gold." Ed. Dillon was the daughter's sweetheart in "What is the Use of Repining."

J. A. S.—Companies pay all the way from $10 to $100 for scripts. The average run is between $20 and $35. Edison takes about eight weeks to pass on a script. You might query Edison on that suggestion if you can get the scripts out in good shape.

K. B. T. N.—See reply to B. L. D. Selig produced "Justinian and Theodora."

M. E. H.—Richard Stanton was the burglar-husband in "A Shadow of the Past." Miss Mildred Harris was the little girl. Joe King was Billy King in "The Favorite Son."

H. G. P.—W. Cabanne was Ed. Dillon's rival in "At the Basket Picnic." Still "between you and me," we do not worry about photoplayer's faces. If the face in question has that "putty made" effect, whatever that may be, shut your eyes while the film is on.

J. W.—Never heard of that first subject. There were several women in "The Blot in the Scutcheon." You can "bother" us as often as you like, but please be definite.

BERLIN.—Thanhouser is not in the market for scripts. Almost any of the companies are in the market for the class of stories mentioned. Essanay is buying.

PAUL REVERE.—Several Paul Revere films have been made, one a part of the Edison historical series, we think.

B. I. H.—Edna Foster, who sems to be the child you mean, is playing with various companies as they have need of her services.

A. D.—We have no cast for the play mentioned.

NORMA.—Ray Myers was Stein in "The Man They Scorned." He was also Lieut. Cole in "In the Ranks." Tom Ince does not play in pictures. It's a full sized man's job putting on the sort of stuff he does without "saving a salary" too. He did appear with Sir Thomas Lipton in a recent Keystone release. The paper you use is all right for scripts, both as to size and weight.

B. G.—The slip you enclose is the regulation rejection slip. It may mean little or much.

R. C. D.—We think that a scene requiring a lion to carry away a person would not be regarded with favor, especially by the player. You can write such a scene so that a dummy may be used, perhaps, but it would be better not to ask too much of the lion. Few lions are finished actors.

Moving Picture Machine Operators' Local Union No. 160, I. A. T. S. E., Cleveland, Ohio.

Office address, 310 Prospect Avenue, President H. M. Hulbert, Vice-President Sam. Shaw, Financial Secretary-Treasurer, Harland Holenden, Recording Secretary L. Shafranek, Business Agent Benjamin Brown.

Moving Picture Machine Operators' Local Union No. 543.

Paterson, N. J. meets in Helvetia Hall every fourth Sunday, President Walter Penny, Vice-President Jack Adam, Recording Secretary J. Johnstone, Royal Theater, Main Street, Financial Secretary, Herman Freudberg, Treasurer Wm. Thompson; no business agent.

A Visit.

On Friday, Feb. 14, in response to an invitation from the recently organized local union 543, I. A. T. S. E., Paterson, N. J., I visited that city to attend the ball given by the organization. Before going to the hall I dropped in for a few moments at the Washington Theater, Main Street, where a large picture is shown. The illumination was excellent, soft and brilliant, and the light well handled. The ball was a big success. Helvetia Hall, where it was held, was a large one with two floors, and both were filled to overflowing at 10:30. All hands seemed to be enjoying themselves to the limit. The union has nineteen members They are a fine looking set of men, most of them with ample experience in their profession. May the new union live long and prosper. Its officers will be found in the official roster at the head of the department.

Troublous Trouble.

Trinidad, Colo., (Just like him, Ed.) writes thusly:

> Have been a World reader since 1909 and a Dept. fan even since it first appeared. Am running a Simplex. It has been in service about five months and gave no trouble until recently. The first thing that went wrong was the cam-pin, which wore on one side. It also damaged the star as shown on extra sheet (No extra sheet here, Ed.,) I got busy, went to a machine shop and made a pin from a nail, grinding it down to size and tempering with blow torch and acids. Everything was fine until 6 P. M. when picture began to jump like a rubber ball. Examined and found one of the star points broken off. Wired for new star, had a new point welded on star and run one more day, with fair results, when it broke off again. My present trouble is with my shutter. And now let me ask how long a carbon should be burned. I burn mine down to two inch stubs. (That's certainly short enough, Ed.) J. P. Morgan, of the Wm. H. Swanson Film Co., Denver, claims that, with a Simplex lamp wide open and set with six inch lower carbon and 12 inch upper, he can run 15 hours with the set, and will burn his lower to ½ inch stub. Says he will do no damage to clamps or connections. I do not believe this can be done.

The brother also sends three pictures of the theater, but, while I thank him for them, his letter is a little long and space is too crowded to publish them. Before brother Morgan talks so positively, suppose he states what amperage and kind of current he is talking about. If he will do as he claims with 45 amperes d. c., using ⅝ carbons, I will make him a present of one hundred dollars. If he will do it (run 15 hours) with 60 amperes a. c., ⅝ carbons, I will pay him a like sum. Come on 'brother Morgan,' I've burned up a few carbons myself. You couldn't even make good using 25 amperes. The Simplex is a good lamp, but there is no magic connection with it. And now as to the cam-pin: You should keep a complete framing device on hand all ready to slip in. This is not excessive in cost and may save its price in the saving of one evening's business. A nail is not the right kind of steel to use for such a purpose. How in the name of heaven you managed to weld a point on a star passes my comprehension. As to the shutter matter: Referring to page 299 of the handbook, the last sentence of instruction No. 35 reads: "If the streak shows at top or bottom of letters in titles, or flashes up and down from any white object in the film, it is evident that the shutter is out of adjustment. The remedy is to turn knob 110 plate 2, one way or the other until the streaks disappear." Referring to plate 2, the shutter adjusting slide part 107 should be in the middle position when the shutter is set, thus allowing an equal amount of adjustment both ways. If the block is at one end or the other of its travel when you set the shutter, you will have only one direction in which you can adjust the shutter with knob 110, and this will cause trouble, and this is probably where your difficulty lies.

Fort Worth Answered.

Brother John Griffiths, Ansonia, Conn. writes:

> I see by January 8th. issue, page 567, you call for opinions on the question of amperage to be used with screens of different type, and I am presumptuous enough to submit my own opinion. In the question propounded by Ft. Worth, A has a considerably smaller picture than B, who is using the best possible reflecting surface, namely, a mirror screen. It is, however, apparently a foregone conclusion that B, who is using a perfectly smooth aluminum curtain, would require the most current, but I myself have used one of these smooth aluminum screens and I never dared to use more than 40 amperes a. c. with a 15 foot picture on that type of curtain. I am now using a pebble or matte surface aluminum screen and 60 amperes is fine. On the old, smooth finish screen a dense indoor scene showed up elegantly, but when I came to an out-door scene of sky and sunshine it was awful. There was simply a blur. It is my opinion that an excess of light on a smooth finish aluminum screen results in so much glare that the definition is practically destroyed. It is also my opinion that the question is not one of how much illumination, but rather of how clear and sharp a definition of the picture we can secure. We cannot imitate d. c. by increasing a. c. amperage. In using the Mortimer film cleaner the last half of the reel pulls hard, this may be overcome by running the first half through and then releasing the fastener, pulling the film through loose and then rewinding through the cleaner, cleaning the last half or the half opposite to the first half cleaned. This scheme is simple, but the cleaning is done better if the pads are changed for the last half. I am glad to inform you that our union is in flourishing condition, although only about a year old. We have 40 members, all interested in the best possible projection. There is an almost unanimous demand for union operators, in spite of our higher wage schedule, thanks to an able examining board.

As to your remarks concerning the screen, brother Griffiths, they are in the main correct, as far as they go. I would refer you, however, to the reply by another correspondent; either this week or next. I am glad to know that your union is prospering. What you say simply backs up what I have been preaching in this department for a long time, namely, that an increase in salary schedule is comparatively easy if the work of the members be in accordance therewith.

Lens Trouble.

Washington, D. C. writes:

> Am running two machines, each equipped with a Pathe lens projecting a 14 foot picture at 55 feet. One of my lenses shows a perfect picture, whereas I have trouble with the other. When the picture is in focus at the center it is out at top, bottom and both sides, and vice versa. Both lenses are supposed to be exactly the same. Would you kindly let me know about how many degrees Fahrenheit it takes to set a running film on fire?

As to your lens, Washington, I cannot say positively what is the matter. Take it apart and thoroughly clean all the lenses, putting them back together with the side having the heaviest convex towards the screen. The very thick lens, which really is two lenses cemented together, should be at the front end of the barrel. If this does not remedy the trouble, then I would suggest that you get a substitute lens from your film exchange and return the Pathe lens to that Company for examination. I do not know of any test which has been made covering the last question you ask. The degree of heat, however, would have to be high, since a film at normal speed is only exposed to the light approximately one sixteenth of a second.

Motiograph Lamp.

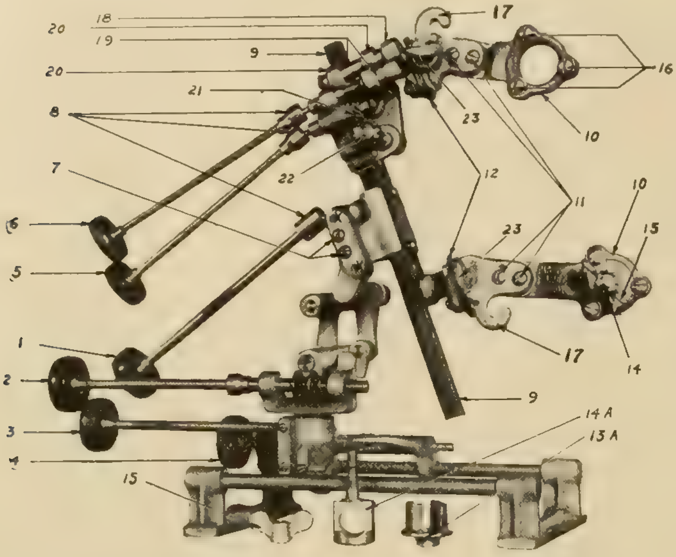
The Enterprise Optical Company, Manufacturers of the Motiograph Projector, have submitted one of their new projection arc lamps to this department for inspection and description. I am glad indeed to be able save for one or two minor points to say that the lamp is an excellent one, strong, rigid and having all necessary adjustments in excellent form. The insulation is well placed and ample. If kept lubricated with graphite this lamp should enable the operator to produce and maintain perfect results, so far as the lamp is concerned.

The points to be criticised are: (a) The carbon arms, from rack bar to tip of arm, measure seven inches for the lower and six for the upper. The lower weight 1¾ pounds, without the carbon, yet it has a bearing of only ⅞ x ½ inch on the rack bar to sustain all this weight, and it is held by two screws about ¼ inch only in diameter. The rack bar should be extended down ½ inch further and the up and down bearing made that much longer, another holding screw being added, also the side flanges should extend back to rear edge of bar. As it is now, the tendency will be for the screws to stretch and loosen the bearing, while a sharp blow or the strain exerted by the operator in setting carbons (unnecessary but usually present) would be too much for such a bearing at such a leverage. The upper carbon arm bearing is not as strong as it might be, considering what it carries, but it is not weak enough to be objectionable. I would respectfully suggest to the Enterprise Company that they could still further improve an already excellent lamp, without much added cost of manufacture, by making the rack bars one inch by one-half inch, instead of, as now, ½ x ½ inch. This would make for greater rigidity all around and allow ample carbon arm support. It would mean only a change in three castings and the added metal in the bars.

Now please understand that my criticisms are not intended to and must not be taken to condemn the lamp. Far from it. The lamp is otherwise so excellent that I want to see these minor objectionable features removed. I am looking at the matter from the operator's point of view. And now to describe the lamp.



In the illustration we have extra carbon arm parts 14a, 15 and 15a at the base of the lamp, these parts having been removed from upper carbon arm in order to show the detail construction.

1. Is the knob actuating rack bars 9-9, by means of which the carbons are fed. When rack bars are fully extended (They are closed in the picture, to save space), there is 16 inches from center of clamp screw 14, to its mate above. By means of knob 2 the entire lamp is raised or lowered bodily. Knob 3 swings the entire lamp sidewise. Knob 4 pulls the lamp ahead or back, each turn of the knob moving the lamp almost one-half of an inch. Knob 5 actuates gears 21 and 22 by means of which the upper carbon arm is pulled or pushed sidewise, thus moving upper carbon sidewise in relation to the lower. Upper carbon arm 18 is supported on rods 19, which slide straight in and out in bearings 20. This movement is accomplished by knob 6 and the effect is to move the upper carbon ahead or back in relation to the lower, By means of knobs 5 and 6 the operator is enabled to force his crater into any desired position and he is thus master of his light. The lamp may be tilted at any desired angle by means of screws 7. Two vacant screw-holes, X-X, are seen and the angle of the lamp will depend in which holes screws 7 are placed, the two upper placing the lamp practically straight up and down and the two lower at a heavy angle. Ordinarily the two center holes are the ones to use. By means of screws 11 the carbon arms may be set at an angle to each other, if desired. Part 13 (see also 13 A) receives the carbon in notches shown in 13 A. These notches should be kept perfectly clean and free from scale. The carbons may be angled by loosening screws 16 and revolving parts 13. Part 14 is shown in detail at 14 A. On the whole this clamp is strong, well made, flexibile and calculated to make perfect electrical contact with the carbon, provided, of course, it be kept clean. The insulation is shown at 12. It is ample, being full ⅛ inch thick and extending out ⅛ inch beyond the casting in every direction, thus guarding against carbon-dust short circuits. The wire binding posts are on the operating side at 23-23, which is very convenient.

From the New York Union.

Mr. Thomas Costello, business representative branch No. 2, local union No. 35 I. A. T. S. E. New York City, contributes the following:

> Through the projection department, on behalf of local No. 35 I. A. T. S. E., Moving Picture Operators Branch No. 2, I would like space to point out the advantages offered the operator through holding an I. A. T. S. E. card, as well as to the exhibitor through the employment of members of the Moving Picture Operators Union. The aim of this local is to organize a body of clean-cut men who take their profession seriously, and to eliminate so far as possible the crank turner. We believe that the exhibitor will be far more willing to pay the price if we provide him with men who produce the results, since the up-to-date exhibitor knows that good projection, and good projection only, can make his house a paying proposition. This union is, through the I. A. T. S. E., affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, the New York State Federation of Labor, the Central Federated Union of New York City, the Central Labor Union of Brooklyn and the United Hebrew Trades. It is the only union of operators in New York City thus affiliated, or which can be thus affiliated. It is the only local in this city which can send men on the road with a production. It is the only local which can place men in theaters where members of the I. A. T. S. E. are employed. These are simply statements of fact. They are made only because we understand misleading statements have been made in certain quarters. A union card placed in the box office is a money getter. The illustrated lectures, conducted under the auspices of the union label, reach 1,500 people in different parts of the city every night. Thus from 10,000 to 12,000 people a week see our union slide thrown on the screen, the lecturer at the same time appealing to laboring men and women to patronize photoplay theaters displaying this card. It is therefore to the interest of the exhibitor to have it in his box office. I wish also to say that branch No 2 stands behind every one of its men, giving the exhibitor protection. If the exhibitor submits a complaint against any member it is taken before the body. Should he be proven guilty, a settlement is made with the exhibitor by the union. Our phone is 2010 Bryant. The office is No. 259 West 42nd. Street. In closing, I wish to thank you, on behalf of the local, for any space you may accord this communication. The local fully realizes that the projection department is the surest way of reaching every operator and exhibitor, not only in this city but all over the country.

While it is not the desire or intention of this department to in any way take further part in the unfortunate local fight now being waged, we will always, as a matter of course, accord space to communications from local union No. 35 branch No. 2, it being the union affiliated with the American Federation of Labor and the various local and state central bodies as well as with the International I. A. T. S. E. Brother Costello's letter reads well, and it is to be sincerely hoped that the union will back up his statements in every way. If it does, then, regardless of any thing else, it must and will eventually succeed. There are at present approximately 600 moving picture theaters in New York City. In a large percentage of houses, I deeply regret to say the projection can only be called projection through courtesy. This is not always the fault of the operator. Too frequently the fault is shared by the operator and the manager, the latter demanding that film be rushed through at race horse speed, apparently caring nothing as to the excellence of the result on the screen. Quantity instead of quality still rules in all too many houses. If local union No. 35, branch No. 2 will devote its efforts towards securing the co-operation of managers and operators of first class houses where real projection is appreciated, it will, in my judgement, do well. The other houses, in course of time, will be forced to fall in line.

More Foolishness.

The Editor of this department is informed that the Chicago authorities are just now industriously engaged in kicking up more trouble. These same authorities, or their predecessors, have always held the palm for the formulation of more or less idiotic rules, regulations and laws, and those same rules, regulations and laws, have cost the exhibitors of that city thousands upon thousands of dollars of money which might just as well have been thrown in the sewer for all the good accomplished. I distinctly remember the time when the law was passed to the effect that the ceilings and walls (by some error they omitted the floors) of all moving picture theater rooms situated upon other stories of a building must be covered with sheet steel backed up by ⅜ inch (I think that was the dimension) asbestos, and how an inspector attempted to compel Mr. W. R. Cosart to cover an 18 inch brick wall, 18x80 feet with that kind of fire proofing. Just now they are testing projection mechanisms, being paid a goodly sum per hour for the test. One of the tests is that a film shall stand still for thirty minutes with the automatic fire shutter down and the concentrated light of a 45 ampere arc are turned on it. Could asininity and idiocy go further? What is the purpose of such a test? Who would ever leave a film standing for that length of time with the light on? Their charge is 75 cents per hour for the test, and the general impression is that something more than ample time is used on the test—at 75 per. In fact the direct charge is made that a form of petty graft is thus put into operation. It seems to me that it is about time projection machine manufacturers combined and took these officials into the courts. Certainly a stop can be put to such outrages (the test such as I have set forth is nothing more or less than an outrage, since it serves no good purpose whatever.) I firmly believe that the courts would not uphold such a ridiculous proposition, but no one machine manufacturer could afford to take the matter up alone. And the utterly ridiculous feature of it all is, that while the authorities are making these absurd tests on projection machines, they still allow the same old chestnut of a "fireproof projection room," to exist in Chicago, which is no more fire proof, insofar as protecting the audience is concerned, than as if it did not exist at all. Chicago is also censuring pictures to the very limit, cutting and mutilating films that have been passed by the National Board. Yet Chicago has the "honor" of allowing to exist the most disgraceful underworld district of any city in the world. It seems to me as though Chicago is attempting to be exceedingly righteous with its right hand, and just the opposite with its left. This, gentlemen, is not mincing words. I lived in the Windy Village for a matter of five years, and I think I know both it, and its Public Masters (officials) fairly well. Plainly they have not improved any since I left. Perhaps the best way to get around this proposition would be for all the moving picture interests of Chicago to band together and get the whole thing placed under state control. State control has worked out well in other instances, and it certainly could not be any worse than the present Chicago farce.

Can't Do It.

A number of letters have been received from branch No. 2 local union No. 35 asking me to attend all meetings and help to secure the best possible action by the local on the various questions coming before it. This I regret to say is practically impossible. My time is completely taken up with other duties. I would like to attend all the meetings, but "once in a while" is all I can manage.

From a Traction Engineer.

Mr. Lloyd P. Lewis, Langdon, Alberta, Canada, writes:

> On Page 260 January 18th, issue William Lorence, New York City, says: "The sure way to stop condenser breakage is to boil the lenses in salt water." Now I am not an operator or exhibitor, but I am a steam traction engineer in a country where traction engines are big. I have thoroughly proven, at least to my own satisfaction, that boiling water-glasses and lantern globes makes > them very much tougher, and that when thus treated they will stand more rough treatment than otherwise. As to the salt I cannot say, but I do know it to be a fact that salt water will get very much hotter than will plain water.

We do not care to comment on this matter, but pass it along to the department fans, who can experiment to their hearts' content. We thank the Langdon friend for adding his quota of what he believes to be fact on the condenser matter.

Unionizing Baltimore.

Mr. G. Kingston Howard, President of local union No. 181, I. A. T. S. E. Baltimore writes under seal of the union:

> I am thoroughly pleased to be able to announce that, after a struggle of fifteen months, which was conspicuous for the sane and gentlemanly tactics employed, we have succeeded in unionizing all of Pearce & Scheck's theaters. Their operators were all obligated at our last regular meeting, Monday February 3rd. In closing I extend the best wishes of local union 181 to the Department and its Editor.

Congratulations both to the Baltimore brothers and to Pearce & Scheck. I am sure that both will be the gainer through the unionization of the houses. Let us trust the further relations between Messrs. Pearce & Scheck, and local union No. 181 will be most pleasant and profitable to all concerned.

Semi-Personal Matters.

Recently an operator in Wichita, Kansas, wrote complaining bitterly of treatment received from a certain Wichita manager, and commenting caustically upon Wichita managers in general. I published his letter, whereupon a reply was received from a Wichita manager who, in turn, gave the operator a severe dressing down. To secure the facts in the case, I wrote supposedly disinterested parties in Wichita, asking them for the standing of the operator in question. The reply was not favorable. I therefore published the theater manager's letter, omitting the operator's name. The operator now comes back with a general denial of all the manager's claims. I feel that a mistake has been made in giving space to correspondence of this kind. In the future this error will be avoided. There is little to be gained through the publication of semi-personal grievances, I cannot personally know and judge of the facts, therefore I cannot speak with authority, and shall, as I have said, in the future avoid all such matters. In the present case, I believe there was some fault on both sides. The operator in question sends in several excellent letters of recommendation, with postage for their return, but he gives no street address, therefore I hold the letters until it is supplied. The letters speak highly of the operator's ability.

Wire Connection.

Mr. Harry H. Kerr, chief operator of the Alcazar, Tampa, Fla., and his assistant, John Felte, are using two Power's 6 machines with three winged shutters, they have cut the two flicker blades down ¼ of an inch each and added ¼ inch to each side of the main blade, thus cutting the same amount of light, but they say, reducing the flicker. They also have cut an opening in the back of their lamp house, extending from the bottom up about half way to the top, probably about one inch wide, so that instead of attaching the upper wire directly to the lamp binding post, they attach, in its place, a strip of brass, ½ inch wide, which extends outside the lamp house, through the hole before mentioned, to which they attach the feed wire.

I must take issue with the brothers, as to their reducing flicker by thus changing the Power's 6 shutter. The making of the shutter blades of unequal width, Mr. Kerr, has the direct effec of increasing flicker. The nearer the three blades can be kept exactly the same width, the better. By this scheme you would, however, eliminate whatever travel ghost you might have. As to the metal strip it is all right, provided you wrap the same with heavy insulating tape, or other form of insulation, at the point it passes through the lamp house, so that it cannot possibly come into contact with the metal. The hole in the lamp house, would not, however, be allowed in most cities, although it is perfectly safe. In fact, as I have before stated, it would be perfectly safe to take the whole back out of the lamp house.

Mercury Arc Rectifier.

Mr. Arthur Adama, Manager of the Happy Hour Theater, Lake Placid, N. Y., writes as follows:

> Am using 110 volts, 60 cycle current through an economy coil. I am not satisfied with the results, therefore would like your opinion as to the value of a mercury arc rectifier. There is a demand for the rectifier for charging purposes, and although charging batteries is not my ambition, I thought it would help pay for the device. My main purpose is for projection.

The General Electric Mercury arc rectifier is a successful device. It is giving satisfaction in a large number of theaters and is economical in operation. I do not know, however, if you can use the projection rectifier for battery charging purposes or not, I am inclined to think not. Write Mr. R. E. Russell, Rectifier Dept. General Electric Company, Schenectady, N. Y., for information on that point.

Condenser Breakage.

Mr. H. P. Walls, owner and manager of the Bungalow Theater and the Maywood Opera House, Corning, Cal., orders a handbook and remarks:

> Some time ago I loaned my copy of your first edition to a brother exhibitor, and had a hard time getting it back. I would not be without even the old book, much less the new. Am having a little trouble with condensers, breaking in my new Powers 6-A. Am using 60 amperes a. c. through a Formostat with fine results. I fully agree with Brother Gregg, page 463, February 1st issue, regarding motors. I was literally forced to take the motor away from my operator for no other reason than his failure to watch his projection.

Pad the lenses with asbestos so they will not touch metal. I have other good reports on the Formostat.

Attaching Outside Shutters.

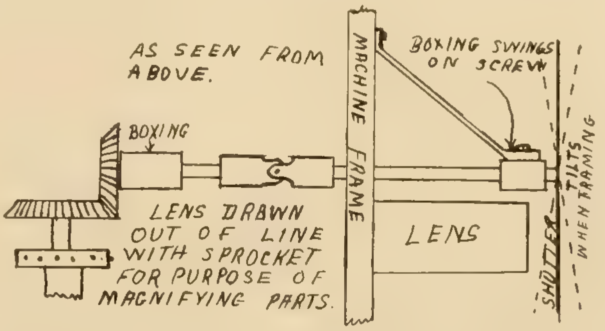
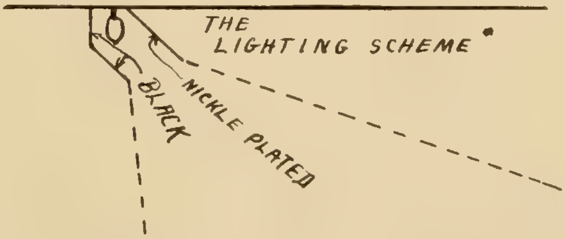
Mr. E. Cailleux, Sausalito, Cal., contributes the following:

> Have an Exhibition Model Edison on which I installed an outside shutter. The only thing I purchased was a universal joint. The whole thing is made plain by the sketch. I tried many combinations of two and three winged outside shutters, but failed to obtain satisfactory results. With the three winger I had to cut too large a percentage of the light or else make the flicker blades smaller than the main blade, and this gave a very objectionable flicker. With the other blades of equal width, I cut more than 75 percent of the light, which was, of course, an impossible proposition. At last I tried an idea of my own, and obtained wonderful success. I had one 30 tooth and one 20 tooth bevel gear made. The 20 tooth gear I placed on the shutter shaft, and the 30 tooth on the balance wheel shaft, I then made a 2 wing shutter (which really acted as a 3 winger since the shutter revolves 1½ turns per picture, so that each blade alternately acts as a main blade and the light is cut three times for each picture,) thus giving three interruptions of the light per picture, each of exactly the same duration, since, the blades must be precisely the same width. I also send a sketch of a theater lighting scheme which I consider ideal. The sketch is self-explanatory. Although you can read ordinary print in any part of the house while the show is on, not a ray of direct light strikes the audience or the screen. I am a member of local union 162.





Your lighting scheme is simply an improvement on the one I have advocated for years, and which you will find illustrated in back numbers of this department, as well as on page 401 of the new handbook. Personally I think it is the best plan yet evolved for lighting a theater, but I would not have the rays strike the front wall at all. In the brother's scheme he has the top of the reflector nickel-plated, and paints the bottom and back dull black. I believe his idea is worth experimenting with. Your scheme for installing an outside shutter on the Edison Exhibition model is all right, but while I may be in error, I cannot see where you gain anything by speeding the shutter up. The length of time the shutter blade must cover the lens is directly dependent upon the speed of your intermittent movement, and this you have not changed, and cannot change; therefore, it appears to me that you would simply have to make your shutter blades wider, and would get exactly the same amount of light you would get with a regular three winged shutter running at ordinary speed. I have not time to study this matter out, but simply state it as it appears to me. If I am wrong kindly accept my apologies—and show me wherein my error lies.

Bartlesville's Shutter.

Mr. A. E. Adama, Avant, Okla., writes:

> Kansas City operator says he can't make Mr. May's shutter work on his Edison. There is only one thing wrong with the shutter pattern as printed, namely: its diameter is just a little too great. I made one, cut its diameter down a little, and it sure took the flicker out of my picture. I have a 12 foot picture at 65 feet. I have also adopted the ¾ inch cardboard hole in the front of my objective lens, as suggested by Redondo Beach in February 1st issue. It greatly improved the definition of my picture. We have our own light plant, a 6 H. P. Fairbanks Special Electric Engine, connected to a 5 k.w. Fairbanks dynamo. Speed of engine, 400 r. p. m., speed of dynamo 1900. The current is 110 volts with no load and 115 with a full load, using an Edison Grid rheostat. We start the engine at 7 P. M. and at 9 P. M. go out and oil it around. The rest of the time it runs itself and we have not lost a night in eighteen months, which is some record for an isolated plant, is it not? I am working for a real manager; not so old in the business but one of a kind you do not find everywhere. It happens, however, that he is a woman. I get everything I want in the way of supplies, and the manager is not always trying to tell > me what to do. Just leaves matters to me but, expects me to deliver the goods. I put the framing lever on the right hand side of my machine by simply turning the whole thing over; that is to say the gears, plates and boxing. It works fine.

I presume from what you say of the framing lever that you are using an Edison machine. As to the manager, "he" has taken the right course in allowing you full swing in the operating room, but she should demand that you deliver the results and accept no excuses for failure to do so. You must not expect her to supply you with everything necessary and then accept inferior results, but I am sure you would not expect him to stand for any such proposition. I am not aiming this at you, Brother Adama, but simply calling the attention of all operators to the fact that when a manager treats them right it is up to them to reciprocate.

Nothing Doing.

From Los Angeles, Cal., comes a communication signed by "Several Operators" which reads:

> We have a kick to make, also a suggestion to offer. First, that you leave out of the Projection Department all matter pertaining to operators' unions, as it is of no use to us and many others, and takes up valuable space. We buy the paper for the knowledge we gain, and not to read that a Vermont union obtained a charter, etc. The Projection Department is most excellent. Kept it up, but leave out that union dope and give up the space to something that will help the operator in his business. Another thing, we have bought copies of your new handbook, and would suggest that you leave off the word "manager" from its title. We see no reason why it should be a book for them, as they have nothing to do in the operating room in reference to running machines, unless it is your intention, which we hope it is not, to make operators out of all managers. Why not have a separate book for them? The new book is a dandy and well worth more than the price asked for it. It shows the expenditure of both time and money and labor in its get-up. We hope you will agree with us in these matters.

Well, I don't agree with you, my good friends. The editor of this department firmly believes in the organization of the theater managers. He firmly believes in the organization of the film producer and of the film exchanges. He also thoroughly and completely believes in the organization of the operators. We do not publish any matter dealing with what might be termed the "politics" of the union, but the general news of the organization will be given space in this department as long as the news is sent in. As to your criticism of the handbook title, you overlooked the fact that there are thousands of small town managers who are also their own operators, and they have to be their own operators for the simple reason that there is not business enough to enable them to employ one. Moreover, I want the manager to be thoroughly posted on good projection. By this I do not mean that it is necessary for every manager to be able to actually operate a machine, but I do want him to be in a position to recognize faults in his projection and thus check up the work of the operator and demand that the best possible projection be placed on his screen. Sorry, Los Angeles, I most emphatically cannot agree with you.

A Suggestion.

Brother Adam Foltz, Findlay, Ohio, offers the following suggestion:

> Regarding the platform illustrated on page 367, Fig. 148 of the handbook, I think it could be improved. Your fundamental idea is a good one, but suppose some kid, of whom there are many operating machines, should forget his platform and step off to look out of a window or door, as many a kid would do, since they cannot keep their mind on their work as an older man would? The machine would stop, but the arc lamp would still be burning and the film would ignite. Why not connect the platform circuit to the arc lamp instead of to the motor?

Mainly for the reason that such a platform could not have very much movement and heavy arcing of the contacts would result. If a manager employs a boy who would do such a senseless thing as that, he would be served perfectly right in having his film burned up. However, if the machine is equipped with the automatic fire shutter the film would still be protected and no damage would be done. If anyone can scheme up some way of connecting the platform with the arc lamp circuit in such a manner as to be practical, then your idea is an improvement.

Up-to-Date Equipment.

Mr. J. D. Frazier, Lowell, Arizona, tells us that he has installed the very latest Edison projectors, Enterprise 1913 Stereopticon dissolver and Bausch and Lomb spot light. In the Lowell theater, he uses his own make of screen. This screen has been installed in more than thirty houses along the Pacific coast, and brother Frazier finds they are giving most excellent satisfaction. The operating room is 14 x 18, all port-holes being equipped with glass, and everything is as up-to-date as money and brains can make it. Glad to hear from up-to-date managers and up-to-date houses. Cannot we have a little more details regarding that screen, brother Frazier? What you say simply whets our curiosity.

A Safety Device.

Mr. W. J. Kerr, Smithport, Pa., sends in the following:

> Attached find sketch of fire safety device for operating rooms. The vent pipes would prevent the film from exploding, and would carry the smoke and flame up the stove pipe, making it perfectly safe for the operator to stay in the operating room, not being compelled to dash out and startle the people. As things are at present the operating room would, so far as I know, fill up with smoke which would issue from the cracks and holes. This would be sure to be followed by a stampede on the part of the audience. Kindly look over this sketch, and if you consider it of value, give it a little space.

In the first place, Brother Kerr, allow me to, with as serious a face as I can, inform you that a film does not, never has, and never will "explode." An ordinary stove pipe or chimney would stand as much chance of carrying off all the smoke, fumes and flame of a burning film, as a razor-back swine will have of securing entry into the New Jerusalem. The only way to get rid of the smoke is to have an opening not less than 288 square inches in area leading directly to the open air, preferably above the roof. Friend Kerr simply attaches a metal vent pipe to the back of each machine magazine. The two pipes join each other and the single pipe is carried to a chimney flue. The net result would be to create a strong draft and promptly engender so fierce a heat as to melt both magazine and pipe.

He Caught It.

Brother Joe Hayes, St. Louis, Mo., says:

> With regard to the letter from Ft. Worth, page 567, February 8th issue, would suggest that Ft. Worth measure B.'s screen again. If B. is using regulation film and has a straight throw, his picture should be 10 feet 6 inches by 14 feet, containing 147 square feet of surface. B. therefore has 39 square feet more surface to cover than has A. Now, if they were using the same kind of a plain screen, according to Ft. Worth, two-tenths of an ampere for d. c. and three-tenths of an ampere for a. c., B. should only use 7.8 ampere d. c. or 11.7 amperes a. c. more, instead of 15 amperes. But were I in B.'s place, I would not use any more current than A., and possibly not so much, because a mirror screen will stand a good deal more light than will a plain, smooth finish aluminum screen. A perfectly smooth aluminum screen will give off excessive flicker and a harsh glaring reflection, whereas a mirror screen is softer and more subdued.

Your remarks, brother Hayes, are, in my judgment, entirely correct; moveover, you caught the error I referred to. The height of the picture is always ¾ of its width, except where there is a pitch in projection; and it would have to be a whole lot of a pitch to make a picture 12 by 14. The only criticism I have to make on your deduction is the fact that different finishes of the mirror screens give considerably different effects. Your remarks would hold good on all the later finishes of mirror screen, but would be modified a bit when using what is known as the "satin" finish. This latter should only be used in narrow rooms where the audience all sits practically directly in front of the screen.

Ventilation.

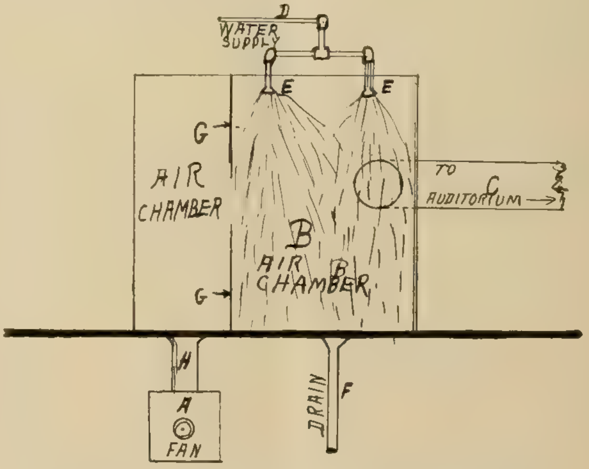
Mr. J. W. Casperson, manager of the Williams Opera House, Williams, Ariz., submits the following:

> In the January 25th issue you invite Southern brothers to send in details of successful cooling systems. In response I attach crude diagram of one used by Mr. Joe R. Scotti, manager of the Tucson Opera House, Tucson, Ariz. The climate in that little city, during the summer months, is similar to that of his Satanic majesty's dominions. Mr. Scotti figured out the scheme I herewith describe and after its installation was able to keep his house open for business all summer, the first time that was done in the history of Tucson. A blower, a, was placed in the basement under the stage. This forced air into the large sheet iron tank, b, the same being placed on the stage. In this tank was a continual spray of water. From it two 12-inch pipes carry the air, purified and cooled to about 70 degrees F. by passing through the spray to each side of the house through pipe, c, and a similar one on the opposite side. It was only necessary to start the blower and turn on the spraying jets an hour before the house was opened and no one had occasion to complain of the temperature during the entire summer. I trust that this plan may be of value to our New Mexico brother, as well as to others.



Now here is something that looks pretty good to father. It seems to be a thoroughly practical and not too expensive cooling scheme. The two jets of water and current for running the motor would be practically all the expense of operation, and the expense of installation would not be excessive. Not only is the air cooled by this system but it is at the same time purified absolutely of all dust and dirt, which would, to a considerable extent, effect economy, since the wall and ceiling decorations would not soil so rapidly. On behalf of our readers, I wish to sincerely thank brother Casperson for submitting this plan. I have been in Tucson, and will bear evidence of the fact that any system that will keep a house cool during the summer months in that climate is a wonder, for Tucson certainly is about as hot as they come in July and August. By the way, those pipes could be carried through the attic or be made flat and thin if run along the walls.

"THE GUM MAN" (Essanay), Feb. 26.—A farce-comedy in which the audience took a great deal of pleasure. There is much good human fun in it that will amuse every kind of spectator. There is also a good deal of very inelegant gum chewing in it; but with the large audience with whom we saw it this, too, made much laughter. The quality of the offering comes from the rural tang it gets from the naivet of its characters, who behave as their feelings prompt them. Howard Missimer is the gum salesman, who falls in love with Beverly Bayne, daughter of Innkeeper Carney. At the dance in the town hall he gets her away from John Strepling because he can bid more for her lunch basket. The whole cast carries the picture off in first class comedy style, and the spectators plainly enjoyed all of it. The photography is good.

"THE INFERNAL PIG" (Pathe), Feb. 26.—If a recent Biograph drama, in which an infernal machine was concealed in a turkey, were produced in farcical vein and with the clock works in a pig, the general effect on the audience would be the same as that left by this picture. Yet, it's a good farce and was found enjoyable. It is helped by trick photography. Octavia Handworth plays the mother of the mock conspirator's family, and it is she who cooks the pig. Crane Wilbur plays the desperate Italian. Both do most commendably.

"GLIMPSES OF PROVENCE" (Pathe), Feb. 26.—On the same reel is this very instructive offering, giving clear views of the palace once occupied by the popes at Avignon. Other views include Nimes and its old Roman buildings, etc.

"LADY AUDLEY'S JEWELS" (Essanay), Feb. 27.—Another good Essanay comedy. John Steppling plays a bumpkin, "handbook" sleuth who notices in the paper that jewel thieves—a man and a woman—have been troubling the city police. Howard Missimer and Eleanor Blanchard, stranded thespians, arrive at the hotel and are wondering how they are going to "make" Broadway. They have prop. jewels from the second act of the melodrama, and John soon has his eye on the suspicious pair. Howard gets "wise," and he and Eleanor play a new role, with the desired result—they go back to New York in custody. With the whole the audience was plainly much pleased. It seems to have been taken in the same town with "The Gum Man." The photography also has the same quality.

"THE BANK'S MESSENGER" (Selig), Feb. 27.—Written and produced by William Duncan, this picture has the good qualities usually found in his work, but it doesn't come up to his best. It is a chase and fight picture; is set in an interesting country, very rough; has speedy riding; a turning at bay, with a slow retreat, at the end of which the hero is captured and tied to a stake near a fused can of dynamite. The hero manages to get his foot free and kicks this down among the desperadoes just as the sheriff and posse arrive. The ending was taken by a large audience merrily; it isn't at all convincing.

"TIM GROGAN'S FOUNDLING" (Vitagraph), Feb. 27.—A picture whose natural center of interest is a little girl, played by Helen Costello. The only child of a millionaire, she is kidnapped by three clever crooks and taken to Chicago. Through the fondness for liquor of one of the three, she escapes and is found on the street by Tim (Van Dyke Brooke), who is boarding with Widow Price. Helen has a good time living with Tim until the crook finds her; but her father's detectives come in in time. The ending, where the widow and Tim conclude to get married (children are such heart-warming things), shows Producer Van Dyke Brooke at his best, and is a little comedy gem. The story is very interesting, but not emotional on account of the weakness in the acting of the little player; and then one wonders why she didn't tell who she was and end the trouble. W. L. Tremayne is the author. Leo Delaney, Harry Morey and Charles Edwards are the crooks. The photography is good.

"YANKEE DOODLE DIXIE" (Selig), Feb. 26.—The audience watched this picture for the sake of its story and, at its comedy ending, got a hearty laugh. Hobart Bosworth enacts a Southern colonel who plays the violin, and whose friend (William Hutchinson), late of the Union army, plays the flute. One has a daughter (Eleanor Blevins), the other a son (Robert Grey), engaged to each other. The fathers fall out over which tune they are to play together, and for a time this separates even the young couple. The outcome of the situation is quite fresh. It is acted well by Mr. Bosworth and fairly by the others. Mr. Hutchinson's facial expression is thrown on the screen for a few seconds, and this adds something worth while. A. Ernest Garcia plays the parson who performs the marriage ceremony, and Lillian Hayward, his wife. The photography is good.

"LOVE IN AN APARTMENT HOTEL" (Biograph), Feb. 27.—A typical Biograph offering, in quality about medium. It has the burglar, interesting scenes, the swing of precipitant action, good acting that feels no call to the heights, and good photography. The audience was apparently much interested. The picture deals with love in both the basement and in the handsomely furnished apartments, and there are the usual touches of comedy. Blanch Sweet and Henry Walthall play the rich lovers, and Mae Marsh and Edward Dillon play the humble ones. A large cast of first-class players supports them. The burglar seems to be Joseph Graybill.

"MOLLY'S MISTAKE" (Melies), Feb. 27.—An old-style picture in which we can find little to praise. The acting is very amateurish, and was guyed. There are one or two lovely backgrounds.

"THE PIONEER'S RECOMPENSE" (Pathe), Feb. 27.—An imaginative, up-to-date picture with some extremely effective incidents. When the superstition of the redmen is worked upon by blind circumstances the manner of it and the result have, we believe, much value as a showing of primitive psychology. George Gebhardt and Princess Red Wing carry these scenes finely, indeed. The white man's story, that gives this part its setting, is only fair, yet plainly interested the audience. The photography will not be especially noticed in one way or the other.

"THE SUPREME SACRIFICE" (Lubin), Feb. 27.—The story told by this picture is not made very convincing and does not escape a certain professional atmosphere. In the tale itself, by B. M. Harvey, there is nothing unbelievable and it loses most from lack of art in the acting. All the players caught their roles perfectly at moments, but, except Ernestine Morley, all showed occasional weakness, enough to keep the offering from being emotional. Its story interested the audience. Ernestine Morley plays the older, Isabel Lemon, the young sister; Edwin Carewe, the lover, and Bernard Seigel, the father. It was produced by George Nicholls. The photography is very good. The backgrounds are almost wintry, while the players are dressed in summer clothes.

"THE MESSAGE OF THE PALMS" (Kalem), Feb. 26.—Situations alone have not much value. There are only a few possible, and these are used again and again. But in this picture, principle makes it easily the best offering released today. It is understood tnat the picture's principle or idea has been skillfully embodied by producer, players and cameraman. We have seen messages written on eggs and sent out through the market, and written on scraps of paper and sent in packages, but in this picture the message—a call from an old darkey servant to his one-time mistress (who had married against her father's will and gone away), asking that she come back, since he was getting too old to look out for her feeble, poverty-stricken father—is written on a palm, and the woman gets it on Palm Sunday in church. The scenario writer knew that in telling a story of human sentiment the cleaner and higher his means are the more effective they will be. Some writers seem to think that the selection of vulgar means is catering to the populous gallery—it isn't, and only makes plain the author's own state of grace. This is a valuable offering, and was clearly pleasing to a large house.

"THE FINAL JUSTICE" (Vitagraph), Feb. 26.—No one could sanely say that this is a dramatic picture in the strict sense of the term. It seems to us the very weakest scenario behind any Vitagraph offering in two years. It is almost laughably clear to the spectator that the writer is setting "surprises" for him. Rogers Lytton and Lillian Walker have the leads, supported by E. K. Lincoln, Charles Eldridge and Mrs. Maurice. We can truthfully commend the acting and the photography.

"ALL ON ACCOUNT OF A TRANSFER" (Edison), Feb. 26.—A pleasant, laughable comedy of a German's predicament due to the fact that he can't speak English. An Irish conductor gives him a crosstown transfer and then tells him to follow a woman who also has one. There's a little time left before it expires, and the woman does, or tries to do, some shopping. It is another good picture to the credit of Producer C. J. Williams, and was written by Henry W. Otto. Frank A. Lions gives a touch of thoroughly German good nature to the leading character. Mrs. C. J. Williams is the indignant woman, and the car conductor is Edward O'Connor, a good type.

"THE NEWEST METHOD OF COALING BATTLESHIPS" (Edison), Feb. 26.—On the same reel, a clearly photographed offering.

"SALLY'S GUARDIAN" (Kalem), Feb. 28.—A farce that didn't seem to get over strongly. There was no sign from the audience by which we could tell how it was liked.

"WHAT NEW YORK IS DOING FOR ITS DEAF, DUMB AND BLIND" (Kalem), Feb. 28.—A wonderful picture in many ways. The photography is fine, and the subject matter of interest and of importance. They will be finding some way to give blind folks an interest in motion pictures next. It is a picture of wonderful things.

"SWAG OF DESTINY" (Essanay), Feb. 28.—A sentimental story of the underworld, in which a burglar who has broken in to take a purse also steals a baby, for the sole reason that it is being ill-treated. It is strange what the scenario writers are thinking up for pictures nowadays. We can truthfully commend the players—Frank Dayton, Bryant Washburn, Dorothy Phillips and Mrs. Smith—for making as much as they have of this situation and its development. The photography is of good quality.

"THE UNDERSTUDY" (Selig), Feb. 28.—A picture that exists for the sake of a worth-while observation that is brought out at the end. It is poorly developed and fails to convince us that it is a "slice of life" in any sense of the term. Winnifred Greenwood plays in it a stage-struck girl, daughter of an actress whom she doesn't know. One wonders at first why she is shown with a mania for dancing. Her foster mother seems to be dressed as a trained nurse, and we were not sure the girl was not "under observation." It turns out to be her way of showing her desire to go on the stage. We don't get really interested in her until the end, or near it; but then we do.

"GOVERNOR (PRESIDENT) WILSON" (Vitagraph), Feb. 28.—This very well photographed picture was taken at Sea Girt just after President Wilson was nominated. It is fine. Our new President looks good to us.

"THE OLD GUARD" (Vitagraph), Feb. 28.—A dignified picture of an old veteran's last days; it is embellished by the love story of his daughter. James Young is both author and producer and deserves credit for the style of his production rather than for the originality of it. It is very well acted, with Charles Kent in the leading role, as "the old guard." Clara K. Young plays his daughter; James Young, the captain who falls in love with her; Tefft Johnson, the major, and Mr. Benly, Napoleon in the old man's dreams. The backgrounds are thoroughly French, and were probably taken in Quebec. They have been photographed beautifully.

"PICKWICK PAPERS" (Vitagraph), Feb. 28.—A two-reel special that has already been reviewed at length in these columns (page 663 of February 15th issue, 1913).

"CURIOUS SCENES IN INDIA" (Edison), March 3.—The photography is very fair, while not in all the scenes perfect. The matter is interesting, although rather disconnected. The offering is what its title implies, a few glimpses of what seems to be Ceylon mostly, bits of curious things, taken here and there.

"SUPERSTITIOUS JOE" (Edison), March 3.—On the same reel is this farce, freshly conceived and interesting, howbeit not very rich in spontaneous fun. All the gods feared Eros, and in this picture we find Cupid circumventing even Ill Luck. Joe (William Wadsworth) is a real estate salesman who is so superstitious that his rival (Edward Boulden) seems likely to carry off the business prize and perhaps win the girl (Bessie Learn), but she tips him off to a bit of news that helps him win out. The fun comes mostly from the predicaments and mishaps brought upon Joe by his superstition and from the acting, which is pleasing. Robert Brower, Mrs. Wallace Erskine, R. Neil and A. Houseman have less important roles. Charles Seay, author and producer, has furnished a good commercial farce that the audience seemed to like.

"O'HARA'S GODCHILD" (Vitagraph), March 3.—We have had several of these delightful pictures dealing with three families of Irish extraction on the outskirts of Brooklyn. It was through O'Hara's kindly ministrations in a former picture that Sullivan's girl and O'Grady's boy got married. In this picture O'Hara acts another kindly part and helps the young parents out of difficulty. It makes a very acceptable offering of sentiment and laughter. The same players will be found as in the former pictures. Van Dyke Brooke is O'Hara; Mrs. Maurice, his wife. The young couple are Leo Delaney and Dorothy Kelly. William Shea and Kate Price are the Sullivans; Robert Gaillord is Mike O Grady. W. L. Tremayne is the author, and it was produced by Van Dyke Brooke. The photography is of high quality.

"A QUEER ELOPEMENT" (Biograph), March 3.—The author of this bright little farce deserves good credit. It has been well produced in every way and, with its spontaneous fun, quite took the audience into camp. The would-be, but now disgraced, deputy sheriff follows the escaped convict, who has put on his sweetheart's cloak, and makes a heroic capture, which rehabilitates him in the good graces of her father, the sheriff.

"LOOK NOT UPON THE WINE" (Biograph), March 3.—On the same reel, but not so fresh or so rich in comedy as the above, is this, that makes a mildly interesting farce. The same little leading woman, well known in these comedy pictures, has the principal role in both, which she carries with her usual vivacity and charm. She is Grace Lewis.

"THE FIRST PRIZE" (Lubin), March 3.—A simple story of sentiment, with some lovely views of Florida in its backgrounds. Ormi Hawley makes a pretty figure as a country girl with a native talent for art. When an artist makes love to her, and then forgets her, she paints a picture and wins the Art Club's first prize. The man (Edwin Carewe) sees it and comes back. We can't say that its author, Mildred Goodall, has done anything very strong or original. Producer George Nicholls has made a pretty picture, graceful and pleasing rather than strong.

"PATHE'S WEEKLY No. 10," March 3.—There is no item of special interest this week. All are fair.

"THE DEPUTY'S SWEETHEART" (Selig), March 3.—A picture featuring William Duncan as a deputy sheriff who recovers bonds stolen from his sweetheart, Myrtle Stedman. One cannot say that it is an old-style picture, but there is nothing in it that can be called fresh, and it lacks the sweep and thrill of Duncan's better work.

"NATIVE INDUSTRIES OF SOUDAN" (C. G. P. C.), Feb. 28.—A finely photographed picture of Arabs weaving, and making shoes. These C. G. P. C. offerings of this kind are nearly always full of fine local color; this surely is.

"THE CHILDREN OF JAPAN" (C. G. P. C.), Feb. 28.—Street scenes mostly of Japanese kids. It is an unusual offering and will, we feel sure, please even more than does the average educational release. The photography is clear.

"BUILDING A PONTOON BRIDGE" (C. G. P. C.), Feb. 28.—On the same reel with the two above, this military picture is clear and will be acceptable.

"A WILL AND A WAY" (Edison), Feb. 28.—The March installment in the "What Happened to Mary" series; but it lacks the interest that marked the early numbers. It is somewhat lurid in its melodramatic parts, and at the end, when the heroine and the villain are in the final struggle, the audience got a hearty laugh. Of course the producer knew that it was going to be so received, but to laugh at a picture is not to compliment it. There is one bit of acting that surely deserves mention—William West's signing of the will. Mary Fuller has her own role, which in this picture gives her no chance; Richard Ridgley plays the villain with no subtlety whatever; Mrs. William Bechtel has a role in which she makes a distinct figure. Charles J. Brabin is the producer.

"DR. MAXWELL'S EXPERIMENT" (Lubin), Feb. 28.—This picture tells its story in a rather bare way, with long skips across time, as though the producer depended on the startling contrasts brought out by the development of the situation and neglected the chances of showing human things. Consequently our sole interest is in what is going to happen next, and none of the characters convince or give us any interest outside of the story. Yet this story plainly kept the audience attentive. Arthur Johnson, its producer, plays a burglar who is caught by Dr. Maxwell (Charles Brandt) and made to submit to an operation that cures him of criminality. Lottie Briscoe plays the doctor's daughter. All do as well as their lines let them. The photography is all that could be desired.

"A MARTYR TO DUTY" (Cines), March 1.—A sister sacrifices herself to her brother's displeasure rather than own up to having, after an earthquake, substituted an orphan in place of her brother's child, who had been killed. Her object in the substitution was to keep him from breaking his heart. But the story, in the picture, isn't wholly clear, and the subtitles don't help much. The photography, too, hinders by not being perfect.

"THE PHOTOGRAPH AND THE BLOTTER" (Edison), March 1.—A very well-made picture of a rather weak story. It uses expedients a bit too old to be truly effective, but its weakest link is the unwarranted suspicion of the boss who finds his business secrets betrayed. The first question a normal mind is likely to ask when a crime has been committed is concerning the motive. The boss suspects the clerk who is going to be his son-in-law, and who could hardly have had a motive, since it was plain that the secret plans were not offered for money. The spectator is apt to be out of sympathy with so baseless a suspicion. The acting gives now and then many delightful things, but is at all times comfortably natural and intelligent. Edna Flugrath plays the heroine; Robert Brower, her father; Mrs. Wallace Erskine, her mother, and Harry Beaumont, her fiance. On the other side of the picture is Barry O'Moore, a clerk in her father's office, who photographs a plan (this is one of the picture's good scenes) and sends it to the firm's competitor. It was produced by George Lessey. The photography is perfect.

"THE INFLUENCE ON BRONCHO BILLY" (Essanay), March 1.—The quality and peculiarities of other Broncho Billy pictures will be found in this offering. It lacks the swing that some of them have had, but it has the well-made, natural scenes, etc. There is a child who acts her part most charmingly and will please everywhere.

"THE MISSING BONDS" (Kalem), March 1.—There is an elopement in an automobile in this picture, after an acquaintance of about an hour. We don't necessarily imply that this is not natural; indeed, we think it is the only thing that gives the picture life, for it is followed by a speedy, clearly photographed chase by the parents in another automobile. The story is not well named and confused us at times. Elsie Greeson, whose smile goes all over her face, plays the heroine. W. H. Weast is her father; Jane Wolfe, her mother; Carlyle Blackwell is the hero who tries unsuccessfully to elope with her, and later wins her by showing up the bond thief (K. Rahm).

"AUNTY'S AFFINITY" (Lubin), March 1.—This is a first class offering, a little farce with much distinction. In one or two short scenes it falls from grace, but its effect as a whole on the spectator is sure to be most pleasing. The action is set in and around a big hotel, and there is much in the scenes, often remarkably realistic, that would have made the picture go even without the decidedly amusing story. That kitchen scene is as real as any scene could be; we feel sure it was photographed between hours in an actual kitchen. All the other sets, if they are sets, are as truthful. Aunty is Mrs. George B. Walters, and is troubled because her daughter (Marie Wierman) is flirting with the proprietor's son (Clarence Elmer). Outside, she receives courteous assistance from Peter Lang, the "Count of Monte Video," who is a real count, but also the chef at the hotel. Nothing could be more amusing than the chef's losing the ring he had intended for the widow, and the girl's finding it, with the note, in her ice cream. What comes of this, for a moment, is a bit too farcical, but it recovers its tone at once and the ending is in the best style. This cast is strong; Mrs. Walters and Peter Lang have shown their capability many times. Marie Wierman does very natural work in her role, as does Clarence Elmer in his, for the most part. The photography is perfect. Surely Lawrence McCloskey deserves credit for a fresh, good story, from which Producer Barry O'Neil has worked up a fine offering.

"THE CHEAPEST WAY" (Pathe), March 1.—A farce-comedy full of freshness and very laughable, in which Paul Panzer plays an Irish father who, for economy's sake, fools his daughter and her beau into an elopement. The situation would have been amusing without Paul Panzer, but with him it is joyous. The others hold up their ends well, but he adds of his own comedy ability to the picture's effect and is delightful. Betty Gray is the girl; W. J. Williams, the beau, and Miss Kilmer is the mother. The photography is good.

"UNDER THE MAKE-UP" (Vitagraph), March 1.—Florence Turner has the leading part in this picture, but is not on the whole strongly supported. Yet, in spite of the weakness of her leading man, who is out of his depth in this particular role, she carries the audience with her through a strong situation that is fresh enough to be intensely interesting. Its great scene is a real tragedy seemingly enacted on a stage before an audience who accepts it as a drama and wildly applauds. Miss Turner plays Pierrette, and is appearing with Pierrot (Tom Powers), her husband. Pierrette fell in love with "the man in the box" (Courtney Foote) and was on the point of eloping, but comes on her baby's rag doll and decides to return. Pierrot has been told that she has gone. He is filling his act alone when Pierrette comes out on the stage. Both forget the presence of the audience. Larry Trimble is both author and producer and has made a picture he can take pride in. The photography is of good quality.

"NIPPED IN THE BUD" (Cines), March 4.—A farce with a clown character. Nearly all these farces bear a more or less close resemblance to the first Max and the Bill farces that have long been popular. It is well done, but brought out no marked laughter.

"WANTED—A HUSBAND" (Cines), March 4.—On the same reel is this farce, that gave the audience a good deal of laughter. The rich widow advertises for a husband. The thin man calls first and, finding that she has many children, beats a hasty retreat. His fat friend is not so easily scared and becomes many times a papa. There is some clever, conventional acting in it, and it is likely to please.

"THE BUTTERFLY OF A DAY (THE EPHEMERA)" (C. G. P. C.), March 4.—This natural history subject will be full of newsy information to many. We don't believe that many know that there is a butterfly that lives only for a day. The photography is very clear and is tinted just enough to give a suggestion of the natural colors.

"THE TITMOUSE" (C. G. P. C.), March 4.—A pretty hand-colored picture showing the home life and housekeeping arrangements of one of the farmer's friends—a small bird that lives on fruit-destroying caterpillars. A very delightful offering.

"COD FISHING FROM A TRAWLER" (C. G. P. C.), March 4.—A picture full of the salt of sea waves and spindrift. What the subject matter is can easily be guessed. The photography is clear and has much charm.

"THE COLLECTOR OF PEARLS" (Selig), March 4.—There was one good laugh while this film was on the screen, which came when Lillian Leighton pushed over the "pearl collector," but the offering is far below, it seems to us, the standard of the Selig company. The acting, on the whole, was wretched.

"ANN" (Edison), March 4. — Richard Ridgely has written a pleasing picture of sentiment around Ann, a girl who, in the home of her very strict parents, suffers a perpetual Sabbath. The development of the situation is conventional, but its parts are skillfully put together to make it emotionally effective when the father's eyes are opened and his heart softened. To do this the author has introduced a traveling sheet music salesman, who entices Ann to the city, where happily she is guarded from him by an ex-burlesque queen and in the end brought home to her father's arms. Mabel Trunnelle plays Ann; Charles Ogle, her father; Mrs. C. J. Williams, her mother. On the other side of the picture is the salesman, Yale Benner, and the good angel, Mrs. Bechtel. Walter Edwin is the producer and has made some beautiful sets and carried his story clearly. He might have chosen more convincing backgrounds; that trolley car didn't go well in such a story, that would have been more natural in a truly rural neighborhood.

"ON THE MOUNTAIN RANCH" (Lubin), March 4.—The author of this picture, Wallace Clifton, deserves credit for the easy, effective development of his plot, which, if analyzed, is neither fresh nor consistent. The picture pleased the audience. Its producer, F. J. Grandon, has put it on very clearly, and in choosing his backgrounds has managed to give the impression that he has set it on one big stage. The players, Clara Williams, heroine; Edgar Jones, hero, and John Ince, villain, have acted their parts in the conventional way that fits this sort of story perfectly. The photography is clear.

"HUBBY BUYS A BABY" (Vitagraph), March 4.—There is fun for the audience in this farce, but there could have been little for the player, John Bunny, who, in the leading role, has to carry a big coal-black baby. He was drunk and took it into his head to buy it from its little sister. His wife is Flora Finch, and his cook is Kate Price, and neither enjoys having the incumbrance on their hands. But the most fun comes from the way the loss of the kid is taken by the dusky inhabitants of Coontown—its sisters, cousins, aunts and uncles.

"BILLY McGRATH ON BROADWAY" (Essanay), March 4.—A farce that gave the audience several laughs and is fairly amusing all the way through. It depends for its fun largely on a burlesque play that Leading Man McGrath produces with his stage hands in the cast. It was like catching at straws, but his company had up and left and he had nothing else to do. It made his fortune though. What the critics said made him dance with joy. One feels that one would enjoy it more if the actors had been really stage hands, because not at all times is the burlesque natural. It is partly enough to make the offering go. John Steppling is the leading man and Agustus Carney, the carpenter, plays Lord Montmorency's daughter and Eleanor Blanchard plays the adventuress. Both do well.

"BINKS AND THE BLACK HAND" (Imp), March 8.—Low comedy and real good stuff. Binks, with the aid of his athletic assistant, makes a whole lot of laughter.

"IN OLD PANAMA" (Imp), March 8.—Good scenic, containing, among other features, a novel sunrise, street scenes, ruins crumbling since the British sacking in 1671, native life and a bit of comedy at the end.

"THE TESTER TESTED" (Eclair), March 9.—This is a comedy by the Paris company, and it is corking good work. There are three players in the cast who make the fun, and it is continuous.

"COCOA CULTIVATION" (Eclair), March 9.—On the same reel as the foregoing is this excellent hand-colored educational.

"FOND HEART SAVES THE DAY" (Champion), March 10.—A drama of the race course. The story came along very well until the climax, which was weak, hackneyed. There were good backgrounds, well photographed.

"THE EMPTY BOX" (Rex), March 16.—Here is a mighty pretty story, and it is well photographed in splendid settings, interior as well as exterior. The leads are played by Phillips Smalley and Lois Weber, and played in the best of their finished style. Also they are well supported.

"FROM DEATH—LIFE" (Imp), March 13.—Jane Gail, in the role of the mother crazed by the death of her infant, has a splendid opportunity in this domestic drama to show us what she can do. She rises to it. Miss Walker, the mother who passes away as her child comes into the world, gives a strong portrayal. Howard Crampton is the family physician. It is in such roles as this that Mr. Crampton is at his best, and so he is here. A good picture.

"THE HAWKINS' ROOMER" (Powers), March 12.—Low comedy, and it will make fun. The story is of a detective; the hours he keeps lead his landlord to believe him to be a burglar. The activity of the householder nearly results in the escape of the thieves, but the detective wins out.

"ANIMATED WEEKLY No. 51" (Universal), Feb. 26.—Contains a few scenes in Turkey during the recent war; views of the ice carnival in Red Bank, N. J.; timber cutting in Alaska; Paris fashions; unconventional portraits of Rose Coghlan, and numerous other items.

"PAPA'S HELPING HAND" (Nestor), March 10.—An old comedy idea makes a fairly new love story, amusing and acceptable. A pretty heroine, some interesting homely scenes and a few beautifully photographed pictures are its assets.

"WHEN HUBBY ENTERTAINED" (Nestor), March 10.—On the same reel is this comedy of city life by a different set of players, and in quite another vein. It has more in it that is fresh, but lacks the popular qualities of the former, and it also lacks spontaneous fun. The photography is good.

"LOVE AND THE WORKMAN" (Victor), March 14.—A factory story in which the acting is more spirited than finished. While somewhat crudely put together, the plot has considerable interest. The girl discovers that Philip, the new member of the firm, is unworthy of her love, and her heart turns to the brave young foreman.

"A BUM'S HALLOWE'EN" (Champion), March 3.—The idea of a tramp getting into a masquerade under false pretenses and eating all the cake and ice cream has been done many times, and this picture suffers because of its old plot. The acting and photography will pass.

"AT MAD MULE CANYON" (Bison), March 8.—A two-reel Western offering in which the hero is suspected of having tried to steal a bag of gold from his sweetheart's home. He is horsewhipped by the girl's father and turned out of camp. We then see the Indians on the warpath, for some reason which is not made very clear in the picture, and Dick carries the warning to the camp. The settlers fight off the Indians after surprising them from an ambush. The suspected theft was not placed on the hero in a convincing way, and as a two-reel production we did not feel that this was very strong, though the photography and some of the scenes were good.

"THE SHABBY DOLL" (Thanhouser), March 11.—Here is a clear-cut story with a strong heart interest. The father, with his child and her doll on his knee, tells the tale of his rise in life from a newsboy. He rescued a little girl from peril and gave her a doll, which she always treasured. In later years the doll brings them together and they are married. Washington Square and other New York views appear in the film. A simple, natural story which will make friends for itself wherever shown.

"A RACE FOR LIFE" (Frontier), March 6.—This plot is amateurishly constructed, and though the girl heroine is very pretty and fascinating, she does not handle a revolver very well. Her holdup of the chauffeur and dash to the rescue of the hero strained a point, but the final situation, in which she held up three outlaws, was impossible. There is little to recommend in this picture except its clear photography.

"KNIGHTS AND LADIES" (Crystal), March 9.—A half-reel in which Pearl and Chester again demonstrate that "the course of true love never does run smooth." Their quarrel is made up later, however.

"MA AND THE BOYS" (Crystal), March 9.—This, on same reel with above, shows a mother's experiences with her daughter's beaus, one of whom she marries. Light comedy.

"THOU SHALT NOT STEAL" (Rex), March 13.—A strong, well-conceived and well-acted two-reel story. Several good characters appear, including, first of all, Con Rooney, the gang leader; the doctor who practices hypnotism, the tough girl in love with Con, and the pretty nurse. Con suffers from a constant desire to steal, and we see him plying this occupation in the low dives which he frequents. He is shot and taken to the hospital, where the doctor discovers an old fracture in his skull. An operation proves successful and Con is restored to health and given a job in the hospital. Later he fights off his former friends in their efforts to rob the institution. Strong character work and a worth-while production.

"THE FRINGE OF SIN" (Imp), March 10.—A drama of some merit, in which the girl leaves her mother and the children, to make her way in the city. She is seen working in a dressmaking establishment. The proprietor rescues her from before an automobile, and then tempts her. She leaves him and drifts downward into a low music hall, where her little sister finally discovers her and she returns home. The plot is hardly complicated enough to be very effective.

"THE CRIMSON CROSS" (Eclair), March 5.—A three-reel offering which attempts to delineate the mysteries of the Rosary, giving the many scenes in the life of Christ, from childhood to the crucifixion and the ascension. This sort of a conception has to be handled with rare delicacy and artistic skill to be fully acceptable to the public, and this film hardly reaches the height to which it aspires. It does show worthy effort, however, and has a sort of educational value, in spite of its inartistic effects. The early Puritan scenes in the first reel are very good, but the makeup of the hero and his conduct in visiting the girl during her parents' absence gave us an erroneous impression of his character. A big undertaking, worked out with a fair degree of success.

"BRASS BUTTONS" (Majestic), March 4.—A comedy film, well photographed, which contains some ingenious situations. Mr. Gay wants to get out for the night to play with the boys. The cop, who comes to call on the hired girl, goes to sleep in the kitchen. Mr. Gay borrows the cop's uniform and goes out to have some fun with it. There are a number of smiles in the picture.

"THE ORPHAN'S MINE" (American), March 15.—An orphan girl, working her own claim, turns up pay dirt. The village no-account gets busy, and there is a plot to jump the claim. Then the hero appears and drives them off. The chase scene is well done, and the picture fairly strong as a whole.

"A KIMONO TRAGEDY" (Majestic), March 2. — A truly amusing comedy offering in which the husband gets in all sorts of trouble with his wife over a girl's kimono, put into his grip by mistake on board a steamer, The complications which follow this error are very funny and will please an audience greatly.

"JUST FAME" (Reliance), March 8. Jane is a pretty little housemaid who has no friends save a cute little kitten. She falls in love with a handsome young artist who lives at the house, but in the end sees him wed another. A slight offering, well pictured and with a certain pathetic interest in its development.

"SINS OF THE FATHERS" (Broncho), March 12.—A two-reel number possessing strong story interest. The father, a crook, makes him daughter assist him in his robberies. The father is captured and sent to prison, but the girl makes her plea to a Catholic priest, who shields her. Later the scenes are transferred from the city to an army post, where the girl is in good hands. A young lieutenant is in love with her. The father, having escaped from prison, shows up and begins further efforts to drag the girl downward. The later scenes in particular are dramatic and holding. A good production.

"A STRONG REVENGE" (Keystone), March 10.—A funny situation, which suffers from overacting, in imitation of the French eccentrics. Dutch and Irish characters do not make violent gestures with their hands, such as these actors would have us believe. Yet the main idea is amusing. The cobbler puts limburger cheese in the grocer's shoes, which creates consternation at the ball. Later the grocer retaliates and wins back the pretty girl over which there is rivalry. A good comedy of its type.

"HER NEIGHBOR" (Thanhouser), March 7.—Outdoor California scenes, with a comedy idea as a plot basis. The girl who inherits an orange grove founds an Adamless Eden, and she and her girl friends don overalls and do the work. But the work becomes tiresome, and a handsome young chap comes along, who, of course, upsets the whole scheme by falling in love with the heiress and heroically offering to look after her and her property. Nicely pictured and entertaining.

"CALAMITY ANNE, DETECTIVE" (American), March 10.—Louise Lester is seen here in her character of Calamity Anne, with her mountain burro. She rounds up some saloon robbers after considerable difficulty. This character seems to offer greater possibilities than were realized in this particular story. The photos are good.

"THE BITER BITTEN" (Majestic), March 9.—A young husband, endeavoring to break his wife of her extravagances, leaves a note saying he is short in his accounts. This results in his arrest, and she has to intervene to get him out of the law's clutches. Well pictured and contains amusing moments.

"NO WEDDING BELLS FOR JONES" (Punch), March 6.—This plot, in which the eloping couple and the burglars become confused, has been worn threadbare, and though this is well pictured it contains no new situations.

"IMPETUOUS JIM" (Punch), March 6.—This, on same reel with above, has fresh enough situations, but they are lacking in real humor.

"JENNIE'S PEARLS" (Keystone), March 13.—A half-reel film in which Fred Mace poses as an amateur detective. The plot is slight.

"THE CHIEF'S PREDICAMENT" (Keystone), March 13.—There is an amusing moment in this of the knockabout order, where the bomb thrower is soused with water in the chimney. A burlesque on bomb throwing, on same reel with above.

"AN HONEST YOUNG MAN" (Thanhouser), March 9.—Scenes located at a California hotel. A proud father insists that his son is absolutely honest. He puts a $500 bill in a blind man's cup to test him. The son takes it, but later repents and gives it back, throwing in his own money, scarf pin, etc. A well-pictured, enjoyable absurdity.

"BROTHER LOVE" (American), March 13.—The photos are good in this. Jimmy is blind, and his brother Ed sends him to the city to be operated upon. The operation is successful. Jimmy is delighted with the new world before him and remains in the city. He runs across a girl, who spends all his money and then casts him off. Some toughs take his goggles away from him, and his eyes again lose their vision. Ed comes for him just in time to save him from falling off the dock. A good story of the kind.

"HIS HEROINE" (Thanhouser), March 4.—There are some very fine scenic effects in this, taken from the high green hills of California. The story is all about how the young daughter struggles to lift the mortgage held by a hard-hearted man. She and her mother rescue him after a fall from a cliff. The rescue scene is rather impossible in its nature, but interesting. An entertaining number.

"VENICE, CALIFORNIA" (Kinemacolor).—Scenes on the Plaza, on the beach, at Redondo, surf board riding, and exhibition by a cowgirl lasso expert.

"ADVANCE STYLES IN OSTRICH PLUMES" (Kinemacolor).—Showing a number of smiling girls displaying themselves, and also latest styles in millinery.

"NIAGARA FALLS" (Kinemacolor).—Marvelous views, totaling 1,100 feet in length, taken about the falls. This film is well worth going a distance to see.

"A SCRAP OF PAPER" (Kinemacolor).—Good comedy-drama. It is the filming of a well-known stage piece, and is well done.

"THE ENCHANTED LEG" (Kinemacolor).—A costume comedy located in early Manhattan days. It will especially interest juvenile audiences. The role of the fairy is taken by a niece of Lillian Russell.

WANTS THEATER DESIGNERS.

H. K. Greever, manager of the Dreamland Theater, a moving picture house at Vernon, Tex., is contemplating the erection of a fine picture theater to be built so that it can accommodate road shows and vaudeville whenever the manager desires to play to them, and would like to hear from theater designers and furnishers of their terms, designs and furnishings.

GOSSIP FOR THE FANS.

Charles R. Holmes, of San Francisco, is a dyed in the wool fan and every now and then he lets go of his accumulated gossip for the benefit of others. He has located Miss Gladys Field, who seems to have baffled the bunch of Answers Men, and gives the new Anderson leading woman, to say nothing of other bits of gossip that will interest. He writes:

Many of your readers and of the Motion Picture Story Magazine have been asking of late as to the whereabouts of Miss Gladys Field, late leading lady of the Essanay and Power's Western companies. She is living in Los Angeles, Cal., with her husband, Jack O'Brien, known as Ryan Sherwood when with the same two companies.

Miss Field is not working in the pictures at present and has not been for the past year, as her poor health was the cause of six weeks in the Santa Monica Hospital. But Jack O'Brien is directing one of the Universal companies at Hollywood, Cal. Miss Field advises me that she will work again in the pictures this summer, when the weather is warmer.

Harold Lockwood, late of the Nestor and 101 Bison companies, is playing leads with the Selig company in Los Angeles.

Joseph Waldron, late leading comedian of the Nestor company, is in this city running a theatrical booking exchange for small time vaudeville actors. He can be recalled for his clever work in the Nestor comedies.

Jack Conway, late leading man of the Nestor Film Company, has been for the past five months playing in stock at the National Theater in San Francisco, but I learn he has returned to Los Angeles to again play in dramas.

Miss Grace Lewis, late of the Imp Company, is playing leads in the Biograph comedy company out here.

Sidney Ayers, late of the Selig Company, has been playing in vaudeville here, but has returned to the pictures again as director of one of the Bison 101 companies.

No doubt you have heard of the Essanay Western company having two companies out here now, one at Hollywood and the other at Niles Canyon. The members of the Hollywood company are Arthur Mackley, Mrs. Julia Mackley, True Boardman, Miss Virginia Ames, Jay Hanna, Mrs. Jay Hanna, Baby Audrey Hanna and Miss Lottie Collins. Mr. Evans, cameraman and Ed Russell, property man.

The members of the Broncho Billy company at Niles are G. M. Anderson, Wm. Todd, Margaret Joslin, Miss Edna Sharp, Frederick Church, Brinsley Shaw, David Kirkland, Victor A. Potel, Pat Rooney, Mrs. Jesse Robbins, Evelyn Selbie, Bessie Sankey (late leading lady of Ye Liberty Theater, Oakland), Jesse Robbins, chief cameraman, and Col. Elder, property man. Extra people are added weekly to the Niles forces. Their new studio and factory is near completion.

At present the Anderson company are making nothing but the Broncho Billy subjects, leaving the Mackley company at Hollywood to produce other Western dramas and comedies.

It is said that Augustus Carney will return to the Niles company, where many more Alkali Ike comedies will be produced. The last time I was up to Niles Mr. Anderson was in the East, but I learn he is back again now. During his absence Brinsley Shaw was directing. Anderson lives at the Hotel St. Francis, San Francisco, and goes back and forth to Niles each day in his big car.

You will note that Miss Evelyn Selbie, late of the Melies company at Santa Paula, is now a member of the Niles forces. She was playing leads after the death of Miss Vedah Bertram. Miss Bessie Sankey has taken the place as Mr. Anderson's leading lady, leaving Miss Selbie to play heavy roles opposite Mr. Shaw.

Harry V. Goerner, late of the Niles company, is now playing leads with the Kalem Santa Monica company. Ed Coxen and Miss Lillian Christy, late of the Kalem company, are playing leads in Wallace Reid's American company at Santa Barbara, Cal.

Before I close I beg to correct a little mistake in regard to a cast if you care to accept it. I noticed in the latest copy of the World that you give Baby Audrey credit for playing the part in "Broncho Billy and the Sheriff's Kid," which the Essanay company released February 22nd. Baby Audrey Hanna is with Mr. Mackley's company at Hollywood. This picture was made at Niles, seven hundred miles away. The little child that played this part is unknown to me, but it was not Baby Audrey Hanna.

POWER'S 6A IN MT. MORRIS THEATER.

A Power's Cameragraph No. 6A and extra mechanism has been installed by the People's Vaudeville Company in the Mt. Morris Theater, Fifth Avenue and 116th Street, New York City. Charles E. Schneider & Co., of Springfield, Mass., has also installed a Power's 6A in the Y. M. C. A. of Worcester, Mass.

The Battle of Bull Run.

Bison 101 Makes Another Big Three-Reel War Picture.

By H. C. Judson.

THE 101 Bison Company claims to have spent $19,000 on the battle scenes in this big picture. As it opens, one finds in action artillery, cavalry, and infantry and over so wide a stretch of country that, without a goodly number of players, they would have been lost in the open fields and woodland. One notices the changes of the battle, as views are thrown in of this point and then of that, of the Northern side and of the Southern side, of charge and counter-charge, and then of precipitant retreat when the Northern forces leave the field in straggling regiments. At first, the Northern troops are seen attacking a far-off position where their foes lie hidden among the trees and where we see only the rising smoke of battle. As the first reel unfolds, they draw closer in their grapple until there is a break from good order on the part of the Unionists and we get a glimpse of a bitter fight among the woods, where, with shells bursting among them and the smoke of many rifles choking them, the contestants are at close quarters in a seemingly inextricable melee. There is also much that is full of beauty in the scenes, as we see artillery going into action or cavalry preparing to charge. Some of the details, too, are very pretty. The cut we print with this review will serve to show the artistic effect given to some of the scenes.

Scene from "The Battle of Bull Run" (Bison).

The story divides the battle scenes. We have been watching the battle without knowing what direction the story is finally to take, when a scene is flashed showing the office of President Lincoln, whom we find in consultation with Secretary Seward on matters of state, and soon we are introduced to our heroine, Grace, played by Grace Cunard. She is, by the secretary, given a special message to take to her brother, played by Ray Myers, who is already on special duty in the secret service of the Union army. Some colored people help the girl to reach the Southern lines and there she meets her brother dressed as a Confederate lieutenant. From this point much in the story's development is conventional, yet the spectator will find a great deal that is full of fresh interest, due largely to the acting of the players and also to the dramatic tenseness of those scenes in which the heroine-spy obtains possession of important papers for the use of the Union generals. Her blandishments that work on the Confederate colonel, played by William Clifford, are not without danger to herself through the chance of her mission being discovered, the more because she is pitting her skill and resource against another woman, May, the colonel's fiancee, played by Victoria Forde. And finally she is found out; but too late to keep her from getting the papers to the Northern army. The colonel, who has learned how things are going, rides after the brother, whom he meets at a point where a fierce battle is raging. In killing him he is himself mortally wounded, and their bodies fall side by side.

The ending of the story is not very strong and unnecessarily tragic. It seems to cater to feelings in us that are much less normal and healthily human than does the other nine-tenths of the picture; for the girl, after she has done her country a service, is conscience-stricken or at least so bitterly heartbroken that she collapses. This we can well understand; but following, she has a dream revealing to her how both her brother and the colonel, with whom, it seems, she had really fallen in love, have died on the battlefield. Her ghost travels out following their ghosts and sees the two bodies where they lie. In the last scene of all she seems to die, herself; we see her body rolling down the stairs. Yet while we feel the necessity of pointing out the quality of this ending as unhappy, we can quickly add that it is the picture's one unfortunate blemish. The offering holds strongly, throughout almost all of its length. In Grace Cunard's acting there is an assurance and tact that will both charm and grip. Victoria Forde supports her well in those scenes in the home of the colonel where she is compelled to secure the papers in plain sight, as it were, without being discovered and where it must clearly be shown that May has become suspicious, yet not sure enough to accuse her of wrong. All this is done very adequately. In the acting of Ray Myers there is a pleasing freshness which comes from his carefree, unconscious deportment in a picture. The qualities of William Clifford's work are well known.

LILLIAN RUSSELL IN PICTURES.

The Famous Beauty Talks to Interested Audience and Shows Intimate Pictures of Herself in Kinemacolor.

Miss Lillian Russell, the well-known actress, made her initial New York appearance in her novelty, "How to Live One Hundred Years," at the Fulton Theater, in Forty-sixth Street, on Monday, March 3. To greet her was a house filled with her friends. Kinemacolor pictures in motion, for which Miss Russell herself had posed, were shown during the evening. The actress announced that it was not a lecture, but just an entertainment for people who think. She made an address lasting a quarter of an hour following the showing of a Kinemacolor picture, "From Bud to Blossom." She described her manner of living; the necessity of exercise, sleep, and also banned the use of all alcoholic drinks.

Following came a series of Kinemacolor pictures showing Miss Russell in her daily routine—the morning hour; correct breathing exercises and how to transform hair-brushing into an exercise. Miss Russell is shown in her gymnasium throwing a medicine ball and using a punching bag in which she displays considerable proficiency. There were also demonstrations as to how young women may economically dress. Miss Russell is shown feeding swans in West Lake Park, Los Angeles. Then follows a series of pictures in which are illustrated a picnic in an orange grove; a tea in a private garden in which is given a lesson to fat women and thin women as regards their diet; correct evening dress for both men and women; a view of Miss Russell wearing a million dollars' worth of jewelry, which the actress takes pains to state is not all hers.

Next we have a view of Miss Russell in her dressing room making up for the stage. The last pictures are "Lillian Russell poses," of which a Los Angeles artist told the actress that these views in Kinemacolor had all the softness of water color and the strength and virility of oil. Between the pictures Miss Russell talked to the audience in conversational manner. Miss Russell personally and through her pictures received much applause during the evening. Plainly the audience was composed of personal friends and admirers, and in many ways it manifested its approval of the entertainment. Miss Russell gave ten performances in the theater during the week.

HINTS FOR THE LENTEN SEASON.

With the beginning of the Lenten season the intelligent and progressive exhibitor varies the ordinary course of his programs and makes room for subjects of a religious or semi-religious character. Of such subjects three are pre-eminent: The Pathe Passion Play, Dante's Inferno (Milano Films), and Jerusalem Delivered, or The Crusaders. To put such features on in a proper and befitting manner is essential to success. The Chalmers Publishing Company offers to exhibitors Lectures and Suggestions on these features, all of which have been prepared by W. Stephen Bush. The booklet on "How To Put On the Passion Play" has run into a second edition and is well known to exhibitors the world over. "Key and Complete Lecture for Dante's Inferno" and "How To Put On the Crusaders or Jerusalem Delivered" are of the same standard of usefulness. The price for any of these booklets is one dollar.

THE HOUSE OF FEATURES.

The attention of exhibitors is called to the advertisement of the Eagle Feature Film Company, of 5 East Fourteenth Street, in our last issue. This concern, which is under the management of Charles H. Streimer, is also known as the House of Features, as it handles only feature films.

MR. TRIGGER'S TRIP UP-STATE.

Strong Locals in Buffalo, Syracuse, Utica, Rochester and Albany—A Visit to the Capitol and the Governor.

ACCOMPANIED by Mr. H. W. Rosenthal and the counsel of the New York Exhibitors Association, Mr. Samuel H. Trigger left New York City on the Empire State Express, on Tuesday, February 25th. The object of Mr. Trigger's journey was to become acquainted with the exhibitors and their associations throughout the state to strengthen the bond of fraternal feeling and to enlist the aid and win the friendship of the Governor and the Legislators in behalf of the Motion Picture.

The first stop was made at Buffalo, where Mr. Trigger and his aids were received by a chosen delegation of Buffalo exhibitors. Mr. P. W. Pferd made the address of welcome, which was received with sincere appreciation by the New York officials. Quarters had been provided in the Hotel Stadler through the good offices of the Buffalo exhibitors. In the evening an informal but very interesting affair took place at the hotel. Guests and hosts gathered around a festive board and enjoyed themselves to the utmost. Suitable moving pictures were displayed and between the pictures informal addresses were given, Mr. Pferd acting as toast-master in a most acceptable manner. Mr. Trigger was one of the principal speakers and was listened to throughout with profound attention and interest. He spoke largely on the many things that had been accomplished for the benefit of the exhibitors through the medium of organization.

He gave a brief history of the chaotic conditions prevailing in the time of Mayor McClellan, when there was no organization. He recalled the day when McClellan arbitrarily closed up every moving picture theater which was, however, saved by the action of Mayor Gaynor, who at that time was on the bench of the Supreme Court and came to the rescue of the exhibitors. From that time forward none of the New York exhibitors had ever been troubled again. The Mayor of Buffalo had been unable to attend and sent his regrets by his secretary, Mr. John Sayles. Mr. Sayles proved a very acceptable substitute for the Mayor. He told the exhibitors present that a Sunday opening was permitted in Buffalo because there was no statute forbidding it, and because the exhibitors had never abused their rights and privileges. Mr. Sayles assured the exhibitors on behalf of the Mayor that in case any difficulty arose they might always be sure of a full and fair hearing.

Mr. Rosenthal spoke of the great prospects of the coming National Convention of motion picture men in New York City and the exposition that was to be held in connection with it. Upon the next day a meeting of exhibitors was held at the Happy Hour Theater, which is owned by Mr. Marcy. Sixty-two members were present. The pending legislation in Albany was the main topic of discussion. A motion was made and carried to have the executive board of the State Organization meet at Buffalo, on the sixth day of April, to procure the co-operation of the mayors of the state toward making the convention and exposition in New York, July 7th to July 12th, as great a success as possible.

On their way Gothamward the officials headed by Mr. Trigger stopped off at Rochester. Out of sixty-seven exhibitors in Rochester, sixty-five are members of the Local Organization. A meeting of the exhibitors was held at the Colonial Theater. This meeting was addressed by Police Sergeant McCarthy, on whom the city authorities have put the office of censuring motion pictures. McCarthy spoke well of the pictures and described himself a sincere friend of the exhibitors, but deplored the kind of posters that were often displayed in the lobby of motion picture theaters.

The New York party next touched Syracuse where they were received by the local President, B. E. Cornell. The Syracuse exhibitors had just had a very successful ball which had been attended by the Mayor and all the prominent officials. Mr. Morgan, the secretary of the local organization, told Mr. Trigger that an amount of over one thousand dollars had been subscribed by the exhibitors to fight hostile legislation in Albany. All of the fifty exhibitors within the city limits of Syracuse are members of the local organization. Through the efforts of W. A. Lowery, all of the exhibitors within a radius of ten miles are about to join the organization, seventeen of them having become members of the Syracuse local.

In Utica, New York, the local organization is presided over by Mr. Wm. Douque. A pleasant meeting was held at the Yates Hotel. The Utica exhibitors are endeavoring to secure a liberal Sunday. While the Mayor seemed favorably inclined there was a violent opposition from the ministers. Mr. Trigger told the Utica exhibitors that Canon Chase had asked him at a recent meeting of the Board of Aldermen of New York City, why he favored Sunday opening in Utica. Mr. Trigger told the Canon that he favored Sunday opening everywhere.

The last stop on the way back to New York was made in the state capital, Albany. The New York visitors were received at the Hotel New Kenmore by Geo. F. Wright, the president, and L. C. Smith, second vice-president. A motion was made and carried to have the members of the local organizations appear before the Governor and ask him to use his good offices to allow Sunday opening in Albany just as it was permitted in Troy, Syracuse and Buffalo. The Governor himself promised to help the cause along.

Speaking of the experiences and expressions while on his travels, Mr. Trigger stated to a representative of The Moving Picture World that nothing had impressed him more than the high mental and moral calibre of the average exhibitor in the State of New York. He said the old showmen, the pioneers of ten years ago, had disappeared from the field, and he knew a superior type had come into existence. The modern exhibitor, he said, knew his responsibility and lived up to his trust. Another thing which impressed him was the general favor with which the motion picture was regarded in official circles. The privileges of the floor have been extended to him both in the senate and in the assembly. He conversed with many of the legislators and found them all well disposed toward the moving picture. He had a short interview with the Governor, who expressed himself favorably. Legislators realized the power of good in the moving picture and appreciated the fact that in the State of New York alone, two million and a half visited the moving pictures on Sundays. As the Sunday programs are all in keeping with the character of the day, they affect a far larger number of people than sermons would.

CINCINNATI LOCAL IN ANNUAL MEETING.

Cincinnati Local Branch No. 2 of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America held its annual meeting at the Sinton Hotel, in February, and elected the following officers: A. C. Dingelstedt, president; G. W. Hill, first vice-president; Chas. Sternberger, second vice-president; Harry Heimerdinger, secretary; Otto Luedeking, treasurer. At a banquet given on Tuesday, March 4, at the Sinton Hotel, the officers were installed. The big banquet hall was crowded; all enjoyed themselves. The program arranged by Messrs. Luedeking, Kitt and Botts was enthusiastically indorsed as a grand success. An orchestra enlivened the occasion. M. A. Neff, president of the national organization, installed the officers.

After the installation of officers, a hearty handshake was given the officers by every member of the league and three cheers were given for Cincinnati Local No. 2, which indorsed the state and national leagues in all their actions. Several out of town exhibitors were present at the banquet, although it was a local affair. John Broomhall, Hamilton, state secretary; O. B. Weaver, Dayton, state vice-president; Orene Parker, national vice-president from Kentucky, and ten of the K. and C. local from Covington, Ky., came across and enlivened the banquet.

Every exhibitor present indorsed the action of the national conference and will be glad to contribute 5 per cent. to the state of Ohio and 5 per cent. to the National League of their gross receipts on April 8. The local also gave President Neff a vote of thanks for his untiring efforts in building Local No. 2, and unanimously pledged its support, and desire that all exhibitors throughout the country may know that they appreciate his efficiency and honesty in securing better conditions for all exhibitors.

When the banquet adjourned there were fifty-six members of Cincinnati Local No. 2 more than pleased, all working together in harmony for the uplift of the business and the twenty-five visiting friends of the local went away feeling that Cincinnati local exhibitors are a solid, progressive body of business men. A picture was taken of the banquet. It was generally remarked that there has never been over three pictures run by a member of the Cincinnati local and where it is possible only two pictures are run.

ALABAMA LEAGUE FORMED.

The Moving Picture Exhibitors' League of Birmingham was organized yesterday afternoon in the office of H. M. Newsome and officers were immediately elected. The officers follow: E. H. Colley, proprietor of the Vaudette, president; H. M. Newsome, proprietor of the Bonita, Amuse-U, Princess and the New Theater, vice-president; T. S. Abernathy, proprietor of the Odeon theaters, secretary-treasurer. Charter Members: P. R. Cefau, proprietor Alcazar; W. J. Roegner, proprietor Queen; A. A. Wall, proprietor Victoria; E. L. Lenhart, proprietor Best. The object of the organization was declared to be "For mutual protection and uplift of moving picture exhibition in city of Birmingham."

NOTES FOR EXHIBITORS.

Alabama will hold a big convention on March 24. A. A. Wall, of Birmingham, Ala., will have full charge of the convention and is now opening up an office in Alabama and has secured the services of a stenographer. He confidently expects to have the biggest convention yet held in the South. Mr. Wall is a thorough business man and a bona-fide exhibitor and is co-operating with Mr. Neff in organizing Alabama thoroughly.

Every exhibitor in the state of Ohio is now in favor of the Ohio state censor bill, as it has been thoroughly explained.

It will be decided this week whether the new theater to cost $250,000 seating 3,000, will be built at the corner of Seventh and Vine Streets, Cincinnati. There has been considerable talk about this new theater; as yet it has not been permanently decided.

The Cincinnati theaters are doing a splendid business. The league is taking in new members almost daily and confidently expects every theater that is eligible to join the league in the near future.

PRESIDENT NEFF DEFENDS CENSOR BILL.

The Moving Picture World is in receipt of a communication from President M. A. Neff, of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, in which he goes into the subject of the Ohio censor bill at length. According to President Neff's plans he expects to secure the co-operation of other states and to form what he terms a censor congress. The communication follows in full.

Cincinnati, Ohio, Feb. 29th, 1913.

TO THE MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITORS:

I desire to make a public statement to you of the conditions existing at the present time; first, I wish to congratulate all the members of The Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, on their splendid organization and the grand showing we have made since our Chicago Convention. We now number thirty-five states which are affiliated with our organization. The League is in a prosperous condition and new states are being organized and new members are joining our locals and our state organizations, very rapidly. The indications now are there will be few states outside of our organization when the big convention assembles on the 7th of July, 1913, in the Grand Central Palace of New York. Our Convention in New York will undoubtedly surpass all other efforts and establish a record for attendance. Letters of inquiry are daily being received at my office about the New York Convention. Great preparations are being made throughout the United States and Canada to attend the convention; special trains and special delegations from the various states. In fact the country is lit up all over in anticipation of the splendid entertainments, instructive and educational features of the Convention and the Congress of Arts.

Leaving the Convention, we now turn to the subject which seems to be agitating the exhibitors, manufacturers, film exchanges and all others connected with our line of business throughout the country, namely the censoring of pictures. Right here, I desire to make a frank, plain, statement of facts in regard to the censor bill proposed in the State of Ohio, at the state convention held in Toledo, Ohio, on the 16th and 17th of July, 1912. It was apparent at that time in the near future a constitutional amendment would be passed in the State of Ohio giving to each municipality the legal right to home rule. At the Toledo Convention a resolution was unanimously endorsed by Ohio exhibitors that Ohio favor a state censor board. Gov. Cox, then a candidate for governor, spoke at the convention and endorsed the resolution. There was nothing said or done in regard to the censor bill until we met in national convention at Chicago on the 13th of August, 1912. Previous to our Chicago convention, I extended an invitation to the National Censor Board and their officers to meet with us in Chicago to devise a plan whereby we might create a legally constituted national censor board. By a resolution in our convention, in Chicago, I was authorized to appoint a committee to meet the representative who had come from New York to Chicago to discuss the censoring of motion pictures. The committee was appointed by myself, but before they conferred with him, they found that he had returned to New York and a little later there appeared in the papers, articles favoring a meeting in Baltimore to organize a League. At that time, the press mentioned the fact, but discouraged it, especially the New York press. Nothing came of it.

The local exhibitors of Southern Ohio held a meeting at the Cincinnati Zoological Gardens on Oct. 5th, 1912, and Hon. J. M. Cox together with other distinguished speakers favored the state censor board and the exhibitors of Ohio again went on record as favoring a state censor board.

About three months ago, I wrote letters to the President of the General Film Company, the Universal Film Company and the Mutual Film Co., asking their advice as to a censor board. I gave them my views freely on the censor board and outlined a plan of the bill for the State of Ohio. I heard from the president of the General Film Company, and, from his letter I gained the impression that he favored a State Censor Board for Ohio, but he was exceedingly doubtful if we could secure one. Up to the present time, I have not heard from the other manufacturers.

Some time ago I was in the state of New York in company with Jas. L. Hoff of "The Moving Picture World," and Sam Trigger, president of New York League; we visited the headquarters of the Peoples Institute, also the headquarters of The National Board of Censorship, located at No. 50 Madison avenue, New York City. In a conversation with John Collier, Educational Secretary, I discovered that they were all at sea as to a plan whereby a legal national censor board could be established. After discussing the matter with them, I came to the positive conclusion that we could get no relief from the National Board of New York or The Peoples Institute, by reason of the fact that the public and especially the police power of each state and municipality had discovered that the national censorship board was self-constituted, with no authority whatsoever, and was formally established for the purpose of soothing or pacifying those who are ever ready to condemn and find fault or disturb, by reason of their fanatic disposition and keen appreciation of other people's business.

Before writing the present censor bill of Ohio, I communicated by letter with John Collier and asked for suggestions, and if he could give me anything tangible whereby we might work out a satisfactory plan of censoring pictures in Ohio. He wrote back, on the 26th of December, 1912, "that they had done nothing in the matter." I wrote him again and on the 2nd of January, 1913, he wrote, stating that I "put a knotty problem up to them," but he suggested nothing along the lines of censorship that would help the condition in Ohio. I invited Mr. Collier, or any committee they cared to send, to our Columbus convention on the 21st, 22nd and 23rd of January, 1913, and no one came to confer with us from the National Board of Censorship.

In September I consulted our national attorney, Ex-senator Foraker, in regard to a national censor board, hoping that we would receive relief through the Congress of the United States by legally constituting a censor board that would be effective throughout the country. The following letter is an exact copy of Senator Foraker's communication to me, dated Sept. 18th, 1912:

> "M. A. Neff, President,
> Cincinnati, Ohio.
> Dear Sir:—Without stopping to examine authorities or taking the trouble to write you a formal legal opinion, but answering your question informally, as you have requested me to do, the local authorities of the state and municipalities have an undoubted right in the exercise of the police power, to establish a censorship of such character as they may deem necessary with respect to the exhibition of moving pictures, and I do not know of any power conferred by the Constitution of the United States under which the Congress or the Federal authorities could exercise a censorship or surveillance with respect to the mere exhibition of moving pictures. The transaction is not in the nature of interstate commerce, but only a local transaction that falls entirely within the authority of local officials.
> Very truly yours,
> Signed: J. B. FORAKER."

After receiving this information, in my humble way, I tried honestly and earnestly to protect the motion picture industry and all engaged therein. I wrote the censor bill, which is now before the Legislature of Ohio, and we have every reason to believe that it will pass and become a law. This censor bill was read twice before the state convention of Columbus on the 21st and 22nd of January, 1913, and was unanimously approved. It has been read the first time in the House and now is before the Judiciary Committee, and we hope it will be reported out favorable within a day or two, as every exhibitor that I know of in the state of Ohio, at this date, is in favor of the censor bill.

Before presenting this bill to the legislature, or to our convention, I was very careful and solicitous as to the legality of the provisions contained in sections six and seven of the bill: section six reads as follows: "By a majority vote of the state censor board hereby created, such board may work in conjunction with any other censor board or boards of other states as a censor congress and the action of said congress in approving or rejecting films shall be considered as the action of the Board hereby created and such action shall be so designated, and, when passed, approved, stamped and consecutively numbered by said congress and the fees paid to the Ohio State Censor Board as provided for herein, shall have the same force and effect as if approved by the Board hereby created in separate session." Section 7 reads as follows: "When films have been passed and approved by the Ohio State Censor Board or Congress, as provided for herein, they may be shown and exhibited within the State of Ohio, without restriction or interference, any other ordinances or regulations to the contrary notwithstanding."

The letter received from Senator Foraker read as follows:

> "M. A. Neff, President, Feb. 3rd, 1913.
> The M. P. E. L. of A.,
> Cincinnati, Ohio.
> Dear Sir:—I herewith return the draft of a bill providing for the board to censor motion picture films and prescribing the duties and powers of the same.
> I have made but a few slight changes. In the form so indicated, the bill will be constitutional, and in every way, so far as I can see, be effective to accomplish the purpose you have in view."
> Very truly yours,
> J. B. FORAKER (signed).

This letter from Senator Foraker shows that the Ohio Board of Censors may work in conjunction with one or more states and establish a constitutional legal censor board, whereas if other states desire, they may have their pictures censored free of charge. All other states would have to pass a law, accepting all pictures censored by the national congress of censors. Now let us see what this means: If two or more states pass a censor bill the same as Ohio will pass and will co-operate with the Ohio State Censor Board and establish a Censor Congress, they can legally censor all the films for all the states free of charge. It is our intention and purpose, after we have tried our Ohio State Plan of Censoring, to raise only a sufficient amount of money to pay the salaries and expenses of our state censor board whether they work alone, or with other states.

I wish to convey this idea to the exhibitors throughout the country: A censor congress established by from two or five states can do the work for all of the states and the states that pass a law endorsing the Censor Congress, will not have to pay one cent for censoring the pictures that are used in their state. A congress so established will be legal and will be paid a salary and will be under the jurisdiction and control of the law and when a picture is censored by this congress it can and will be shown in every municipality throughout the United States, the state concurring, without the consent of municipalities.

The National Censor Board as now organized cannot legally be endorsed by any state as it has no legal standing in the state of New York. The National Board of Censors of New York is financed by public donation and that the Exhibitors and others interested may know who contributed, here are the names of the contributors: In 1912, J. J. Kennedy, on behalf of the licensed manufacturers, contributed $9,000. The Moving Picture Distributing and Sales Co., on behalf of the independent manufacturers contributed $900; civic societies of Wisconsin, etc., $148.80; individuals, $38; rebate from N. Y. Telephone Co., $11.21; making a total receipt of $10,098.01. This report is made by V. Everet Macy, Treas. of the People's Institute. These names are given to inform the public and also some of the exhibitors who probably do not understand the situation; a few more of those who constitute the National Board of Censors are Lyman Abbott, Andrew Carnegie, Thomas A. Edison, Samuel Gompers, Wm. Ives, Miss Hildegarde M. Babbitt, Mrs. Sarah C. Clapp and many other distinguished persons.

I wish to say I believe that the National Censor Board has done good work and has accomplished much good, but the time has arrived when the public understand that the National Censor Board is composed of civic societies and has no legal authority. Naturally the people are not impressed when they see the sign on the curtain that a certain picture has been passed by the National Board of Censorship and they also know the police power was invoked before the picture could be shown. Every active member of this Board deserves great credit for their untiring efforts in assisting to bring about better conditions and to uplift the business, but owing to the great progress made in the moving picture industry and the many demands on the exhibitors, manufacturers and film exchanges, and others, it becomes absolutely necessary to proceed along legal, safe business lines.

In a short time, in the State of Ohio, we will have Home Rule, giving the legal right to every municipality in the state to exercise their police power without interference. We have attached to our Censor Bill an emergency clause which is absolutely necessary to legalize the bill and put the censor board in effect and operation before the Home Rule takes effect in the State of Ohio. If we failed to do this, millions of dollars that are now invested in the State of Ohio would suffer by arbitrary methods of municipal censor boards, of which we now have a sample in Cleveland, Ohio, and every film exchange and every exhibitor that does business in our state would lose financially. In my opinion, after the censor bill becomes a law, its efficiency will be thoroughly established and not only the exhibitors, but everyone connected with our line of business, will be more than pleased with the result.

I would ask the exhibitors throughout the country to go slow unless you are confronted by similar conditions that we have in Ohio, and if you are, move quickly, if there is no urgent necessity, do not endorse any censor board or pass a state censorship law until the Ohio State Censor Board has been thoroughly tried out.

I wish to say further, President Taft in his decision in the District of Columbia, did not say that censoring was unconstitutional; but stated that he did not wish to interfere with the police power of the District. That is just what will happen in the State of Ohio, if we do not have a state censor board. The police power in each municipality will establish a legal censor board which no one can interfere with and it would be unconstitutional to try to do so.

Therefore, there is nothing possible for us in Ohio to do for protection, but to pass a State Censor Bill as quickly as possible and then co-operate with a national censor congress.

M. A. NEFF, President,
THE M. P. E. L. OF AMERICA.

INDIANA EXHIBITORS FIGHT CENSORSHIP.

While the president of the National League and his followers in the State of Ohio are pushing a law to establish a board of censorship in that State, just across the line in Indiana the exhibitors are doing their utmost to prevent any such law being enacted by the legislature. President J. M. Rhodes, of the Indiana Exhibitors' League, states their position regarding that censorship bill.

Editor, Motion Picture World, Feb. 25, 1913.
New York City, N. Y.

Dear Sir:—In the March 1st issue of your journal, I saw the letter written by the National Secretary, C. M. Christenson, I was very glad to hear that all the Ohio exhibitors were not favoring a censorship bill. I hope the Ohio exhibitors will wake up to the realization of what a Censorship Bill means and when they do I think they will petition their representatives in the Ohio State Legislature to do just what we did in Indiana. Kill a bill of this kind in committee, never let it get out of swaddling clothes. If you let a gentleman of this kind start walking he will soon run away with all your business and profits.

The Indiana State League, through it's Legal Department, has been endeavoring to, and so far successfully, has blocked all unfair legislation. One of the bills that was presented to our legislature was a censorship bill, similar to the one that is being considered by the Ohio Legislature. Our exhibitors were unanimously against such a law. We presented our side of the case to our legislators and succeeded in showing them that this bill was unfair and unnecessary and a direct invasion of personal rights, and the bill was promptly killed in the committee.

The Indiana exhibitors did not want to leave it to three persons to say what they should or should not do. They felt that no three persons were capable of saying what the people of Indiana should or should not see. Different classes of people desire and require different forms of amusement and entertainment in the picture show, the same as their tastes differ in reading a newspaper. In the newspaper proposition some like the sensational front page, others like the sporting page, some like the woman's edition, others the comic page, it takes all these pages to make a newspaper that will please the masses. Would the newspaper editor say that he couldn't publish any one of these pages, simply because some board of censors didn't like the first page of the paper and say that the masses must read the woman's page. Is this fair?

The man who advertises that he uses censored pictures does about the same thing as the man who comes down the street crying out that he was a leper, but that he is now cured. He was filthy and unfit to associate with respectable people, but now he is clean and anyone can shake his hand. We don't think that our pictures ever were in this condition, therefore why should we cry out that they are now censored? The very fact that our pictures are shown in the light and in the most public places and that the public are invited to our entertainments, is proof enough that our entertainments are clean and above reproach. If we had anything to show that was unfit to be seen or that required censorship we do not believe the entertainment would be put on in the open. Entertainments that are a little off color are always shown in some dark secluded spot behind closed doors and the public and the police are not invited to come and go at any and all times.

The Webster definition of censorship is as follows:

CENSORSHIP—The regulation of certain governments by which books and newspapers must be examined by officers whose approval is necessary to publication.

What governments are these? Are we living in Russia, or America? Does the American form of government require books and newspapers to be examined in this way? We think not. Then, why should we submit to a proposition that is exactly contrary to and against the American form of government?

There are many good arguments that can be brought against the censorship proposition, but I don't know of one argument that is really in favor of it, unless it is the argument that the man or men will use who are to be placed on the Censorship Board, and when the whole thing is sifted down the exhibitor will be paying these men's salaries. Paying men to find fault with and pick flaws in their business. No other business man in the world is required to do this.

I hope that the Ohio exhibitors will climb on Mr. Christenson's band wagon and fight Mr. Censorship in their legislature. If they are unsuccessful in defeating this bill I would suggest that they test the constitutionality of this proposed law. If this is done, I don't think that any court will hold that this law is good, because it is directly against the constitution of the United States.

Indiana exhibitors are not looking for, or are not trying to put new laws on the statute books which will work a hardship on them in the future. We believe that if half the laws were repealed and the other half enforced, the public and the exhibitor would be better off. The session of the Indiana Legislature will end about March 10th, and on that date I will send you a full report of what we have done and in what way we have defended and protected the members of our League.

Very respectfully yours,
INDIANA MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITORS' LEAGUE.
J. M. RHODES, Pres.

At the Sign of the Flaming Arcs

By George Blaisdell.

IN the course of a day's work it recently fell to the writer to call at the Imp studio. The first sight that attracted attention was a stage setting. In a corner was a prie-dieu, with a crucifix above it. The well-known figure of Frank Smith garbed as a bishop was standing by a table in the center of the room. On the table were two silver candlesticks. Visions of Jean Valjean, who within a year the eloquent Dr. Waters of Brooklyn has described as the greatest character in all fiction, arose within. A moment later Jean himself entered from up stage. There could be no mistaking him. There were the rough shoes, the smock frock, the unkempt hair, the look of the hunted, the man who believed, and with the best of reason, that all organized society was against him. With deep pleasure I accepted an invitation to sit by the camera and watch the rehearsal of the climax of a two-reel drama, "The Bishop's Candlesticks," which "Herb" Brenon was putting on. The gendarmes brought in the ex-convict, the captain inquired of the bishop if the candlesticks were his property, the faithful housekeeper grabbed them and upbraided the man who had violated the bishop's hospitality; the priest gently took the sticks from her, told the officers the utensils had been given the man, and the gendarmes retired. The bishop went to Jean, gave him the candlesticks and blessed him. Jean, amazed, humbled, contrite, passed out into the night—a man recreated. The bishop blew out his candles and retired to the corner to pray.

William Shay and Frank Smith in "The Bishop's Candlesticks."

Later, sitting in the little projection room watching the story of Kathleen Mavourneen, Jean Valjean came in and took a chair by the side of Mrs. Frances Brenon, the charming mother of the man who had produced the picture on the screen, and herself a talented writer of photoplays. How strange it seemed! Here was Jean, as I had seen him before the camera, now looking at himself as Terence O'More, the lover of Kathleen. From one illusion to another! The two men were as unlike as it is possible to conceive. But William Shay was underneath both.

"Hal" Wilson, whose character work for the Vitagraph Company made him so well known to picture followers, and who for the last two months has been with Director Haddock's Eclair company in Pawnee City, Okla., is back in New York again, the entire company having returned. Mr. Wilson, who is now at liberty, is being advised by some of his friends to make a tour of the picture houses and show films containing his more notable character work. Speaking of conditions in Pawnee City "Hal" said that the people certainly were hospitable. There was nothing the company wanted but it was granted if in the power of the townspeople. "We had some weather out there," said "Hal." "We had it colder than you did here. The thermometer was down to 8 below. Think of riding horseback in that! Mr. Static was working overtime. I remember one day we rode out to make a scene at 9 o'clock; the picture was not right. We went out again at 11 o'clock, then at 1 o'clock, and still we were to the bad. At 3 o'clock, though, we made it. When we left Pawnee City the entire town was out to say good-bye; it was a regular send-off. The afternoon before we left I was passing three Indians, two very tall chaps and one very short. They were all very much illuminated. Somebody was taking chances on sixty days in jail and $50 fine for selling them the stuff. I just overheard the little fellow say to his two companions: 'Ain't it too bad the movin' picture people are going away?' As the stolid red men made no answer the short one got around in front of the two others and, shaking his clinched fist just about opposite the neck of one, added: 'Say yes, yer long-legged goodfornothings, or I'll—I'll—lick yer!'"

President Zukor, of the Famous Players' Film Company, in answer to an inquiry said that his company will not begin the release of its weekly feature films until well into the summer. These specials, by the way, are not to be confused with the plays in which the more famous stars are to appear. It is the intention to make quite a number of the special releases in advance of issue, not only to provide against contingencies, but also in conformity with the policy of the company to move conservatively. Many of the players who will appear in these pictures will not be at liberty until the close of their season on the road.

The City Theater, in Fourteenth Street, owned by the Fox Amusement Company, is giving a program these days which it may safely be said is without precedent anywhere in the world. Beginning about 9:40 o'clock each morning there is thrown on the screen in succession every licensed release of the day. Sometimes also there is shown the "special" scheduled for the same date. Two commercials start the day's program at 9 o'clock. At 2 o'clock the vaudeville program begins, and between that hour and 5 o'clock eight acts are given, with a change in the pictures shown between the turns. At 2 o'clock a ten-piece orchestra comes on, playing two overtures for each picture. The price of admission is 10 cents before 12 o'clock, 15 cents until 5 o'clock, and after that 15, 20 and 25 cents prevails. Samuel Fried, a young man of wide experience in amusement houses, is the manager. He is assisted by Louis Silverstein, the treasurer.

"ROSARY" AUTHOR'S HOME IN PICTURES.

"In Another's Nest," is the title of a coming release of the American Film Manufacturing Company, which will probably be given an additional interest when it is known that the entire picture was made on the grounds and through buildings of the famous Glendassry Estate, home of the late Robert Cameron Rogers, author of "The Rosary." Needless to say it is one of the show places of the show place city of Santa Barbara. The esthetic sense will be delighted with the results obtained in "In Another's Nest."

BRADY, THE POSTER MAN.

Mr. Arthur Brady wishes us to state that he has no silent or active partner in the poster, advertising and printing business conducted by him at 124 East 14th Street, or at 71 West 23rd Street. For some time past parties have been claiming partnership in his business for some ulterior motive and he desires to advise the trade that all such claims are absolute untruths. He has been sole owner of the business since its inception and at no time has any one had any interest whatever.

$100,000 PICTURE HOUSE PLANNED.

J. J. McClusky, of New York, has taken a ninety-nine year lease on two lots on Sixteenth and Curtis Streets, Denver, Colo., where he will begin the erection of a $100,000 moving picture house about the first of next May. Plans have been drawn for this expensive picture house and all is in readiness for the commencement of the work.

THE latest and most important public event of the present day was the inauguration of the new president, Woodrow Wilson. The International News Service Co., New York, whose business it is to report current events to the various newspapers of the country, and also supply them with photographs of same, had a half dozen of their best moving picture cameramen in Washington during the inaugural ceremonies, and secured fine close-up views of the outgoing and incoming presidents, in various positions and places along the line of march, at the Capitol and the White House, and also clearly portrays the new president addressing the 400,000 patriotic and enthusiastic citizens gathered for the occasion.

Warner's Feature Film Co. demonstrated their alert and on-the-job business methods, by securing the exclusive rights for the International Events pictures, which, as soon as taken, were hurried aboard trains and sent on to New York, where they were developed and prints struck off and exhibited in New York City at ten o'clock on the morning of the fifth, about twenty-four hours after the big event happened.

Chas. A. Pryor, president and general manager of the Yale Feature Film Co., New York, is at present putting the finishing touches to a new four-reel production for that company, entitled, "Stampede for Gold." The picture is being staged in Tonopah, Nev., amid the natural surroundings such as required for a production of this kind. Exterior and interior views of all of the biggest mines and the methods employed for working of same are shown in these four reels. The stampede for the gold fields, showing the mad rush for claims, is very interesting and exciting. During the wild dash across the country several horses stumble, and in the mixup following quite a few injuries were reported, but fortunately none was of a very serious nature.

A Mr. Jas. Cartwright, of Staten Island, N. Y., called at the offices of the Moving Picture World this week and asked us to publish a notice relative to the disappearance of his daughter, whom he presumes has joined some moving picture company. The parents of the young lady are very anxious to get some word from her, and we trust that she or some of her friends who are acquainted with her whereabouts may read this.

REX HAS "COME BACK."

An innovation in the motion picture world has been introduced by the Rex Company in its masterful production of two-reel features. This concern is now one of the largest identified with the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, and the popularity of its pictures has been marked. There are not many producing companies in America with as brilliant array of talent as has the Rex Company. Such well-known and capable artists as Wilfred Lucas, formerly a director with the Biograph Company; Otis Turner, formerly a director of the "101 Bison" Company; Phillips Smalley and his wife, Lois Weber, and Ethel Grandon, of "101 Bison" fame, are numbered in the ranks of the Rex.

What promises to be one of the sensational pictures of the year is "The Great Ganton Mystery," which this company has just completed. The film, a two-reel drama, is remarkable for its clearness and strength. Another notable offering is "Thou Shalt Not Steal." If the burning of midnight oil and talent counts for anything, the Rex will easily lead its competitors. The members of this company do not work by the clock, indeed, they seem tireless in their efforts to give the public the very best there is to be obtained in the way of big motion picture features.

Smalley, Turner and Lucas are directors of note, whose productions have made tremendous hits throughout the country. Lois Weber is perhaps responsible for as many unique scenarios as any other woman in America. Besides, she is one of the most capable motion picture actresses of the day. Miss Grandon needs no introduction to the public, having appeared in many of the best plays produced by the "101 Bison" Company.

In "The Great Ganton Mystery," this company has given to motion picture lovers a marvelous drama, which rivals the best plays of recent years. It is a live, gripping and absorbing piece that will prove a headliner wherever shown. "Thou Shalt Not Steal" and "The Empty Box," are also marvels of artistic merit. Some of the best work these capable people ever did is shown in these pictures. The Rex Company is a part of the life of Southern California. Its studio at Universal City is one of the most complete in the country, and every facility for taking pictures has been provided. Whether it is an Indian story, or a society drama, makes little difference. The artists are familiar with both, and the results is ever the same—realistic, impressive, instructive.

The Rex Company is practically three in one; that is, the company is so divided, three separate and distinct plays may be put on at the same time. At the head of one of these divisions is Lucas. Smalley directs another, and Turner still another.

ONE FEATURE EVERY WEEK.

The Great Northern Special Feature Film Company has another surprise in store for its patrons in the form of a feature release each week. As the pioneer concern in the production of feature subjects, the Great Northern not only has maintained its high standard of excellence, but has been arranging its acting and manufacturing resources for some time past with a view to supplying its patrons with one feature every week. This is now made possible, and the company announces its readiness to supply territorial rights buyers with one of its features of quality every seven days. Although the undertaking is one involving much outlay and effort, the Great Northern Special Feature Film Company, finds itself equal to the task and assures its patrons that there will be no deterioration in the quality of the productions.

Among those announced are, "A Clown's Revenge," a thrilling story of circus life; "The Stolen Treaty," a drama of court intrigue; "A Daughter's Sacrifice," emotional and sensational drama, and "The Mystery of the House on the Corner," said to be a thrilling detective drama.

AN HONEST MAN FOUND.

Diogenes may again raise his head. Even in an age of widespread corruption an honest man has been found—in a film, though, only. The single possessor of honest aims is the hero of the Thanhouser release of Sunday, March 9, and so proud is the picture producer of his find that he labels the reel simply, "An Honest Young Man!" The story tells how a man of wealth will have none but an honest young man wed his daughter. A youth comes along whom the girl likes, and her father tempts him with a five-hundred-dollar bill, left in a place from whence it may be taken with impunity. But—the young man returns it, so all turns out well. Just the same, you are shown why he brought the bill back, and you find the cause of his honesty a series of accidents that verily made him think the bill a "hoodoo."

AN ADVENTURE ON THE MEXICAN BORDER (Lubin).

This is a two-reel special of the Lubin Company and a dramatic photoplay showing the heroism of the American soldier. Love drives him to fault, but his manhood prevails and shows him to be "true blue." It is a story of Romaine Fielding, who is directing the Lubin Company at Nogales, Arizona, and it is safe to say that this excellent actor is giving true atmosphere.

On the United States side of the line dividing Mexico from the United States the United States soldiers camped, with a view of protecting the international line and the citizens. Fifty yards on the other side are the Mexican soldiers. One of the bright-eyed senoritas of the southern race captivates two officers, one a captain of her own nationality, the other a lieutenant belonging to Uncle Sam. Both of these men have a silent battle to gain the girl's hand. The captain of the Mexican troops, being the older of the two, wins the maid by his quiet love and kindness. The irrepressible trooper tries to take the senorita's heart by storm, but is repelled. On the spur of the moment, to punish his rival, the lieutenant tells a falsehood, but after coolly analyzing the situation the lieutenant raises above all petty personal feelings and delivers the captain from jail, returns him to his fiancee across the line, and goes back to take his place and await his puishment.

Scene from "An Adventure on the Mexican Border" (Lubin).

"INNOCENCE" (Pathe).

Dramas are as a rule built upon stereotyped lines, but this Pathe Freres film, entitled "Innocence," released March 15th, is unusual. It features a story in which the innocence of a child precipitates one dramatic situation after another and these are more keenly felt because the suffering entailed is not caused by premeditated malice, Fate herself holding the reins entirely in her possession.

Tom Johnson, the chief clerk of Shaw's jewelry establishment, is intrusted with a costly necklace to be delivered at eight o'clock to the wealthy Van Cliffs. That night at his home, Johnson is rollicking with his young son when the package drops from his pocket. He is at his dinner when he discovers the loss. In the meantime, the child's doll has become broken and to fix the head on the shoulders the boy stuffs the jewel case into the doll. When questioned the boy does not understand and says he has not seen the necklace.

Johnson is accused of stealing the costly ornament. He is convicted and sentenced to prison. His spirit rebels at the injustice and he escapes, but has only arrived at his home when the police enter. Johnson hides in a trunk, but the boy, when questioned points to the trunk. Johnson returns to serve his sentence.

A few months later the doll breaks again and the jewel case opens. Not knowing how important is his discovery, he places the necklace about the neck of the house cat. Mrs. Johnson at her sewing finds the cat and the necklace. Overjoyed she rushes with the evidence to the authorities and then to her husband, where she unfolds the story that proves his innocence.

The story is gripping, finely acted and a feature compared to the ordinary run of dramatic productions. It will be released March 15th.

"THE SOVEREIGN SOUL."

Contending demands of motherhood and queenhood form the vital issue in the Gaumont release, "The Sovereign Soul." Dramatic is the closing scene when the queen, whose son has been kidnapped by a warring enemy, declares that her duty toward her country is greater than that of her love for her son—that, as a queen, it is fitting that she uphold the example of thirty thousand mothers of the country who have already sacrificed their sons to the cause.

This scene is enhanced by appropriate settings and the majestic mien of the queen-mother as she stands before the council of war; lines of grief worn by tears of sorrow, ageing her face.

Scene from "The Sovereign Soul" (Gaumont).

The story is developed well, the climax approached skillfully. The picture ends at the psychological moment when the queen with uplifted hand says, "The war will go on." Her words mean death to her boy, whom the enemy has declared will be the first victim in the event of the continuation of hostilities.

Well executed is the kidnapping of the crown prince, after the three spies have overpowered his nurse in the royal palace grounds. Although the juvenile actor could have done better, and his facial expressions are incongruous with the fear of the moment, yet the acting of the adults overbalances this defect.

In these tumultuous times, when rivers of red are flowing in Mexico and the soil of the near east is stained with the crimson flood of Turks and allies, this film is propitiously timed.

"A MONTANA MIX-UP" (Essanay).

One of the most pleasing and screamingly funny comedy of errors is seen in this exceptionally excellent Western feature.

Maizie Mackay, finished with her term at boarding school in Los Angeles, leaves her sweetheart, Bud Stone, and returns to her father's ranch near Ash Forks, California. A few weeks later, Bud, lonesome and downhearted, wires Maizie's father that he is coming on, to ask a very important question. The day of his arrival the cowpunchers from Mackay's ranch meet Bud at the railroad station with the bus. Mistaking a traveler's package for Bud's, the men throw it on the bus and drive away. Maizie welcomes her sweetheart with open arms. Life is one long, sweet song, until the mysterious package begins to wiggle and squirm in Bud's room, where it had been placed. The climax comes when the baby in the package cries and everybody hears it. Comical situations arise from Bud's peculiar situation in the matter. Bud has a lively time trying to explain to his sweetheart and his prospective mother and father-in-law, until the mother of the baby arrives on the scene and explains that the cowpunchers had picked up her baby instead of Bud's suit case. Maizie accepts Bud as a life partner and they are left to plan their future happiness.

Scene from "A Montana Mix-Up" (Essanay).

Arthur Mackley as Maizie's father proves convincingly that he is capable of doing comedy work as well as dramatic. Gladys Fields as Maizie pleases. This production is booked for release March 6th.

"FROM THE MANGER TO THE CROSS" IN ATLANTA.

Mr. Montgomery, the well-known amusement man of the South, sends from Atlanta this dispatch to the World on the evening of March 6. It speaks for itself:

"By spending hundreds of dollars in advertising 'From the Manger to the Cross' here, I have worked up an interest in this subject that has caused not only the amusement seekers but hundreds of aged and infirm people to come out to-day and battle their way against a wind that greatly resembles a cyclone. Hundreds of persons are standing in line at the box office while hats are being torn from the heads of many. It is a pitiable sight to see them struggling for admittance. I have been so affected by this spectacle that I have invited all inmates of public charitable institutions to attend free Saturday. Ministers are profound in their praises. Many of them are meeting their friends and insisting on their seeing the pictures. The small capacity of the house will cause thousands to be turned away. Within the theater the crowds sit in tears, witnessing what is said to be the greatest Bible picture ever made."

HALLBERG SHIPS EQUIPMENT TO CHINA.

J. H. Hallberg, "The Economizer Man," has just made shipment of one of his A. C. to D. C. outfits to the Arcade Amusement Company, Tientsin, China. Mr. Hallberg also reports the sale of one 110-volt D. C. Economizer to L. Sablosky, Norristown, Pa., and also one 110-volt D. C. Economizer to J. J. Sheehan, Waterbury, Conn. G. A. Stoney, Bennettsville, S. C., purchased through Mr. Hallberg a Power's No. 6A, 200 opera chairs and full line of supplies.

"FRITZ AND OSCAR OUT OF LUCK" (Great Northern).

The temporary embarrassment which overtakes the "barnstorming" actor long has been made the subject of humorous stories and stage sketches, but in this Great Northern comedy release the broken-down thespian is shown in an entirely new series of adventures. The comedy forces of the Great Northern studios are represented in goodly numbers in this latest offering, and the result is a joyous one-reel subject which fairly bubbles over with fun. The unlucky heroes are Fritz and Oscar, rotund and smiling in spite of their ill luck. They induce the manager of an amusement place to rent them his hall and after hanging a huge curtain in the center of the room they proceed to sell tickets at doors on either side of the drapery. The wording of the announcement on the outside of the hall is so attractive that standing room is welcomed by those who were unable to obtain seats and then the audiences become impatient for the show. The demonstration on one side of the curtain attracts the attention of the good people who are seated on the other side, and when the barrier is torn down the two audiences join forces and start out on a hunt for the resourceful comedians. After a lively and humorous chase the thespians are overtaken in their flight and they are made to return the money which they have collected. Likewise they are pretty roughly handled, but they are stout and healthy and resume their travels to the next town, wiser and sorrier. This little adventure of Fritz and Oscar is sure to prove a gloom dispeller.

Scene from "Fritz and Oscar Out of Luck" (Great Northern).

"HIAWATHA."

Hitherto "Hiawatha" has been presented in places so remote from the large cities of the East that those who are the most interested in the poem—the public school children to whom it is part of their curriculum—could not see it, but, now that it has been photographed, that disability has been removed and a great educational feature has been added to the repertoire of the moving picture houses. The greatest strain the teacher has to bear is arousing interest, and no child will look upon these wonderful pictures without receiving a great mental stimulus, which when once started upon any one subject can be easily directed along other lines. There is no figure in literature more lofty than "Hiawatha," to whom his people's welfare was all in all. He was sent to bring them peace and prosperity. He first won their admiration by his prowess, then their gratitude by wrestling with the forces of nature. All these and more are shown in these four reels of out-of-door photographs, one of the finest achievements of this newest form of dramatic art.

"THE GREAT GANTON MYSTERY" IS TWO REELS.

"The Great Ganton Mystery," advertised in last week's issue of The Moving picture World, as a single reel subject, is, in reality, a two-reel Rex feature drama. The picture is one of the best genuine mystery stories ever produced on film, and goes to further extremities in portraying the revenge of a woman scorned in a manner absolutely beyond criticism and teeming with human interest and thousands of thrills than perhaps any other picture of its kind ever produced. It is a wonderful exemplification of the new standard of feature productions now credited weekly to the organized and rejuvenated Rex company.

CORRESPONDENCE

ILLINOIS.

NEARLY a dozen Illinois cities and towns are now involved in the Sunday picture show question. Nearly all of them are letting the issue go to the voters as the most satisfactory way of settling the matter and of taking the blame from the shoulders of municipal officials. The necessary petitions have been filed at Rockford to get the question on the ballot and unless some technicality arises the matter will be settled. There are many factors working against the Sunday show in that city. Mayor Bennett is reported as believing it is the opening wedge for a wide-open town and that the opening of the photoplay houses will be followed by Sunday vaudeville and theatrical performances. The churches and the inner semi-social organizations of the churches are at work passing resolutions. With the question assured upon the ballot in Freeport, one manager is so willing to assure the public of his good faith, that he announces his readiness to allow a committee of ministers to be appointed by the council as a board of censorship for all the films he shows. The Geneva city council has acted on the keep-the-young-folks-at-home theory and has passed an ordinance allowing the photoplay houses to open on Sunday afternoons and nights. Dixon tackles the Sunday issue with an ordinance requiring a license, abolishing all entertainment and vaudeville and demanding a respectable board of censorship for the pictures. The license fee is determined by the size of the house; places seating less than 300 will pay $25 a year and all over that $50 a year.

Rev. Father Linden, pastor of Our Lady of Good Counsel Roman Catholic Church at Aurora, is using sacred moving pictures in his Sunday afternoon and evening services.

The Woman's Club of Galesburg has voted to share the expense of showing the Edison film "The Street Beautiful," at the Main Street theater for two afternoons each week for a month.

The city council at Zion City turned down an amendment to an ordinance which would compel moving picture theaters to pay a license. In the discussion Acting Mayor W. F. Millar, declared "I think the moving picture show a mighty fine thing. For my part I think it's a healthy amusement for the children."

The Colonial, 138-140 East Main Street, Danville heralds the fact that it has put the price of admission down to five cents for everyone and is giving two big vaudeville acts and two reels of pictures with a western each day. No vaudeville was shown when the Kalem feature "From the Manger to the Cross," was presented.

Tony Jannus, St. Louis aviator is showing in Illinois houses, 3,000 feet of film portraying his flight from St. Louis to New Orleans down the Mississippi. An operator accompanied Jannus on his aerial journey and claims to have secured some interesting pictures.

Industrial films of Baltimore, Md., were shown at Jacksonville and inspired the Young Men's Booster Club to take steps to have a set of similar views made of that city. The president appointed a committee consisting of Paul Fritchey, Robert Reed and Claude Vail to investigate the proposition. The pictures of Baltimore were shown at the Majestic through the courtesy of Manager Green M. Luttrell.

Vernon C. Seaver, who has done unusual things with his Peoria picture houses, his advent into the Chicago amusement world and his twenty-two car circus, has taken a twenty-year lease on the unfinished Temple Theater in the 200 block south Jefferson Street, Peoria, and will convert it into a hippodrome. The seating capacity will be increased from 1,270 to 2,200. A rental of $10,000 a year will be paid.

William A. Peterson who recently sold out his moving picture interests in Quincy has returned to his former home at Bloomington, where he has purchased the Main Street theater.

The Allardt Feature Films of Chicago, has been incorporated with a capital stock of $5,000 to manufacture moving picture films and supplies. The incorporators are Sidney Stein, Samuel Spitzer and Charles Rudolph.

James Stillwell has opened a moving picture show in the Price building at Allendale.

Truman Hardin and Harry Aldrich of Mason City, have leased the J. J. Pritchett building in that city, where they have opened a moving picture theater.

The Star Picture Show at Griggsville, has closed. It may be re-opened in the spring under canvas.

A new front has been given the Lyric at Morrison.

Manager L. W. Guiteau of the Majestic at Freeport, is planning to enlarge the front of the theater and also to increase the seating capacity. If the negotiations with the owner of the building do not fail this place, which is the pioneer of the Freeport picture houses, will have a new large screen.

Charles Smith, one of Elgin's first moving picture men, is now the manager of the Modern Star theater in that city. L. S. Williams, of Chicago, who has been in charge, has gone to Kentucky to assume the management of a theater; Arthur Johne, who has been operator went with him as assistant while Gladys Johne, who has been singing went to Evanston, where she has an engagement. The new management will specialize in feature productions and began with "The Resurrection."

Edward Fellis, of Hillsboro, has been in St. Louis purchasing the material for his new theater, to be erected on the Maddox block. It will seat 1,000 persons. S. E. Hurst, of Indianapolis, has rented the Bremer building in Hillsboro and will open a photoplay house.

The Grand theater at Macomb has been redecorated. The lighting plan has also been changed.

Carl Duncan, of Killbuck, Ohio, has leased the opera house at Vermont and will operate it under the name of the Lyric. An indirect lighting system and other things not generally to be found in small town picture houses are promised. Duncan has been associated with his father in the management of the Duncan theater at Killbuck.

Pinelman & Morest, owners of the Gem and Savoy at Quincy, have installed now Power's 6A Cameragraphs in their houses.

Johnson & Strong have opened a moving picture show at Malden.

The Progress Motion Picture Company made a series of local pictures at Mattoon under the direction of Manager Kepner of the Grand theater.

Frankfort citizens are chafing over the delay in installing their electric lighting system because they believe that the current will bring them a picture show.

N. A. Henderson has closed the Colonial at Charleston. He probably will re-open it in the summer.

Louis G. Nichols, of Decatur, has announced that he will open the Orpheum, a moving picture show in the 1200 block, East Eldorado Street. The place will seat between 800 and 900 persons. Bids will be asked soon and it is expected to open about June 1.

SPRINGFIELD, ILL.

THE committee from the Social Study Club, which a few weeks ago sprang into the limelight by declaring that the moving picture shows of Springfield were showing objectionable films, has practically given the photoplay managers a clean bill of health. J. W. Freund, William Schmidt and George N. Kramp were appointed to visit the different houses, and following a faithful performance of this duty reported, as far as they could ascertain, that the shows were of the highest class and with few objectionable parts as far as the children are concerned.

The Sangamon County Medical Society saw the film "The Error of Omission," at the Lyric recently.

Manager H. T. Loper, of the Lyric has installed a cash register in his box office, facilitating record-keeping in connection with the sale of tickets.

Springfield friends of Ben Drum, formerly with the Springfield News, but now with the General Film Company, at Denver, Colo., have received word of his marriage to Miss Eleanor B. Nichols, of Chicago. Drum broke into the moving picture business as manager of a Chicago house.

CHAMPION, ILL.

THE dedication of the new Lincoln Memorial Hall at the University of Illinois, February 12, was an interesting subject for the Pathe weekly. In addition to the most notable array of college presidents and statesmen, there are many good subjects in the building itself for photographing. The same event gave Governor Edward F. Dunne, of Illinois, another chance to gain the title for the state's most filmed executive. The Progress Motion Picture Company caught him as he greeted President James of the University. The Progress company has a great many Champaign and Urbana people in its series of local pictures which were taken under the direction of Manager David Udell of the Neil theater.

The New Era Amusement Company, of Indianapolis, has announced its intention of building on the site of the old Orpheum Theater at the foot of Hickory Street, a $75,000 vaudeville theater.

Chief of Police Lindstrum, of Urbana, the twin city of Champaign, has begun an active crusade against the practice of overselling admissions to picture shows. One manager was brought into prominence after, it was charged, he had ignored warnings both from the chief of police and chief of the fire department.

Talbert Williams, of Champaign, who opened a picture show in the Modern Woodmen of America Hall, at St. Joseph, has secured a new location in that city in the Reese building. Ewing's band of this city furnished music for the opening in the new house. Williams now has opposition. Frank Rice, ranking as village marshal has secured the quarters vacated by Williams and opened a show.

Captain Amundsen's crowd at the Coliseum, Davenport, February 12, was increased from the tri-cities, Davenport, Rock Island and Moline, by the news two days before of the death of Captain Scott and his Polar explorers. The films are very popular in the middlewest.

A. J. Pruvot, city electrician of Sioux City, has returned from the national convention of his fellows at St. Louis to inform the residents of that city that the garage is more deadly than the picture show, and that the owner of the automobile does more to contribute to the fire menace than the "explosion" of a reel.

E. M. Henie has purchased a site on Sycamore Street, between Second and Third Streets in Muscatine, where he will erect a new moving picture theater. He also owns a picture house in Clinton, Iowa.

The Princess moving picture theater at Fort Madison, Iowa, was destroyed by fire February 8, causing a loss of about $2,200. The blaze is blamed to defective electric wiring.

Manager McCray of the Princess moving picture theater at Wapello, recently tendered his house for a benefit for Miss Ella Lindsay.

It is reported that Oxford will have a new moving picture show.

The Vinton Amusement Company, of Vinton, is now giving afternoon performances at the Columbia. More three and four-reel features will be used,

Albert Vennink, secretary of the Humane Society at Sioux City, caused the arrest of Albert Bessman, proprietor of the Empress on a charge of exhibiting a film that was undesirable. The film was shown to Police Judge H. F. Dims and representatives of the Humane Society. It was contended that two murders, which were objected to, were eliminated by speeding the reel at that spot in the film.

PHILADELPHIA.

ONE of the most important questions now up before the general business men of Philadelphia is the proposed merger of the various trade bodies of this city into one large and influential body, which is to be known as the New Board of Trade. At the present time there is in this city about 108 various trade associations, made up of men in every line of business. These associations have long been trying to place Philadelphia on the commercial map, but for some reason, either owing to lack of interest or that they do not have the proper backing, nothing has ever been accomplished. A short time ago Alba B. Johnson, president of the Baldwin Locomotive Works, proposed that the business men of this city consolidate into one body and work to one end, that end being a larger and better Philadelphia. Already almost every business man has come to the front with a statement in favor of the move, and it is expected that within the next month Philadelphia will have the greatest trade body in the world.

This means much to the moving picture business. It means more people, and more people means more nickels in the pockets of the exhibitors, and then more profits for the film exchange men. A couple hundred thousand more people in this great city, will require more places of amusement, and men interested in this line should be awake to the opportunity to develop the city. Mr. Edward Kruapa, of the Monarch Film Exchange, is one of the strong backers of the new organization, and he sees the possibilities of this great movement and what it means to the moving picture exhibitors of Philadelphia.

A recommendation was made in the Pennsylvania Assembly to appropriate $7,500 to put in operation the State Board of Moving Picture Censors, which will pass on all pictures to be offered for public exhibition.

The Wayne Amusement Company is having plans drawn for a moving picture theater which will be erected in the near future at the corner of Dounton street and Germantown avenue. Just what the seating capacity of the new theater will be could not be learned, but it was stated that the house will be one of the finest in that section.

Ben H. Zerr, proprietor of the Schuylkill avenue theater, at Reading, Pa., is distributing souvenirs to his patrons in the form of parcel post zone maps and calendars, and a surprising number of people are attending the theater to see the excellent pictures he exhibits and also to get one of the post maps.

The building of a new theater at Fifth street and Onley avenue has just been started and it is expected that the picture house will be opened to the public in about six months' time.

There is a rumor afloat that the Calehuff Supply Company, Inc., which is located at No. 50 North Eighth street, is about to change its place of abode. Just where this supply company will move is a question.

LOUISVILLE.

THE expected agreement between the members of the Louisville Photoplay Association, the striking musicians and the operators, has failed to materialize, and the situation has changed little during the past week. The exhibitors have reiterated their offer of open shops to the union men, the latter refusing to consider this proposition, holding out for union shops. Several members of the Association's committee are in favor of conceding the demands of the strikers in this particular, the majority holding firm to the open shop offer, however. At present there seems little chance for any agreement being reached. Oscar Sheck, of the national organization, is still in Louisville endeavoring to adjust the trouble.

The Princess Amusement Company, controlling several moving picture theaters, has tendered the use of the Casino to a Louisville church, and noonday services are being held in the theater during Lent. The services last from 12 to 12:30, and have been attended by scores of business men. While the generosity of the company has attracted much favorable comment, it will doubtless prove to be bread cast upon the waters. Attendance at the Casino has increased to a marked extent, and no loss will be sustained by the interruption to the daily routine.

Irvin C. Simon, president of the Princess Amusement Company, has been appointed manager of the proposed Jefferson Theater, work on which will begin shortly. Coincident with the election of the prominent moving picture magnate, came the announcement to the effect that the Jefferson Amusement Company will erect theaters in other cities, the Louisville house to be the first of a string to be established. The Jefferson will go up in the rear of the Tyler Building, the entrance being on Jefferson street. W. Allen Kinney, also of the Princess Amusement Company, is secretary of the Jefferson Amusement Company, and a member of the board of directors. Others interested in the concern include Col. P. and Col. John H. Whallen and Owen Tyler. The Whallen Brothers now control the Buckingham Theater, devoted to burlesque and moving pictures. The Jefferson Theater will be ready for the public by mid-summer, running vaudeville and motion pictures.

Protesting against the passage of the Zearing bill, providing for the legalizing of Sunday theaters in Indiana, the Jeffersonville, Ind., Ministerial Association has begun a crusade against motion picture theaters and others being open on the Sabbath. This move followed the introduction in the Indiana State Legislature, now in session at Indianapolis, of a bill by Representative Zearing, designed to remove present obstacles to Sunday performances throughout the State. The Jeffersonville Ministerial Association is attempting to stir up sentiment against the bill, but public opinion, at least in Jeffersonville, appears to be the other way. Many residents of the little city across from Louisville seem to think that the animated picture theaters are sources of good rather than evil. It is believed that the Zearing bill stands an excellent chance of becoming a law, sentiment generally being in its favor, despite isolated protests.

Exhibitors of Lexington, Ky,, are having their troubles, both the white and colored ministerial associations of the Fayette city being in the midst of active campaigns designed to result in the closing of the animated picture theaters on Sunday. Mayor J. E. Cassity, of Lexington, was a member of the congregation which heard the Rev. Mark Collis preach on a "Safe and Sane Sunday, recently. Dr. Collis asserted that theaters, cigar stands, groceries and other establishments should be forced to observe the Sabbath. The minister read the statute on the books providing that only such business places defined as absolute necessities may remain open on Sunday. In the same city the colored ministers of Baptist churches have adopted resolutions condemning motion picture theaters, putting them in the same class with saloons, The resolutions are prefaced by the following remarks: "The Sunday moving picture shows and the evidences of open saloons are seen from intoxicated persons and crowds collected in the saloon districts, and other forms of vice and crimes committed on Sunday, are not only detrimental to the highest good of our citizenship, but a violation of the law."

Work on the National Theater, to go up at Fifth and Walnut streets, was stopped by the Building Trades Union, which alleges that non-union labor is being employed on the new theater. The trouble will be adjusted at once, it is thought, and excavation will proceed. The Selden-Breck Construction Company secured the main contract, sub-letting the excavation to the Henry Bickel Company, which is the object of the union's ire.

A meningitis scare at Flemingsburg, Ky., has resulted in the temporary closing of the Princess Theater by Manager Edward F. Breeze. The house will be re-opened as soon as the authorities have the situation better in hand,

George L. Anderson, Jr., who has conducted the Cozytorium at Mt. Sterling, Ky., for several months past, has decided to abandon that town, moving the plant to Morehead, Ky. Mt. Sterling failed to support the moving picture house to the satisfaction of Mr. Anderson, competition being keen in the Bluegrass town.

The Gem Theater, of Frankfort, Ky., has reopened for business following the fire which caused damage of $1,000. Mr. Taylor, the owner of the house, purchased two Power's 6-A machines by long distance telephone from A. F. Mayer, of the Central Film Service Company, of Louisville and had the theater running twenty-four hours after the blaze.

M. A. Neff, head of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, is making efforts to substitute a new draft of the proposed ordinance fixing the license fees of theaters of Cincinnati, appearing before the Ways and Means Committee of the council recently. Mr. Neff asks for a license fee of $75 for theaters seating less than 300 persons, and $150 for those seating more than 300, with a sliding scale for both classes when they seat more than 300. Mr. Neff stated that there are now in Cincinnati 61 motion picture theaters, seating 18,206 persons, and paying an annual license tax of $9,650 under the old ordinance. Under the new law they would pay $5,075. Mr. Neff proposes that the difference in revenue be made on vaudeville and other playhouses. The latter seat 26,543 persons, and pay a license fee of $5,800 under the present schedule. Under that proposed by Mr. Neff, the "legitimate" theaters would pay $8,275 annually, The total revenue under existing conditions is $15,470, while that derived under the president's plan would aggregate $16,050. The committee considered the proposal, but decided to take no action at present.

NEW ENGLAND.

A RECENT incorporation is the Machat Feature Film Company, of Boston, Mass. This is a $150,000 concern, with M. Louis Machat, Anna Machat, Aaron Shapiro and Isaac Shurnik as the promoters.

Five persons were injured in a $50,000 fire in the Family Theater, Worcester, Mass., that broke out in the early evening of February 19. This house is situated at 110 Front Street, and there were about 300 persons inside at the time. Louis Cartier, the Family Theater's operator, deserves a world of praise for his presence of mind, as it was due to him that a serious panic was averted. Mr. Cartier informed the audience that there was a fire in the theater, but that there was no cause for alarm. This notice had the desired effect, and the audience left the house, with no sign of panic. Three of the five persons injured were firemen. The creditable work of Operator Cartier will be fully realized when it is understood that flames swept through the auditorium just after the audience had filed out.

The Colonial theater, Milford, Conn., is doing a capacity business these days with a good grade of Mutual film service. The Colonial is a cosy, up-to-date theater, and the size of its audiences testifies to the quality programs that are always given by the management.

Colonel "Bill" Stanton, manager of Mr. Harry Katzes' Auditorium theater, Fitchburg, Mass., is making a distinct success of his house. The Auditorium plays vaudeville and pictures, with an occasional road-show. This theater is now showing much better results than it did before Col. Stanton assumed charge of the management.

It is understood that Moe Marks, proprietor of the Comique theater, Lynn, Mass., with his brother, Mitchell Marks, have secured the site of the Sagamore Hotel Building, and will erect a theater in Lynn, to seat about 3,000 persons. The house will cost about $150,000, so it is rumored, and will be ready by early fall. The Comique theater is doing a very nice business with photoplay programs, with Al. Newhall as the manager. "Mitch" Mark is now in Buffalo, New York, and is the original picture man of New England, having built the first real photoplay theater in that section—the Comique theater of Boston.

Messrs. Alden and Snow have purchased the Gem theater, Winchendon, Mass., and will make a few needed improvements and adopt a policy of vaudeville and photoplays. Licensed pictures are to be used. The Gem is a modern and well constructed theater, and should do very nicely, provided quality programs are given.

A panic was averted in Jacques Theater, Waterbury, Conn., last week, when smoke from papers being burned in a yard, in the rear of the theater, alarmed the audience. James Devine quieted the audience, by explaining the cause of the smoke, adding that there was no cause for worry.

William T. Howley, formerly manager of the Academy theater, Lowell, Mass., was recently appointed general manager of the Tremont theater circuit. Mr. Howley is an able executive, and popular with the trade.

A. V. Vanni, manager of the Bijou theater, New Haven, Conn., is doing a capacity business in his house, with vaudeville and picture programs. Manager Benjamin Jackson of the Grand theater of that city, is also doing as much business as his theater can handle. Both Mr. Jackson and Mr. Vanni are sure that local conditions make it imperative that vaudeville acts be used, in connection with their picture programs and, to judge by the size of the audiences, they know whereof they speak.

Paul Rainey's African Hunt pictures are still great favorites in New England, and Manager Julius Cahn had full houses the week he exhibited them at his Colonial theater, Lawrence, Mass. The Colonial usually plays legitimate attractions, but on the week of February 17, turned to the pictures.

Howe's moving pictures were exhibited at the Court Square theater, Springfield, Mass., from February 27 to March 1. The Court Square plays the pictures but seldom, although Howe's pictures have filled several successful engagements there in the past.

The Nelson theater, Springfield, Mass., operated by William Fox, is to have its former manager, Joseph Carr, back on the job once more. Mr. Carr was called from the Nelson theater to assume the management of Fox's Gotham theater, New York. Edward Shields, who managed the Nelson in Mr. Carr's place is now in Bridgeport, Conn., where he will preside over the new Fox vaudeville and picture house there. Both Mr. Shields and Mr. Carr are understood to be among William Fox's star managers, and are relied on to do the business.

The Municipal Playhouse, Northampton, Mass., has reported a deficit of about $1,500, made during the first nine months. Why not play good programs of pictures and vaudeville, and show a healthy profit? Evidently "high-brow" stock company attractions do not strike a very responsive chord in the hearts of Northampton folks.

"Leave to Withdraw" was given to the bill in the Massachusetts Legislature calling for the inspection of all pictures exhibited in Massachusetts by the district police. The police now censor all films to be used on Sundays, but not during the week.

Since Mr. McGann lost his license to operate the Woburn theater, Woburn, Mass., due to action of the mayor, no other photoplay theater has been given a right to open. As a result, the town with 15,000 inhabitants, is without means of amusing itself, and the inhabitants are loud in their disapproval of the mayor's attitude.

Mayor Patrick J. Moore, of Pittsfield, Mass., has evolved a most peculiar method of giving licenses to local theaters for Sunday performances. He has decided to issue licenses, but with the understanding that the shows be held for charitable purposes only. More than this, the mayor will issue but one license each Sunday, with the various theaters taking their turns.

A new incorporation is the Connecticut Film Manufacturing Company, which has filed its certificate of incorporation at New Haven, Conn. This is a $10,000 concern, with Giovanni B. Tomassi, Charles W. Bauby, and Benjamin G. Salvini, as the promoters. The charter of the company allows it to enact moving picture plays, duplicate films, rent pictures, and to own and manage motion picture theaters. The concern expects to erect a factory at Chesire, where it will manufacture photoplays.

The legislature of Vermont closed its session at Montpelier, without having anything brought to its attention, relative to the moving picture industry.

Moving pictures are now going at full blast at State House, Providence, R. I. Free shows are given daily in one of the hearing chambers by the State Board of Health. Dr. Gardner T. Swarts, secretary of the Board of Health, is the prime mover of the exhibitions. As these columns have related, the Health Board has been waging war with the aid of motion pictures in its endeavor to show the public the need for dental inspection, and hygienic work. A pure milk campaign has also been waged by exhibitions of pictures, showing the deadly results of using bad milk. The Board is now exhibiting these pictures in the State House to convince the Assemblymen of the utmost importance of continuing the work. It is understood that the legislators are much taken up with these "free shows," and that attendance is all that can be desired. In fact, so they say, many solons are now to be found in the exhibition room, when they would be expected to be found attending to legislative business.

On Monday, February 24, B. F. Keith's theater, Boston, presented Edison's talking motion pictures. Two subjects were presented, a lecture describing the workings of the new Edison invention, and the Edison minstrels. Keith's National Theater, Boston, also exhibited the talking pictures. On Sunday, February 23, the newspaper advertising of Keith's Theater featured the pictures strongly and the vaudeville acts took second place.

"The Miracle" was presented at the Colonial theater, Boston, the week of February 24, at prices ranging from twenty-five cents to one dollar fifty. The reception tendered "The Miracle" as well as the talking pictures in Boston will be recorded in these columns of next week.

Arthur K. Peck is to fill an engagement at Tremont Temple, Boston, starting March 8, when he will present a series of travel talks, with motion pictures as the main attraction. "Rural and Historic England," "Azores to the Bay of Naples," and "Italy" are the subjects. Prices will be up to one dollar.

The exhibition of feature films is greatly on the increase throughout the New England territory, and the various exchanges renting this grade of service are very busy these days.

Goldstein Brothers Amusement Company, owners of a string of New England theaters, devoted to vaudeville and pictures, report that their Plaza theater, Springfield, Mass., is doing annually well this season, and is now one of the best paying theaters of the circuit. This is saying a great deal, as all the Goldstein theaters are winners.

The Dreamland Theater, Bellows Falls, Vermont, reports excellent business, with programs of vaudeville and pictures as the policy. Manager T. F. Kiniry is always on the look-out for new attractions and pays Boston frequent visits, to find "something good for my patrons." Mr. Kiniry is the oldest exhibitor in Bellows Falls, and recently renovated and enlarged his theater, which immediately resulted in bigger box-office returns.

Edwin Bower Hesser will present "Kolb Brothers' Photographic Exploration of the Colorado River Canyons," for two weeks, starting March 3, at Tremont Temple, Boston. Moving pictures showing the shooting of 300 rapids in a trip of 1,400 miles over the route only previously covered by Major Powell are to be exhibited.

Vaudeville and photoplays constituted the Washington's Birthday entertainment for the prisoners at the Charlestown, Mass., prison. Deputy Warden Allen arranged the show that was greatly appreciated by the prisoners.

Charles Edison, son of Thomas Edison, who is studying storage batteries at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Boston, had his first view of the talking moving pictures on February 22, at a private exhibition at Keith's theater, at which President Charles L. Edgar of the Edison Electric Illuminating Company, a party of friends, and a few newspaper men were present.

Manager Johnson of the Empire Theater, Chelsea, Mass., reports that business at his new house is fairly brisk, and that he hopes that the good shows always offered will make for better business before long. With 1000 seats, the Empire is in a position to give long programs and should prosper in the end.

Marcus Loew's Orpheum Theater, Boston, is doing a truly tremendous business, under the able management of Victor Morris. One of the features soon to be given at the Orpheum is a girl's driving contest, in which fifteen young women will take part, and a prize given to the winner. A good grade of Licensed pictures are shown at the Orpheum.

Conn's Theater, Concord, N. H., has been purchased from Mr. Conn by John J. Quigley, a Boston vaudeville agent. The house will be a vaudeville and picture house, and Mr. Quigley should find it a money maker, as the theater is new and modern in every way.

Manager Al. Rosenberg, of the Rockland Theater, Rockland, Me., believes that the chief reason that the business of the one-night stands has fallen off is the vaudeville and picture show, where a man can take his family twice a week at little cost. Mr. Rosenberg finds that this form of entertainment satisfies the public best. Manager Rosenberg ought to be an authority on this subject, as his Rockland Theater very often gives programs of vaudeville and pictures, although it formerly played legitimate attractions exclusively.

When these columns made note of the fact that Hathaway's Theater, New Bedford, Mass., had given up the policy of motion pictures to give stock-company attractions, we hazarded the guess that it would return to the exhibition of pictures before long. We guessed correctly, as Hathaway's is scheduled to return to "real popular amusement" on March 1.

Both the Victoria and Pastime Theaters of Lawrence, Mass., have taken on a new lease of life under the efficient direction of Manager "Bill" White. Mr. White knows what his patrons desire—and he doesn't hesitate to give it to them. Result—big business.

W. T. Howley, manager of the Academy Theater, Lowell, Mass., reports excellent business. This house is run on up-to-date lines, and is a winner.

Keith's Hippodrome, Portland, Me., was used by the Portland Council No. 103, United Commercial Travelers, who gave a minstrel show on February 14th and 15th at this theater.

A report of big doings in the film exchange business of St. John, Canada, drifts down to Boston. According to the story, the General Film, the Gaumont and Kinetograph folks are having a war all of their own, with the result that the local photoplay theaters are switching from one concern to another, as prices are being cut to meet this fight for business by the three exchanges. The Gem Theater has left the General Film Company, and is securing service from the Kinetograph folks, while the Nickle is now using General Film service.

Manager Victor Morris, of Marcus Loew's Orpheum Theater, Boston, scored a success when he inaugurated his new "Song Demonstrators' Contest." The various song publishers send representatives to the Orpheum to demonstrate their latest bits. The audience is the judge, and after the various demonstrators have finished a cup is awarded to the most sucocessful competitors. The Ted Snyder Company won the first prize on February 3, with "At the Devil's Ball."

Revere Beach, the "Coney Island" of Boston, is scheduled to have a magnificent amusement building, as the plans which have been in the course of preparation for a year are now approved. A beautiful theater, to seat 1000, will form an important part of the structure, with vaudeville and pictures as the policy.

Motion pictures are to enter into the instructions of the students at Yale College, New Haven, Conn., which is a distinct innovation. The mining engineering classes of the Sheffield School will be shown the operations of getting ore from a mine, and the processes it goes through, until ready for shipment. It is especially interesting to note this fact, as Connecticut has been backward in using the Cinematograph for purely educational purposes.

PORTLAND.

EUGENE LEVY of Seattle, Wash., and the Peoples Amusement Company of Portland, Ore., have secured the state rights of both Oregon and Washington for "Satan," which will be exhibited throughout the circuits of both concerns. All other houses that are in the circuit belonging to either the People's Amusement Company or that of Eugene Levy, will be enjoined from exhibiting the film.

"Cleopatra," which was exhibited at the Peoples Theater in Portland, for seven days, was attended by large crowds and the film will be booked once again. The management of the Peoples wired Chas. L. Gaskell, manager for Helen Gardner, who starred in the play, offering $1,500 for her appearance for one week in Portland. Her previous contracts prevent her coming to Portland, but contract has been closed for her appearance to play the Peoples Circuit beginning January 1st, 1914.

Ed Berg, manager of the Sunnyside Theater, has been transferred to manage the Grand Theater at The Dalles, Ore.

Unusual attractions are being booked by I. Leeser Cohen, manager of the Globe Theater. This is seen by the anticipation of the audience that attend each performance of the Globe programme.

Plans have been completed for the installation of the new pipe organ that is to be installed in the Circle Theater, Portland. Manager Kerr is sparing no expense to please the theater-going public to book the best of films that can be found in the patents market.

What will be the biggest moving picture show theater in Portland, with a capacity of 1300 people will be built at the northwest corner of Eleventh and Washington streets in the shape of a new two-story 60 x 100 foot brick building, and will be called the Portland theater. The new theater will cost $50,000. The new Portland theater will be thoroughly modern in every respect, and will occupy the greater portion of the two-story building. It will have a 60 foot frontage on Washington Street, and part of this will be given over to stores. The theater will be finely finished in white terra cotta and marble. It is to be of brick, well trimmed and will have a sloping floor, which will be covered with carpet. The best opera chairs will be used in equipping the theater, and the stage will be especially large. More attention is being given to the consideration of the acoustic properties than is usual in moving picture houses, as the pictures may be varied with singing and small vaudeville stunts. The building will be heated with furnace heat, and will be constructed to conform with the fire regulations that can be termed absolutely fireproof of the class "A" construction.

Fred Dawson, a druggist of Albany, while in Portland the other day, said that his town will soon have a corner on the moving picture business if a theater war now in progress there is not settled. "There were three shows originally," said Mr. Dawson, "and Mr. Bly, a showman of Salem, came to Albany and started to build a fine theater right in the centre of the business district. Then one of our theater men, to even up, has commenced another very fine, large theater near the first new one, so that there are two being built, meaning five shows almost together."

The Majestic Theater of Portland has gone Independent again. This house is aiming to run hereafter nothing but feature films.

In the semi-annual report of the Vice Commission of Portland, much credit and praise was paid to the motion picture industry and the houses of this city. Special mention was made to the effect that it staved off considerable crime.

Special feature films are to be run at the Peoples' Theater, which are being called for by its patronage. Among those booked to be exhibited in the near future are "The Miracle," "Salome" and Pilgrim's Progress."

Melvin G. Winestock, manager of the Peoples' Amusement Company, announces that Helen Gardner has accepted the contract made between her and the Peoples' Amusement Company for her appearance at the People's Theater for the first week of January, 1914.

An agreement has been made between the managers of the three houses at The Dalles, whereby vaudeville will not be allowed to be presented in either of the motion picture houses.

Ralph Radnor Earle, cameraman for the Pathe Weekly, dropped in Portland the other day with a batch of news of his successful york and of the loss of camera and other paraphernalia, which was destroyed by fire at Oroville, California. His equipment costing nearly $2,500.00, was destroyed and he escaped with nothing but his suit and overcoat.

RELEASE OF MARCH 13th

LINCOLN FOR THE DEFENSE

TO THE TRADE:

This historical story will probably be well remembered by the public. It deals with an incident in Mr. Lincoln's career where he left a very important political meeting at Springfield to go across country to defend a poor farmer boy who is on trial for murder. We were fortunate in finding Mr. Day, who has made a very life like Lincoln, and with the untiring efforts of our Director, Mr. Vale, we are able to present to you a very excellent picture for this release. I am confident that it is going to be very well received everywhere. We have prepared some very strong paper, one-sheets and three-sheets.

TWO-REEL SUBJECT. Our release of MARCH 20th is a two-reel subject, entitled "TILL DEATH US DO PART." This is the first two-reel subject we have prepared. I consider it the best picture we have made up to date, and strongly recommend it to you.

I am pleased to announce that the Pilot Company is now making a wonderful wild animal picture. Contrary to the current vogue, however, it will be a comedy.

GEO. A. MAGIE, Secretary.

LICENSED FILM STORIES

VITAGRAPH.

THE MOUSE AND THE LION (Mar. 17).—John Burling, a detective, rounds up some members of the Night Hawk gang. Bill Hanks, the chief, swears to get even with him. Tim, a little street Waif, entering the saloon where the gang are consulting with Maime, a female accomplice, overhears some of their threats. He is discovered and kicked out of the place by Hanks. The next day, Tim, half starving, picks up a purse in the street which he has seen a lady drop. He is tempted to steal it, but in the end gives it back to her. Burling sees this, is struck with the boy's honesty, and being in need of a page boy, hires him and dubs him "Buttons." Maime visits Burling and leaves him an address to come to to investigate a robbery which has occurred at her home. Tim recognizes her as she goes out, follows her and has his suspicions confirmed by seeing her with one of the gang on the street. He goes to warn his master, but Burling has already gone. Tim discovers the address from his employer's blotting pad, follows Burling, who is trapped by the gang, and thrown bound into a cellar of a house on the river bank, to wait until the flood tide rises when he will be drowned. Dick discovers the place, wriggles in through a small hole in the wall, releases Burling and supplies him with a weapon. When the gang descend to taunt their victim, Tim and Burling turn the tables on them and they are caught in their own trap.

THE BIRTHDAY GIFT (Mar. 18).—Left alone by the death of her mother and the imprisonment of her father for theft, little Alice goes to live with her uncle and aunt. The latter does not take kindly to the child. The little one longing for a mother's love determines to give her aunt a birthday present. Unknown to her foster-parents, she washes dishes and does little odd jobs in the homes of the neighbors, for which she receives small sums of money. She saves the money in her bureau drawer. Her aunt finds it and comes to the conclusion that she has stolen it, following in the foot-steps of her father. She tells her husband and he kindly questions Alice, who tells him how she got the money, and her object. This revelation of the child's thoughtfulness and love, brings her very closely to the hearts of her aunt and uncle, and proudly they adopt her as their own child.

ACCORDING TO ADVICE (Mar. 18).—He is a likely young chap, and doesn't hate himself at all. He can't understand why the ladies do not recognize his many charms. He reads in a newspaper an article which convinces him he lacks confidence in his wooing, and a woman always loves a brave, bold admirer. In the Park, he walks fearlessly up to a nurse-maid and tries to captivate her. She hands him the baby's nursing bottle, and leaves him wondering what it all means. He meets a chorus girl and intrepidly approaches her. She hands him a paper bag and tells him to help himself. He draws out a lemon. The girl laughs and trips away. He is puzzled. As he goes further, he fares worse. He makes one final effort to conquer the ladies. He is so beat up, he is obliged to take to his bed, where he has plenty of time to learn that it does not pay to be too previous or strenuous in the art of [illegible].

THE STRENGTH OF MEN (Special 2-parts Mar. 19).—PART ONE—In the unsettled and undeveloped forests of the Far North, Mr. Cummings, who is the foreman of the Canadac Lumber Company, lives with his daughter, Marie, in their cabin of logs on the mountain side. One night during a particularly hard winter, their quiet is disturbed by groans, and on opening the door, Mr. Cummings finds Jan Larose, a young French-Canadian, lying helpless in the snow. He brings him in, doctors his frost-bitten hands and Marie nurses him back to health. The young people become very fond of each other and after Jan's recovery, Marie's father gives him employment with his company. By hard work and thrift, Jan acquires quite a bank account. He still further augments his savings by taking a position as Guide and Rodman, with a Government Surveyor, which occupation takes him away from Marie.

While he is absent, Clarry O'Garry, who has broken his leg, crawls to the Cummings' cabin, and asks for help. He is taken in and Mr. Cummings acts the Good Samaritan and cares for the injured man. During his stay, he falls desperately in love with Marie. She is a good-hearted and good-natured girl and while she finds Clarry entertaining, he doesn't appeal to her in the same way as Jan, with whom she is very much in love. One day Jan returns unexpectedly from his surveying trip and finds Marie teasing Clarry in a coquettish way, and at once Jan becomes very jealous and tells her that since she loves another, he will soon take his departure and never return. She tries to reason with him without committing herself, but this does not appease Jan. One day Jan and Clarry meet in the woods. They exchange hot words and grapple with each other in desperate combat. Jan, although a smaller man, is exceedingly wiry, and overpowers Clarry leaving him beaten; and making his way further into the forest, he is determined never to see Marie again.

During his travels he discovers gold on the banks of Pelican Creek and stakes the land for a claim. He hastens to the Claim Office to register his rich find. Later the same day, Clarry, who has followed Jan, discovers Jan's stake and he replaces the claim with his own. He then takes up the race with Jan for the Recorder's Office, and both reach there at the same time.

PART TWO.—They both lay claim to the stake and the Recorder, to settle it, is obliged to send an agent to investigate it. After a lapse of six days, the agent returns and reports that it is an open question who made it first. It is then agreed that the men re-stake the claim by making a simultaneous start; the one reaching the point first to take possession. Preparations are made for the contest. Both men start in birch bark canoes with Indian aides. The race through whirling rapids and surging torrents is a terrific one. They are put to a superhuman test of endurance. When they traverse one stream, they are obliged to make a portage across land to the next. In preparation for the race, O'Garry has had his Indian guide hide a canoe on the last portage, so he would not have to carry his own canoe, thus gaining by the trick, an advantage over Jan. Clarry reaches the last portage first, leaves his canoe on the bank and hastens on to secure the hidden boat. When Jan and his aide reach the land they discover that O'Garry has left his canoe behind. They suspect his trickery. While they are crossing this piece of land, the forests are seen to be in a blaze. It is a perfect holocaust and laps everything before it. O'Garry reaches the place where he has hidden the canoe, and finds it burnt and then he waits with his Indian companion the coming of Jan and his aide. They meet and in the midst of the fiery and smoking furnace, the two men engage in deadly battle, while their Indian guides are in fierce combat, each striving to prevent the other from assisting either of the two white men, who, with the ferocity of beasts fight on until Jan is crushed by a falling tree. With his leg broken he lies helpless. He cries for mercy. At the same time O'Garry gives a screech of pain as the fire and smoke pierce his eyes, and make him sightless. If they remain where they are, they will be cremated by the insatiable flames. They realize their fate and quickly each agrees to help the other. Clarry lifts Jan from the ground and places him upon his back. He must furnish the means of locomotion and Jan will provide the sight. Thus they are enabled to make their escape to the water's edge where they are met by Mr. Cummings and Marie; who, seeing the forest fire, have paddled down stream and are led to the two men by their cries for help. Marie and her father assist them into their canoe and bring them safely to their home.

After weeks of care and nursing, both men recover from their injuries. All anger and animosity have left them. They have learned their lesson and found how dependant we are upon each other and there is something of greater value in life than the possession of gold. The final test of their strength is their love for Marie and she makes Jan her choice. Clarry congratulates Jan and is glad to admit that Marie's happiness is his own. Both men are anxious that the other take possession of the rich stake to which they had both laid claim, but finally they agree to share it and work it together, each anxious to help the other. The past is all forgotten in the tranquillity and strength of brotherly love.

THE HOUSE IN SUBURBIA (Mar. 19).—Rejected by June Trowbridge, John Doane is inconsolable. He confides in his partner, Gerald Brooks, who advises him to make love to someone else and arouse June's jealousy. On their way to lunch, they notice a poster announcing the appearance that evening of Vesta Voorhies, a famous actress. The name seems familiar to Tom and she turns out to be an old friend of his. After the performance that night, he takes her to dinner and tells her of his recent experiences. She sympathizes with him and agrees to help him win June. The opportunity comes when June happens into the restaurant and sees him dining with the actress. It arouses her envy, if not her jealousy. According to the plan laid out by Vesta, Tom invests some money in a bungalow in a suburban town and when he meets June, he tells her that he is engaged to be married to the young lady she saw him with at the bungalow, which he had purchased for a home. June is delighted to assist him, but during the purchasing of the furniture, she differs with him so materially in taste, that they are unable to agree upon the same selections. She becomes very angry, quarrels with him and abruptly leaves him.

After considering the whole matter, Tom comes to the conclusion that June and he are no match and after all, he is convinced that he loves Vesta Voorhies. He immediately cables her to Europe, where she has gone to fill a foreign contract. He asks her if she is willing to sign a life's contract with him and make him her leading man. She replies at once that she will accept his offer and they will close their engagement at his house in Suburbia.

THE WONDERFUL STATUE (Mar. 20).—Mr. Dennis, has a daughter, Lillian, who is in love with a young sculptor, Dick Harvey. Her father refuses to give his consent to the match. Lillian begs her father to reconsider his decision, and he relents in a measure and says that he will consent on the one condition that Harvey produce within three months a statue as beautiful as any masterpiece of the old Greek sculptors.

Harvey sets to work and finishes the statue. Mr. Dennis asks that it be sent to his home for inspection. Lillian and her aunt, Miss Brown, visits the studio. While examining the statue, the aunt stumbles against it, and it is thrown to the ground and broken to pieces. At first the position seems hopeless, but a bright idea comes to Lillian. She will dress herself in white and pose as the statue in her father's library. Her father is delighted with the statue, he is short-sighted and Lillian, knowing this, has hidden his spectacles, so he does not detect the deception. Her father refuses to part with it, gives Harvey a check for $20,000.00 and the young sculptor takes his departure. The old gentleman sits and gazes enraptured at the wonderful statue; he even has his meals brought to him, that he may remain with it.

Lillian becomes exhausted and when her father is not looking, steals some food, drinks his wine, and turns off the lights. This causes her father to become alarmed, believing the statue bewitched, and he takes up a chair, about to destroy it, when Lillian, terrified, jumps down from the pedestal and screams. Her father faints. Harvey puts the pedestal in the case, and when Mr. Dennis revives, offers to take it out for him, but Mr. Dennis says no; he does not want to look at it any more, that he shall take it away. He then takes Lillian's hand and places it in Harvey's.

A MATTER OF MATRIMONY (Mar. 21).—On his return home from sea, Captain Silas Harvey finds his little cottage closed. A note on the door informs him that his maiden sister and housekeeper has married a traveling minister and gone to the next town to live. The Captain tries to run the house himself, makes a dismal failure and decides to get married. He counts the possible candidates contemplatively upon his fingers as he considers their several qualities.

Ignoring his next-door neighbor, Miss Nancy Stimpson, who really has been very kind to him, the Captain sets out to woo and to win. His first call is upon the widow Bassett, whom he finds working in her little garden in front of her cottage, and learning heavily toward her over the fence, the Captain makes ardent advances and succeeds only in smashing down the widow's fence and trampling down her garden and is forced to beat a hasty retreat. His next stop is at the home of the widow Haskell, who meets him at the door, and the Captain follows her into the kitchen, where his attempts to be both useful and amiable, are a flat failure, and covered with flour, he departs in deepest disgust, as she pursues him with a rolling pin.

He next ventures to pay his respects to a single woman, the spinster, Martha Hopkins, who receives him in her prim way in her little parlor, where she succeeds in keeping the Captain at arm's length in spite of his affectionate advances, until, when he attempts to embrace her, he finds himself alone. He makes his way homeward with but little use for women. Upon his steps he finds a tray, containing a well-cooked dinner, and a note from Nancy Stimpson, who was wise enough to understand that the way to a man's heart is through his stomach. The Captain eats her dinner with great relish, and then decides to propose to her. As an excuse, he takes back the tray and the dishes, pops the question which she answers in the affirmative, making the two happy in the anticipation of future bliss and happiness.

BELINDA, THE SLAVEY (Mar. 22).—As an inmate of the poorhouse, Belinda is a wretched specimen of the slavey type. When Miss Finch, the keeper of the boarding house, is in need of help; she chooses Belinda as a maid of all work. She is so grateful for the chance to better her condition, she is willing to do anything for the happiness of her mistress. Harry Lamb, a gay young chap, takes board at Miss Finch's home, and falls in love with Miss Kitty, another boarder. Mr. Lamb shows Miss Finch many attentions, merely as a matter of policy. She comes to the conclusion that Lamb is in love with her and she determines that he shall be hers. Harry decides to write Kitty of his love, and at the same time, he sends his week's board money to Miss Finch. He gives the two envelopes to Belinda, she takes them to the kitchen, opens them, reads them and shows them to the grocer's boy, who is very sweet on Belinda. She knows that the boarding house keeper is in love with Lamb, and hoping to help her, takes the note addressed to Kitty, and places it in the same envelope with the money, to Miss Finch. She then delivers the note to Miss Finch, who is delighted. The first time she gets the opportunity, she caresses Harry so strenuously it arouses Kitty's jealousy; everything is off between Harry and her.

Lamb has told the landlady he would leave at the end of his week and is about to do so, when she meets him in the hall and after a severe struggle, retains im, with the assistance of the grocer's boy, who carries him back to his room. Lamb is in a plight until he finally thinks up an idea. He goes to a photographer, who is a friend of his, and tells him his troubles. The photographer gets his wife and children to pose with Harry in a photograph, which Harry plans to bring to the notice of Miss Finch, making her believe that he is a married man. He gets the photograph and leaves it in his room. Belinda discovers it and takes it to her mistress, who is so overcome, she faints. Belinda revives her, and they go in search of Lamb, whom they find just about to leave the house. They give chase, in company with the grocer's boy. After pursuing him for three or four blocks, meeting with several mishaps, he luckily catches a passing trolley car and makes good his escape.

GREED FOR GOLD (Mar. 17).—Jim Brooks and Dan Reeves, prospectors, accidentally locate on the same claim. Reeves, an old man in bad health, suggests that rather than have trouble, they form a partnership, which is signed and witnessed in the home of Joe Johnson, a young miner. Reeves leaves all the business to Brooks, who files the claim in his own name. On the day the partnership is formed, Reeves learns that his daughter, Ella, is about to visit him; he takes his copy of the agreement and placing it in a tin box, secrets it among the bricks in the fire place of his cabin. A few hours later he finds a nugget on the claim and the excitement causes his death.

When Brooks arrives on the claim he finds the dead body of Reeves, and decides to rob his daughter of her share in the mine. Ella arrives at the little mining town and is met by Brooks, who tells her that her father, who was an employee of his, has died. Joe Johnson and his mother inform her of the partnership and offer her a home. Joe remembers that the blotter used at the signing of the papers was a new one, and that by holding it before a mirror the signatures are legible enough for him to invoke the aid of the sheriff. In the meantime, Brooks has employed Tom Calhoun, a worthless prospector, to assist him in working his claim, and during an altercation when Calhoun attempts to steal his gold, a can of powder is knocked into the fire place; the explosion which follows wrecks the cabin and kills the two men. Joe and Ella, who are on their way to the claim with the sheriff, see the explosion and on their arrival at the cabin Joe discovers in the debris Reeves' copy of the partnership, which effectually establishes Ella's right to the mine. Later a new partnership is formed for life between Ella and Joe.

DOLORES' DECISION (Mar. 18).—Richard Marston, stock broker, is one morning attacked with a fit of nervous break down. He sends for the doctor, who gives temporary aid, but tells him to immediately go south and rest up or the consequence will be serious. Marston, his wife, and Roy, his son, pack up and hasten to a bungalow at Snake River, Florida. A few doys pass and Roy encounters Dolores, a girl who runs a motorboat for hire. She lives with her father and mother and little sister, Rosita, in a shack near the shore. The baby girl visits the Marstons and is petted and treated kindly by them. Marston discovers Roy's attachment for the boat girl and is annoyed. The little girl falls sick and Marston visits the shack and gives the mother money. The doctor is called and advises that if the child gets worse that he be sent for quickly. Marston receives a message that his stocks are being raided and he must catch the next train for New York. He hastens to the boat house to get Dolores to take him to the nearest station, which is 30 miles up the river. Just at that time Rosita gets worse and Dolores must go in haste for the doctor. Marston storms and demands that he shall be taken to the railway. He has a million at stake, he offers $10,000 for the service of the boat. Dolores refuses the offer and turns her boat down the river for the doctor. The child's life is saved and Marston's millions also. He then resolves that Dolores is the right sort of a girl to be his daughter-in-law.

MR. JINKS BUYS A DRESS (Mar. 20).—Mrs. Jinks asks Mr. Jinks for money with which to purchase a dress; he pleads inability. They have a quarrel, in the midst of which Jinks leaves the house. He enters a saloon and emerges therefrom considerably under the influence of liquor. He staggers down the street. A window in which is displayed ladies' dresses fitted on forms attracts his attention. After looking at them he decides to buy one for Mrs. Jinks. He enters the store, selects one and requests that it be sent to his house; but it cannot be delivered before the next day.

Jinks decides not to keep his wife waiting so he buys it, form and all. Reaching the street he feels that another drink will not hurt him, so he enters a saloon and causes excitement among the company. The bartender tells him that ladies cannot be served. Jinks explains and everyone laughs. Jinks leaves the saloon and proceeds home, followed by a crowd. They reach a business section. On the outside of the stores are forms dressed in wrappers and forms dressed in men's suits. A street piano commences to play. Jinks stops, looks at the figure and at the piano; he is struck with an idea; he gives the piano player some money and tells him to continue playing and suddenly he seizes the figure and commences to dance. The idea is contagious. The crowd makes a rush for the forms on the outside of the stores and all join in the dance. The owners of the forms rush out and try to get to the dancers, but they are prevented by the crowd. A cry of police is raised. Jinks and the young men run away, carrying the forms with them. A chase ensues and the young men throw down the forms. Jinks is captured and taken to the police station, where he explains. The officers are amused and Mrs. Jinks is sent for. She examines the dressed-up form and requests that it be sent to her home. Jinks is in the parlor with a towel around his head when Mrs. Jinks walks in having on the dress she has taken from the form. She sits down, smooths his head and lovingly forgives him.

JIM, THE BURGLAR (Mar. 20).—Jim Brown is out of a job; he decides to turn crook. He succeeds in entering a house, where he sees a nice cake on the table. After he has devoured most of the cake, he finds a note which the lady of the house has left as a caution to her husband, "Not to eat this cake as it has been poisoned for the rats." This gives Jim a scare and he beats it for an antidote.

On his second job he is caught by the man of the house in the nursery, and as he is being held at the point of a gun, prior to the telephoning for the police, the baby happens to awaken and starts to cry. The man makes Jim walk the baby up and down and play child's nurse.

Still undaunted, Jim steals into the room of an actress at a hotel. He finds no one in the room to molest him and as there is a jewel case well filled with jewels on the bureau, he takes the same and leaves the place well satisfied with his loot. Imagine his surprise upon taking them to sell, when he is told they are imitation and only gets two dollars for the whole lot.

Jim determines that his next job will be something big, so he decides to crack a safe. He drills and bores and labors for three hours, at the end of which time the safe is opened. When Jim grabs the cash box, he discovers that it is empty, with the exception of a note from the absconding bookkeeper, saying that he has taken all the ready cash and gone. This is the straw, and Jim determines that honesty is the best policy.

FRIEND JOHN (Mar. 21).—John Franklin, a stolid Quaker, devotes his simple life to the Lord and horses, worshipping the former, shoeing the latter. His sister, Priscilla, is housekeeper. In the depths of John's big, simple heart, love is growing for Ruth, daughter of the Rogers, staunch Quakers. Howard Clark, an idle, rich young man, makes it his business to become acquainted with the young Quakeress, and when she chides him for his reckless, sinful ways, he tells her that he would reform if she would help him. The girl is seized with the idea that the Lord has sent this man to her to be saved and she resolves to perform her mission.

In the course of their talks, she falls in love with the reckless young fellow, and when he asks her to elope with him, she does so. The elopement causes grief to the old folks. John is greatly depressed.

Clark marries Ruth and they live happily for a while at his home in the city. But although Clark loves his little wife, he goes back to his old ways because Ruth clings to her old-fashioned ways and does not make free with his pleasure-loving friends. At last, lonely and miserable, Ruth returns to her home. Her father's harsh words anger her and although he does not refuse her admittance, she is too proud to accept his hospitality. From his blacksmith shop John sees Ruth stagering in the road. He takes her into his house where she sobs out her story. John hastens to the city, where he finds Ruth's husband in the midst of a midnight revelry. In front of all the guests, John drags Clark from the house and forces him to return to the village. When they arrive, they find that the stork has reached there ahead of them. The little mite awakens in Ruth's husband all the manhood that has been slumbering and when the happy family later return to their city home, Friend John at his forge is comforted in knowing that Ruth is happy.

TAMANDRA, THE GYPSY (Special, 2 reels—Mar. 21).—Walter Clark is engaged to his rich young cousin, Beatrice Irving. While on a visit to a gypsy camp, he meets Tamandra, and it is love at first sight. On a second visit alone to the camp Tamandra and he run off and are married, she marrying for his money. The young man and his gypsy wife are turned out of his uncle's house. After having learned the truth that Walter is dependent upon his uncle, she endures living in poor surroundings with him for a year. She leaves him and joins her tribe. Walter visits the camp and tries to win her back, but is driven off. A child has been born to Tamandra, but she conceals it from him.

Later on, in order to keep Walter from annoying her, she has an article published of her death. The uncle reads this and visiting his nephew, begs him to return. Back in his old home and a new love springs up between Walter and Beatrice. There is a lapse of time and on the eve of their marriage, Oscar, a gypsy, happens to inquire of the sexton about Walter's marriage. He tells Tamandra, who sends a note of congratulations to Walter, which he receives during the wedding ceremony.

On receipt of it he deserts Beatrice and rushes off to a monastery. He is admitted and joins the order. There is another lapse of time. Beatrice, having felt the shock keenly, becomes a slum worker. One day while going her rounds, she accidentally meets Tamandra's child, who takes Beatrice to his mother's "poor one-room quarters." The mother dies and asks Beatrice to take care of the child. The child is taken home to the uncle. Beatrice and the child become great chums. One day while playing with the child, a band of monks are out for a walk:; they pass by and Beatrice notices that Walter is among them. She stops him and tells him about Tamandra's death and introduces the child and relates the story of Tamandra and the child's relationship. He realizes that it is his offspring, and forgetting his garb, hugs the child. Beatrice asks him to return. He hesitates and declares his vows to the order and that he has already renounced the ways of the world, and telling Beatrice that she should take the child as hers and raise it. She consents just as the other monks pass, and Walter falls in with them and returns to the monastry.

PETE THE ARTIST (Mar. 22).—Pete Brevardo, an artist, has obtained a reputation as a painter of portraits. A face he saw in the crowd was that of Belle Ritter, an elderly aristocratic maid, unknown to him. Her face impresses him powerfully. Belle is urged by her ward, Rita, a young girl, to have a life-sized portrait of herself made, and through a newspaper ad she comes to Brevardo's studio. He is overwhelmed with joy. He starts at once on the portrait and during the successive sittings he realizes that he is in love.

The old lady is single and wealthy and she admits (only to herself, of course), that she admires Brevardo. She brings Rita with her regularly on her visits to the studio, and Rita starts a courtship with Dobbs, assistant painter to Brevardo. On the day of the completion of the portrait, Brevardo, who has not yet shown the picture to Belle, urges her to postpone viewing it until it is framed and on display in the studio—visitor's day—when Brevardo wishes to gain fame by unveiling the portrait before his aristocratic friends.

On the next day, the portrait, properly curtained, is removed from its numbered position on the wall with several other portraits, while the studio is being brushed up for the visitors soon to arrive. The cleaning up is done by Mary, an awkward, grotesque dullard. In replacing the portraits on the wall she misplaces Belle's picture, putting it in position "3," instead of "5," and unwittingly substituting for it another portrait of the same size. A few moments later the studio is crowded with art lovers, among them Belle and her ward. Brevardo, with a glorious bow, undrapes the portrait he believes to be his masterpiece. Instead, there is revealed a portrait of an antique woman of colonial dress and mien. She is a scrawny old maid. Instead of pretty gray hair, she has stiff cork-screw ringlets. In her lap there is a cat. When Brevardo pulls aside the covering of the picture, Belle promptly faints in his arms. Rita shrieks, Brevardo is half paralyzed. The studio is in an uproar. The guests laugh heartily. Belle leaves in a fury, dragging the distressed Rita after her. Brevardo, in abject misery and despair, defaces the ugly portrait with one blow of a large brush dipped in dark paint. But he will not give in. He quickly secures the right portrait, and, with Dobbs as porter, immediately goes in an auto to Belle's home. Through Rita's diplomacy they smuggle themselves into the house, but the irascible Belle immediately orders them out. Poor Brevardo retreats before her outburst of temper into the parlor, and there Belle sees the real portrait. Her anger dissolves into smiles, and she is so impressed with the beauty of the portrait that she is soon reconciled. Dobbs and Rita enter the room and when they slyly pull aside the portrait rack, they discover Belle and Brevardo in an embrace that bespeaks wedding bells. The young folks break the news of their own engagement and rejoicing follows.

SELIG.

LOVE BEFORE TEN (Mar. 17).—Willie Mason is impressed by the wedding of his big brother, Jack Mason. The junior members of the household mischievously "took in" some preliminaries of the courtship. Katie and Willie proceed to imitate the doings of the big brother and sister, and deserting the play room, agree to go the staid conventional older ones better by "eloping." Willie aids Katie to escape from the parental roof via the window and ladder. They go to a bakery and buy buns for their trip and then go to the park. About this time the family at home find a note printed from Willie that states he and Katie are going to get married like Jack and Edith. A call to the police station brings a good natured policeman, who recalls children of the description dining in the park. Eventually the precious pair of infants are found asleep in the railway station and restored to the arms of their anxious parents.

TURN HIM OUT (Mar. 18).—Nicodemus Nobbs, a toy vender, is recognized by Susan, the bonny servant of Mrs. Mackintosh Moke, through the window of the house as she is leaning out discussing the weather with the painter. Just at the moment Mrs. Moke, newlywed and timorous, comes hurrying terror stricken up the street pursued by Eglantine Roseleaf, a dandified "masher." Although the door is slammed in the face of this peripatetic nuisance, he lingers lovingly about and finally spies the ladder of the painter and climbs it. Susan meets the bold invader, but succumbing to a bribe, hides him in a closet. She then cleverly locks him up and reports to her mistress. She calls in Nobbs and tells him he must do some fighting for her. Moke, the master of the house, happens home unexpectedly and is promptly "fired" by the belligerent Nobbs before he has time to make explanations. While Nobbs is telling his adventure, Roseleaf manages to pick the lock and gets out just as the dilapidated Moke gets back in his own house. As neither knows the other that starts a new lot of comedy complications and eventually Moke is again cast out of house and home. He tries the original method of getting sent home in a trunk, but Nobbs is on the job and he gets a horrible jolting and is carried away in the trunk. It furnishes a series of laughter producing complications until matters are righted and Roseleaf is properly chastised.

PEKIN, CHINA (Mar. 18).—One of the oldest and most interesting cities of the world, a fine educational subject.

THE SHERIFF OF YAVAPAI COUNTY (Mar. 19).—Big "Bud" O'Neill, the sheriff of Yavapai County, is in love with Nellie Bowen, daughter of a wealthy rancher. This individual is short on gambling, and is regarded as easy or a "come on" by the sporting fraternity. This foolish old fellow, flushed with fusel oil is in the back room of the Spread Eagle, being systematically fleeced by a precious pair, when he is discovered by the sheriff. He forces the gamblers to refund. But they are sore and soon manage to again trap Bowen and hold him up getting back their own money with compound interest. The sheriff again intervenes; shooting commences, but the gamblers get away. But the daring and persistent officer follows them to their mountain roost and after a desperate hand to hand encounter brings them back to justice.

THE DANCER'S REDEMPTION (Mar. 21).—The story is based on the idea of a dancing girl, attaining redemption through playing the part of Magdalene, in a primitive passion play. This is founded upon an ancient Spanish custom which is still in vogue in the rural regions of southern Spain. It is considered the playing of the part purifies the subject of original sin, and completely regenerates Magdalene, a dancer in a cafe. She sees Jack Wilde, a hated "gringo" whom she immediately loves with all the ardor of her primitive nature and he honorably returns her love, but his father frowns upon any such mesalliance so emphatically that the poor girl is driven to despair. She is given an opportunity to appear in the passion play and takes advantage of this to secure regeneration and grace in the eyes of her obdurate parent; but it works the other way, for he is a practical party and does not believe in such a method for establishing the standard of caste. Her old lover, mad with rage, tries to take her by force. She turns sadly away from the door of the American's hotel, but is stopped by the kind old padre. He induces her to forsake the world and enter a convent, so that her redemption becomes truly complete.

THE EX-CONVICT (Mar. 20).—Wilbur Stone is falsely accused of a crime, convicted on circumstantial evidence and "railroaded" to the penitentiary. As an odd coincidence, Frank Fink, a hardened degenerate, is sent up at the same time and he becomes a prison parasite on Stone. Both men are released about the same time. Wilbur Stone has secured a good position and tries to forget the past when the drunken and dissolute Fink happens to stagger into the office where he is employed. He with criminal cunning threatens to tell Stone's "number" to his employer, and the latter in terror gives up "hush money" to prevent it. A new drain comes on Stone in the person of his twin brother who has heart disease. This unfortunate young man drops dead in Stone's apartment; and the resemblance to him is so striking that he concludes to suddenly disappear and leave the impression that the dead brother is himself. The drunken Fink invades the apartment with the usual demands for money, staggers over the dead man, is discovered there and finally convicted of murdering him. Stone reads this where he has sought new life in a distant city, and to save an innocent man from the noose rushes to the rescue and arrives at the eleventh hour. He succeeds and is again so thoroughly impressed in the esteem of his employer that he is advanced in office and his past is made honorable forgetfulness.

KALEM.

THE $20,000 COROT (Mar. 17).—George Hale, Caleb Hamilton's private secretary, is in love with his employer's daughter, Mary.

A valuable painting—a famous Corot—which Hamilton has purchased for $20,000, is stolen from his library, the thieves cutting the canvas from the frame. Hamilton, greatly excited, summons detectives.

Hamilton discovers George making love to Mary and discharges him. George determines to reestablish himself in the old gentleman's favor by apprehending the thieves. He frequents a neighborhood famous as a resort for criminals, and in the rear of a saloon he sees two Italians who act suspiciously. He follows them to a cheap tenement and later he stations himself in front of the house disguised as a beggar.

Mary, interested in charitable work, visits a poor woman who has a room next to the Italians. Hamilton's detectives find the trail and raid the room, but find no trace of the painting. As they are leaving, Mary joins them and an Italian who oversees the affair, suspects the girl of being in league with the officers.

The thieves have cleverly covered the painting with a chemical solution which may be removed and when they find that they are being watched, they engage George to deliver the canvas to a notorious "fence," believing the young man to be a genuine beggar, anxious to earn a dollar.

Meantime Mary returns with blankets for the poor woman. She is captured by the Italians and made a prisoner. George loses no time in communicating with Hamilton and the detectives, who arrive at an opportune moment and assist him in liberating Mary and securing the painting.

PRISONERS OF WAR (Mar. 19).—Robert Vigron is an old veteran of the Civil War. He is broken in health and lives in abject poverty. Vigron has repeatedly applied for a pension, but n each case the Government has refused to grant his petition, stating that his war record shows that he was—or is believed to have been—instrumental in the escape of a notorious Confederate spy.

Congressman Howan and his daughter, Alice, visit near the homestead of the old veteran and the latter, with inborn gallantry and despite his age, risks his life in the rescue of the girl from a perilous situation. Alice, in gratitude, visits the old man, shows herself interested in his circumstances and induces him to tell her of his life and the reason why he is so destitute and neglected by the government whom he has served on the field of honor. It is then that the veteran tells his story.

We see two staunch friends become estranged when war is declared. Later, for old time's sake, Vigron is liberated by Edwin Worth when his execution has been ordered. There comes a time when Vigron is able to repay the debt and he does not fail. It is this action which stands as a stigma in his war rcord.

Alice is deeply touched by her old friend's narrative and interests her father in Vigron's behalf. As a result, the Congressman argues the case before the Committee and secures a pension for the worthy man. Alice has the supreme pleasure of bringing Vigron comfort and happiness for the rest of his days.

THE ANSWERED PRAYER (Mar. 21).—The poor widow reads to her little son the passage from the Bible, "Cast thy bread upon the waters," and impresses upon the boy the lesson of charity which brings its reward. Several days later the boy discovers that there is a single loaf of bread for the daily meal and his young mind gives a literal interpretation to his mother's teachings. He therefore steals from the house and coming to the seashore he throws the loaf into the surf, believing that it will be returned to him with manifold blessings.

A fisherman who lives with his little daughter has advertised for a housekeeper and as he strolls along the beach he discovers the boy and hears his story. Impressed with the little fellow's earnestness he accompanies him to the widow's home, where he finds to his joy that the good mother is his long lost sister.

THE CELERY INDUSTRY OF FLORIDA (Mar. 21).—This interesting industrial subject shows every phase of the cultivation and marketing of celery. We see the young plants taken from the seed beds, cultivated and sprayed and fertilized. The field with the full grown crop presents a striking scene as the harvesting begins. Dextrous hands, cut, sort, strip and pack the celery, which is shipped in specially constructed boxes.

THE HONOR SYSTEM (Mar. 22).—Richard Strong tarries at the bedside of his sick child and is late in arriving at the factory where he is employed. The foreman discharges him and high words ensue. During the quarrel the foreman assaults Strong, who to defend himself throws his assailant to the floor. The foreman is killed by the fall and Strong, found guilty, is sentenced to ten years in state's prison.

Surrounded by vicious associates and bullied by cruel guards, Strong changes from a kind and considerate man to a surly brute. The series of punishments he receives only develops his lodged hate toward mankind and he is placed in solitary confinement.

The new warden takes charge of the prison and is told that Strong is the most vicious character in the institution. He inaugurates the Honor System and directs particular efforts toward the reformation of Strong. It is some time before the hardened man can appreciate the warden's motive and not until the suits of stripes and the lock step are abolished does he fully understand that the new measures are the result of kindness.

One day the prisoner receives word that his wife is dying and the warden grants him permission to visit her for ten days. Strong does not betray his trust and returns to the prison at the appointed hour, his wife having gained strength.

Some time later a crazed convict makes a vicious attack on the warden and Strong saves the official's life. The grateful warden advises the Board of Pardons fully regarding the man's regeneration and, given his liberty, Strong returns to his wife and child and begins life anew.

THE BATTLE OF BLOODY FORD (Special—2 reels—Mar. 22).—Quite unintentionally, Agatha Elton, who resides in a small Pennsylvania village, permits two men to fall in love with her. Ralph Covington, an honest young farmer, pays ardent court and wins her promise. Meanwhile she has given her portrait to Rev. Carter Chase and the youthful clergyman experiences great difficulty in concentrating his thoughts upon the preparation of his sermons. At the Sunday services Agatha sings in the choir and her earnest efforts to help Rev. Chase in his work bring them constantly together.

One afternoon the minister, finding that he has no peace of mind, comes to the conclusion that he can rise to greater accomplishments in the community if Agatha becomes his wife. He goes to her cottage to propose. There he finds her in conversation with Covington and he realizes that a stronger bond than that of friendship exists between the couple. He returns to his study, broken in spirit.

The following Sunday, the services are interrupted when a messenger brings word that Fort Sumter has been fired upon. A company is recruited and Covington, commissioned a captain, leaves for the front.

Believing that Agatha is sorowing for Covington, the minister seeks to comfort her and in an unguarded moment he declares his own love. As the realization of his error comes over him, he begs forgiveness and returns home, where he has a struggle with his conscience.

The following Sunday Rev. Chase informs his congregation that he has decided to answer his country's call and in a few days he joins Capt. Covington at the front, just as a terrific battle is taking place. The ammunition is exhausted and Covington, returning with a new supply, is thrown to the ground, badly wounded by an exploding shell. His wagon takes fire and Chase, seeing the affair from the lines, rushes to his assistance. Chase drags Covington to a place of safety as the burning wagon, laden with powder, is hurled into splinters by the explosion. A bayonet charge follows and the Federals rout the enemy.

When the victorious Federals camp near a river, Virginia Merrill, a southern girl with northern sympathies, finds herself in the midst of hostilities. Capt. Covington, with a detachment of troops, crosses the river and Virginia overhears a Confederate plot to attack the camp while the southerners have the advantage in numbers. She sets forth to overtake Covington and finding he has crossed the river, the girl secures a horse and fords the stream under a rain of bullets from the Confederates who have discovered her flight.

Meanwhile, the camp is attacked and Chase is wounded. The Confederates leave to ambuscade Covington's party, which is returning, and the captain, severely injured, is about to drown during the battle at the ford, when Virginia sees his danger and, swimming out to him, she brings the officer to the shore.

Some time later, while Chase and Covington are convalescing in the hospital, they exchange confidences. Covington announces that the brave southern girl has won his heart, and Chase acknowledges his love for Agatha. A letter from the northern girl, in which she informs Covington of her love for the minister, opens the way. Covington replies that he is bringing her all the happiness in the world and she is unable to comprehend his meaning until he arrives in the village and brings the clergyman to her side.

ESSANAY.

"THE HOUSEKEEPER OF CIRCLE C" (Mar. 18).—Arthur Mackley, receives a telegram, from a housekeeper stating that she will arrive that day. The cowpunchers on the ranch "hitch up," go to the station, meet the new housekeeper and kidnap her. The following day Mackley, wondering where the housekeeper can be, is about to ask two or three of his men on the ranch, when he discovers the new housekeeper seated on the lawn reading to an army of cowpunchers. The men scatter in all directions when they see Mackley approach. Mackley informs the lady that he has engaged her services. She decides he has not, by hitting him in the face with a book. Mackley, thoroughly disgusted, places a sign on a tree advertising for a housekeeper—the homelier the better. The boys play a trick on Mackley by dressing Harold Wheeler, one of the cowpunchers, as a girl. Determined not to lose the new housekeeper, Mackley proposes to Wheeler. The young love affair comes abruptly to an end when Mackley discovers that the young housekeeper has pin feathers.

FINNEGAN (Mar. 19).—Patrick Finnegan, a worthless sort, tired of being bossed by his wife, goes to New York and gets a job on the police force. Deacon Sweet, from the same village, is accused of flirting by his wife. He also goes to New York. Finnegan pawns his civilian clothes to pay room rent. Deacon Sweet pawns his minister's garb, and buys Finnegan's old suit. A few days later, Deacon Sweet is arrested by Finnegan for flirting. Mrs. Finnegan arrives at the police station and creates a scene by mistaking Deacon Sweet for her husband. Mrs. Sweet, jealous, starts a fight with Mrs. Finnegan. Everybody fights. It ends happily, however, when the real Finnegan enters and embraces his wife.

THE TALE OF A CLOCK (Mar. 20).—Doctor John Smith, Sr., orders a grandfather clock to be sent to his apartment. The clock is delivered to his son's office in the same building by mistake. The son, a young doctor, in his twenties, not having made a hit with his sweetheart's parents, decides to have the marriage ceremony performed in his office that afternoon. His sweetheart, Dora Dean, arrives at the office. John telephones a minister to come right over. They are nervously awaiting the arrival of the minister, when the door-bell rings. Suspecting it is Mr. and Mrs. Dean, Dora is pushed hurriedly into the grandfather clock. Mr. and Mrs. Dean enter and seeing Dora's hat on the table demand an explanation. John is about to give one, when the men call for the clock to take it to John's father's apartment. The clock is moved away with Dora in it. Mr. Smith, Sr., opens the lock and finds the prostrate form of Dora. John, Jr., is arrested by Mr. and Mrs. Dean. Dora, now recovered from her nervous breakdown, rushes to the police station, where she again meets her sweetheart. The two embrace each other lovingly. The parents forgive them, and all ends happily.

THE PATHWAY OF YEARS (Mar. 21).—John Mason, a man of 75, takes an old chest from his library, seats himself before the burning hearth, and fondly takes from the rustic box a small piece of jewelry which brings back to his mind the days when he was in love with a beautiful girl. The locket that she gave him on the day he proposed to her and was accepted, brings tears to the old man's eyes. The note that she wrote, telling him that she was going to be married to another, makes John Mason shudder. Then, the day he met his sweetheart's daughter on the street in rags, selling flowers, and how he promised his old love that he would take care of her daughter, always. The girl, a young lady now, in her twenties, engaged to Richard Dayton, a young chap of high ideals, makes the old gentleman, John Mason, happy, that he was of some consequence to his old sweetheart after all.

BRONCHO BILLY'S SISTER (Mar. 22).—Broncho Billy's sister, Geraldine, is in love with Fred Church, a worthless sort. Broncho Billy discovers Fred Church, the lover, in the town saloon filling himself full of liquor. Church requests Broncho Billy to drink with him, but the latter refuses emphatically. A little later Geraldine, confesses her love for Church to her brother. Broncho Billy tells Geraldine that she will be throwing her young life away by marrying such a degraded fellow. Seeing the look of disappointment on her face he finally consents, thinking that his sister might be able to reform Church. A year or so later Geraldine returns to Broncho Billy's home with her infant child, having been deserted. Broncho Billy, determined to find Church, discovers him hiding in a barn, a fugitive from justice. Church is taken to Broncho Billy's home, where at pistol point he is married to Broncho Billy's sister. The law then takes its course.

MELIES.

HONOR THY MOTHER (Mar. 20).—Mr. Hepburn's home is a house divided against itself; on the one side he and his son, David, the only child by his first wife; on the other, his present wife and their son,. Phil. David receives all the harsh treatment of a step-child, in spite of which, he is the better young man of the two. He courts and wins the consent of the pretty Doris to become his wife.

Mr. Hepburn dies and David opens the letter his father had given him several days before: "My son David: Your mother, my first wife, and myself were divorced. Before she died she left you in my care, her estate which she had acquired in a way not approved by society. The will is in my desk. Your Father.'

David rushes to the desk, takes the will, and to protect his dead mother's honor, burns it, in doing which he is seen by his step-mother who accuses him of trying to defraud his step-brother. Rather than reveal the truth, he surrenders his rights and when confronted by his sweetheart even lets her think him dishonest.

David leaves the house of his boyhood forever, and obtains work in a neighboring fishing town, but the worry and longing soon break down his health. He suffers a sun stroke and, feeling his end near, sends for Doris in order to bid her farewell. She comes, only to see the last spark of life fade from his body. In his hand is the crumpled note from his father. Doris reads, and then burns it—the only one to have learned the truth. She is heartbroken at her recent unbelief.

BIOGRAPH.

THE POWER OF THE CAMERA (Mar. 17).—Two convicts escape from the city jail and manage to elude their pursuers for quite awhile, by contriving a fake motion picture machine and posing as picture producers. But, like many of us, they become over confident and are finally apprehended by the guard.

A DELIVERY PACKAGE (Mar. 17).—Two men love the same girl, but, of course, as is usual in a case of this sort, one was the victor. The successful suitor on the eve of his wedding, fixes up the gilded cage in which his bird is to reside. On the way to the wedding, he meets the rejected one and with extreme braggadocio determines to further humiliate him, but this decision works like a boomerang.

NEAR TO EARTH (Mar. 20).—This is the story of Gato, an Italian emigrant, who lives with his wife, Marie, and his younger brother, Giuseppe, on a small truck farm in the West. Gato becomes so intent on his work that he neglects to show his wife the little attentions she demands. A foppish wandering Italian, Sandro, sees in this an opportunity to work his ends, but is prevented by the timely interference of Giuseppe.

FATE (Mar. 22).—Sim Sloane and his beloved son were the reprobates of the village, not what would be called lovers of peace and kindness. But granddad dwelt in a house filled more with love, and when Sim came in for his brutal sport, he soon went out assisted by granddad. Incited by ridicule and drink, Sim swore to get even. That was where granddad's new supply of powder came in. Sim appropriated it and although he wrecked the house of love, he destroyed through his venom the only thing he cherished in life.

Norton is wounded and nearly famished when he arrives at the farm of William English. He is nursed back to health and given work on the farm. English's daughter, Dorothy, is engaged to marry one of her father's employes, when she meets Wendell, now a prosperous business man. Wendell dazzles the girl with promises of great wealth and position until she consents to elope with him. Norton recognizes Wendell, learns the situation and as they are about to elope sends the girl back to her lover and, at the point of his gun, sets Wendell adrift out of the neighborhood.

DEEDEE'S BLIND MASTER (Mar. 20).—Deedee, a very intelligent fox terrier, is "general manager" of Blind Bill's newsstand. While groping his way about the street one day, Bill is struck by a motor car. Although not seriously injured Bill is taken to a hospital. The owner of the motor car, to makes amends for the injury, gives the hospital surgeons instructions to do everything they can to restore Bill's sight. A renowned surgeon is placed in charge of the case and performs a delicate operation. The operation is a success. Bill is the happiest man in the world, but Deedee does not share his happiness. The faithful dog finds that his services are no longer necessary and disappears. Bill's long search for Deedee, is rewarded by finding him attending to the wants of a cripple—an unfortunate really in need of his services.

WHEN THEY WERE KIDS (Mar. 22).—An old and long married couple look back upon the romantic days of their youth. Closing their eyes and allowing memory full sway they find themselves in a colonial setting, principals in a delightful love story in which a ragged little chap, by his courtesy wins the heart of a wealthy little lady and thus gets an opportunity to make his way in the world. The story ended, they open their eyes, smile upon each other and prove that "they lived happily ever after" by a fond embrace. Truly a delightful romance.

THE SATCHEL GAME (Mar. 20).—Hiram Hardhead, a farmer, has been corresponding with a party in New York who guarantees to make him $20,000 for $1,000 if the said Hiram will meet a designated party at the Pennsylvania Terminal in New York and bring his money. Hiram, flushed with anticipation of riches, breaks off a match between his daughter and a neighbor's son and repairs to the city. His wife has discovered the bunco correspondence and that the money saved from her economies of years has disapeared. The daughter enlists her lover to protect her father and his money if possible. The manner in which the boy does this nullifies the clever trickery used in the Satchel Game.

The bunco men are left possessed of the idea that each has cheated and deceived the other. Hiram, moaning over the possession of "tin cimbel and honest bricks," is rendered joyous again by the restoration of his money, and needless to state the youthful lovers find all obstacles removed from their path.

KATHLEEN MAVOURNEEN (Mar. 17).—The story of this three-reel subject is given in the review written by George Blaisdell, published on page 978 of our last week's issue. Exhibitors will please note this.

CHAMPION.

THE HONEYMOON LODGING (Mar. 17).—Jack and Gertrude marry. They go to New York on their honeymoon, where they take lodgings. Later, they return to Jack's farm. In a foolish lover's quarrel, Gertrude leaves him. She goes to New York and rents the room where she and Jack spent their honeymoon. She secures a position in an office. Jack is despondent, leaves his farm and goes to New York in search of his wife. He loses his wallet containing his money and has to look for work. He secures a position as night watchman of the building in which Gertrude is employed. He goes to the same lodging house and Mrs. Stubbs, the landlady, rents him the same room, he occupying it by day and Gertrude by night, without either knowing that the other is doing so. Mrs. Stubbs is thus drawing double rent for the room. One night he forgets his keys and hurries back to get them. Gertrude is in bed. Reconciliation takes place. A year later Jack buys back his farm. They invite Mrs. Stubbs to live with them and to assist in caring for the newly born twins.

NESTOR.

THE VILLAGE CHOIR (Mar. 17).—The choir practices and the quartette, driven to desperation by the frequent false notes played by the near sighted organist, complain. He leaves in a huff. The minister tells them that his daughter will be on hand next Sunday and will play for them. Mary arrives. She is introduced to the quartette who, during the week days, sow seeds and plough. The minister is writing a sermon when the deacon enters and demands the payment of the mortgage on the church. He is insistent, but promises to wait upon meeting Mary, when his heart melts at the sight of her loveliness.

On Sunday the music is faultless. It is the male portion of the quartette now at fault. Forgetfulness is the fault, caused by too close an interest in Mary.

At the close of the sermon the minister announces that a basket picnic will be given to raise the mortgage on the church. The day of the picnic arrives and the deacon soon finds that Bob is a strong favorite with Mary. He is very angry. He sees Mary tie a ribbon on her basket so that Bob shall buy it. He determines to frustrate their scheme and tells the minister that he will buy Mary's basket for he knows which one it is. Mandy, an elderly person with her eye on the deacon, changes the ribbon on Mary's basket to her own. The baskets are auctioned and Mandy's basket is put up first. The deacon buys it, much to his disgust and Bob's and Mary's enjoyment. Mary decides that her basket is not safe, so she and Bob borrow it when nobody is looking and depart for a more serene scene. The deacon is not to be denied, and having more money he outbids the boys and buys all the baskets, only to discover that Mary's is not amongst them.

The deacon departs in anger. He seeks out the minister and demands immediate payment of the mortgage. The auctioneer comes up with the necessary amount from the sale of the baskets—all supplied by the deacon himself. The church is free and the only two unhappy members are Mandy and the deacon. The rest rescue the baskets which the deacon has left and have a good time.

HER FRIEND, THE BAD MAN (Mar. 19).—Not having time to take their gold to town and knowing it would be unsafe to take it with him, John bids his wife, Mary, and their little girl, Marie, goodbye and leaves the gold with her. But he had not gone far away, before two desperadoes, Bill and Jim, who have seen Mary put the bag away, enter and ask her for food. While she is waiting on one, the other slips into her room and secures the treasure and, although Mary quickly holds them up with her rifle, they manage to get Marie between them and Mary as a shield, make their escape; but not until she has called for help and attracted the attention of a gunman, who is eluding the sheriff. Bill and Jim make off. Firing, Jim wounds Bill, who is carrying the gold and he falls from the horse. Sid takes the gold in exchange for his horse. Delighted with his bargain, he hurries on to avoid the sheriff, who takes Bill into custody and later captures Jim. Marie has run out to secure help for her mother. The child becomes confused and finally lost, so instead of reaching their neighbors, she finds herself in the desert. Sid also makes for the desert and it is the outlaw who rescues the little girl and brings her safely home. He learns that the gold belongs to Mary. At the cottage he is taken into custody by the sheriff, but John, who has just returned, declares he would use his influence to have Sid released and give him a fresh start in life.

ROSES OF REMEMBRANCE (Mar. 21).—Old Joaquin sits in the garden, gazing pensively at the grave under the rose bush. Several tourists catch the old man in a reminiscent mood and he tells them the story of the rose bush. It is as follows:

The scene is an army post headquarters. A coach arrives containing Donna Vasquez, her daughter, Giulia, and their friends, escorted by Joaquin. A wheel comes off the coach and Lieutenant Walton and his brother officers offer assistance, which is refused by the haughty Donna Vasquez. The ladies get on the horses and proceed on their journey, but Walton and Guilia have passed admiring glances and Walton has managed to possess himself of a pretty lace handkerchief in the brief interval.

Walton is captivated by Giulia's beauty. He finds an opportunity to return the handkerchief and later he is instrumental in saving her from a runaway accident. Acquaintanceship ripens into love, only interrupted by the recall of Walton. Before he leaves the lovers plant a rose bush together, he promising to return for her when the roses bloom.

Joaquin, unaware how far the friendship has gone, asks the Donna for Giulia's hand. He receives her consent, but the girl tells them her heart rode out with the American. The haughty Donna banishes the girl. Joaquin takes her to the Padre, who receives her into the mission. Then comes the waiting and the longing! Walton is killed tearing down the Confederate flag and nailing up the flag of the Union. Joaquin bears the news to Giulia. There is a thread of hope left in his heart.

Giulia tells him she will remain faithful to Walton's memory, and ever and anon they meet and care for the rose bush and now Joaquin sadly keeps his tryst alone.

THE BATTLE OF BULL RUN (Mar. 18—3 reels).—At the time the play opens the Southern army is harassing the Unionists. The Northern spy force is augmented and Grace, whose brother, Harry, is already in the secret service, joins it.

She meets Harry and together they take a coach to the Southern town they have selected to spy upon. A prominent colonel in the Southern army deals with dispatches, and it is this man that Grace investigates while Harry awaits events.

The colonel has a sweetheart, May, and Grace manages to get an introduction to her at a ball by purposely tearing her dress and appealing to May for help. This leads to an acquaintance with the Colonel, and she practices all her woman's wiles and fascinations upon him and he is impressed with her. Grace learns that important dispatches are to be forwarded and plots to get into the colonel's house. She manages matters cleverly, and contrives to have her carriage break down before his residence. The colonel endeavors to get rid of her, but she stalls him off until the arrival of May, when he has to hide her in the next room. May comes to warn him about Grace, for she is suspicious and her woman's intuition tells her that Grace is there for no good. The colonel tries to defend Grace, who gets a chance to change the dispatches for false ones, but drops a letter by mistake, and escapes by way of the window, giving the dispatches to her brother.

May sees the letter of commendation from the North. A servant has seen Harry. The colonel rides off after him. He catches up with him as they ride into the battlefield, and in a hand-to-hand duel Harry is killed by the colonel, who is himself mortally wounded by a stray bullet.

Grace returns to Washington and receives compliments and rewards. She returns to her home with a clouded conscience, and while sitting looking at her reward, the spectres of Harry and the colonel appear and beckon her. She is forced to go with them, and together they appear on the battlefield and they show her their own bodies, and slowly they fade away and their spectres enter their dead bodies.

She comes to and staggers to the stairs to get assistance. She faints and falls down the stairway and dies.

WAS SHE TO BLAME? (Mar. 20).—Jack Gorman, a laborer, and an abusive, hard drinking man, treats his more refined wife as a drudge. Mary stands it until she sees an advertisement asking for a companion to an invalid girl. She steals away and secures the position. The invalid, Nell, is sister to the Rev. Charles Spencer, and Mary is soon happy again. Jack Gorman goes to Arizona and is very badly injured in a mine explosion. He is reported dead and Mary reads an account of the fatal accident in a newspaper. She nearly faints but foolishly fails to tell her sympathetic friends the cause. Jack is taken to a Los Angeles hospital and eventually recovers.

Poor Nell goes to her Maker, and Mary prepares to leave, but Spencer loves her and tells her she must be his wife. Jack reads the notice of the marriage and calls upon the minister begging for help. Spencer gives him money and advice, and Mary sees the man she thought dead in a looking glass as he is leaving the house.

The following day Jack gains admittance to see Mary. He endeavors to be familiar, but she repels him. He demands money. Spencer returns to the house unexpectedly and overhears the demand of the man and the protests of his wife. He interferes and the truth is told. Gorman tells the minister he wants money and not the woman, and Spencer, throwing off his coat, beats the brute and sends him away.

The following day Spencer and Mary agree that there is but one thing to do. Mary must return to Jack and try to affect a reformation. Jack has climbed to the small balcony and overhears. The balcony gives way, he falls and is killed. Spencer and Mary agree to bury the past.

THE PEACEMAKER (Mar. 23).—A self-sacrificing young woman, living in a small village, can have the handsome young blacksmith for the asking. But he has to work hard for his living and although she likes him well, she cannot see her way clear to encumber him with the care of her family, for her mother is weak and ill and her little sister must have the necessary schooling to fit her for life. She, therefore, keeps on putting off the marriage.

A stranger, born in the village, having made money, returns to view the scenes of his childhood. He is recognized by an old man as he steps into the blacksmith's shop to ask where he can obtain a room and board. The blacksmith directs him to the home of his sweetheart, knowing that the addition will be welcomed by her.

There the stranger takes up his habitation, and being a man of discernment, notes the beauty of her character. He even falls quietly in love with her, but will not let her see it because he knows of the relationship with the blacksmith. She, on her side, admires this quiet man.

The little sister returns home for a holiday and is an arrant little flirt. She is disappointed at the elderly appearance of the boarder, for she had determined to try and capture him. Instead she turns to the young blacksmith and sets her cap

The Tonopah Stampede for Gold

A Great Four Reel Feature

This picture is now in course of construction at Tonopah, Nevada, and is the most thrilling melodramatic picture ever made. It shows the early days of Tonopah, the rush for gold, the strikes, and also many scenes both exterior and interior of the biggest mines in the world, including MIZPAH, BELMONT, BUCKEYE, WESTEND, TONOPAH EXTENSION, MIDWAY, HALIFAX, MERGER, ETC. This picture is the last word in moving pictures and over 500 artists are employed, the principal parts being played by Gov. TASKER L. ODDIE, present Governor of Nevada, and JIM BUTLER, the discoverer of the famous MIZPAH and BUTLER mines, and produced under the direction of CHAS. A. PRYOR, President of THE YALE FEATURE FILM CO. These pictures show the gold and silver veins in the depths of the mines fifteen hundred feet underground. See the thrilling race for claims. The Assay Office. Sensational runway down the mountainside, every minute replete with action. This shows every process the ore goes through until it is made into bars of gold and silver bullion. This is a typical Western picture, made by Western mining men, and is true to every day life. You cannot afford to miss this feature.

A full line of high colored eight, three and one sheet lithos accompany the picture, which consists of four reels of the most thrilling, sensational and educational action ever made.

for him. She is so pretty and bright that he loses his head, and although he tries to be faithful to his original love, he finds himself more and more captivated by this winsome little body.

The stranger looks on and disapproves. He determines to try and right the wrong for he has no mind to see the woman he thinks so much of suffer. He shaves his beard and deliberately puts himself in the way of the girl. She is surprised at the difference in him and thinks of the money he has and the fine time she can have. The older woman finds herself hurt at the change instead of being glad at it. She is depressed and sad. Having succeeded in attracting the girl from the blacksmith, the stranger goes to the blacksmith and has a talk with him, and the latter is ashamed and contrite. He meets the woman and tries to get upon the old footing, but she sorrowfully tells him that she can have no more to do with him—outside of friendship. The stranger does not hesitate to let the girl see he has been giving her a taste of her own medicine. She runs to the blacksmith, but he sends her away from him. He has no further use for her. The stranger, thinking his work is done and not feeling able to stay longer and see the woman's happiness with the blacksmith, tells her he is going. She is too proud to tell him she loves him and the day approaches and he bids her goodbye. He starts off with a dull heart and something in his manner bids her throw away her pride. She cannot bear to see him pass out of her life. She calls affrightedly—he turns and sees. He returns and folds her in his arms.

WHEN A WOMAN WON'T (Mar. 17).—Ed and George loved Betsy, but Betsy was a flirt. What more natural then, that Betsy should give to each a locket containing her picture and inform each of her unswerving love and devotion. But Betsy wouldn't marry a common village boy and they both set out, therefore, together to make their fortunes and win the coquettish Betsy.

Mining together, the boys accidentally came across each other's locket and there was trouble immediately. They took a few pot shots at each other by way of showing their faith in the flirtive Betsy. And, could they have been suddenly transported to their home town just then they would have seen Betsy pledging herself forever more to quite another chap.

Anyhow, a stray bullet uncovered a vein of gold. Also, it brought a natural cessation in hostilities, for gold veins are too rare to be thus ignored, even where love is concerned. So they agreed to divide the spoils of their claim and put the matter squarely before Betsy.

They returned and inquired the whereabouts of Betsy. A good-natured villager pointed her out, hanging fast to the arm of her recent husband. Beholding this sad blighting of their fondest hopes, Ed and George, who had a genuine fondness for each other, looked each other in the eye, shook hands, and decided then and there to lavish their joint wealth on two separate and distinct girls whom kind Dame Fortune, in good time, would see fit to send to them.

THE LESSON (Mar. 20).—Ed Williams and Bessie Thompson were country sweethearts. One day an automobile stopped and a handsome city man alighted, asking a drink of water. He was charmed at the sight of the fresh country beauty of Bessie, and took board with her father.

The days passed and Bessie grew to love the handsome stranger. But one day a letter came and the stranger after reading it, with a muttered exclamation slipped it into his pocket. From there it fell to the ground and Bessie picked it up. It read "My dear Herbert: Sorry to disturb your vacation, but you should be present at the Courcy reception for business reasons. Your wife, Jeanette."

Bessie, with the knowledge of this man's perfidy, found it easy to turn with more love toward the country sweetheart whom she had spurned for him.

AN EASTERN FLOWER (Mar. 22).—Harmonica Jack was not only foreman but a popular man as well. Phyllis, the ranch girl, loved him but to her Jack was merely pleasant. One day an Eastern girl came to see her friend Phyllis. The inevitable happened—Jack and the Eastern girl fell in love. Phyllis suffered cruelly in silence.

A good-for-nothing greaser also sees and desires the Eastern girl. He plans to kidnap her, but Phyllis overhears. Torn between her desire to see Jack and her friend irretrievably separated and her plain duty, Phyllis decides for the latter. She informs of the plot and the greaser is brought to justice.

THE SUITOR AND THE MONKEY (Mar. 20).—The Viscountess Ball was studying over two letters, one from the wealthy Baron and the other from Alfred, who was poor but who really loved her. It was a question of much money or much love. The pretty little lady was also troubled over another matter. Her pet monkey had died. She really felt that in either case, whether she chose the baron or whether she was to wed Alfred, she would probably be happy since one could give her what the other did not have. So she decided upon an unusual method of trying out these two men to see which could come the nearest to pleasing her, and giving her what she wanted. She gave them a task. The one who would find for her a monkey as clever as the pet she had so recently lost, would become her lord and master.

The two suitors started on the hunt for a clever monkey, and Alfred found that his wealthy rival was on the way to a dealer in trained animals, expecting with his wealth to be able to purchase what the lady fair desired. Alfred then rushed to the dealer, and after a hurried consultation seemed to be very much pleased. The baron arrived shortly after and was shown an unusually strange specimen, recently brought from Africa, a monkey which was said to be the most wonderful ever captured. Satisfied that he now could claim the beautiful viscountess as his bride, the baron had his new purchase forwarded at once to the lady's home. Upon arrival he proudly offered his gift to the viscountess, but they were both terrified a moment later when the monkey released himself from the cage and began to pursue the baron about the room. The wealthy suitor made a hurried exit while the lady fair was preparing to seek safety in another room, but the minute the baron was gone, the charming bride-to-be was greatly surprised to find the monkey at her knees telling her that she need not be frightened since it was Alfred himself and not a monster.

That settled all discussion; the baron's chances were gone and Alfred became the happy groom.

COSSACKS IN THE URAL COUNTRY (Mar. 20).—On the same reel is an unusually fine series of pictures of those wonderful horsemen, the Cossacks, who live in the southern part of Russia. These men form an important division of the Russian army, and their skill as horsemen is known over the entire world. Some of their wonderful and unusual tricks of horsemanship are shown in the picture.

EXCELSIOR.

A CADET'S HONOR (Mar. 10).—Dick passes the entrance examinations to a big military academy, and very much pleased, he calls upon his sweetheart to tell her of his good fortune. She promises to wait for him and be faithful to him. He leaves his home town, assuring Alice that he will never forget her and will return after graduation to claim her as his wife.

He enters school. In the company of his fellow students he visits different girls known as the belles of the college town. He meets Helen Jackson, the college widow, who is being "rushed" by Dale. She likes Dick and they are soon going to parties and dances together, much to Dale's disgust. Still under Helen's fascination, the boy does not write to Alice who is heartbroken at his neglect. Dale, of a jealous disposition, looks about for some way to become revenged on the chap who has taken his girl away. One of the students receives a five hundred dollar bill which he places in an envelope and leaves in his room. Dale steals this and hides it in Dick's desk. It is found there by the officer in charge of the barracks who is searching the entire building. Dick is branded as a thief and is expelled in dishonor. He goes to Helen to assure her of his innocence, but she does not believe him and refuses to have anything to do with him. Returning home, his parents comfort him and Alice forgives him and believes in his innocence. At the academy, the envelope in which the five hundred dollar bill came is found in Dale's coat and he is accused and forced to admit his guilt. He is expelled and Dick is recalled and honorably installed among his fellow students. He has learned a lesson, however, for when Helen meets him and tries to make up with him, he puts her out of his life and remains faithful to the girl who has been faithful to him.

RELIANCE.

THE REPROBATE (Mar. 12).—In an industrious, narrow-minded village, Larry is known as a reprobate because of his lazy life and the fact that he insists upon fishing on Sunday. In the poorer section of the town a starving mother pawns her wedding ring to buy food for her hungry child. The charitable ladies and the deacons visit her home and pry into her affairs. When one of them sees she wears no wedding ring, they all leave, highly indignant that they should have come in contact with such a person. The mother dies and the little girl goes out alone in the world in search of food. She enters the minister's garden where he is busy with his sermon. He cannot bother with the crying baby; he is too busy. She follows the charitable ladies but they do not even see her. But when she finds Larry, he takes her into his arms and his heart and sets a meal before her. Next Sunday he is the first at the church, and as he marches up the aisle, the ladies and minister look at him in surprise and wonder if Larry is fit to have the care of the child. The minister alone understands and bids "the reprobate" go his way, for he is a better man than any of them. And Larry goes off with the child—but not to fish—for the sweet responsibility of the baby means something to him—and he is going to train her in the way she should go.

A REGAINED REPUTATION (Mar. 15).—Mr. Beacon buys a diamond sunburst for his wife. He is followed home by Sarna, a crook, who looks through the window of the Beacon home and sees the husband giving the jewel to his wife. The Beacons go out motoring, but Mrs. Beacon forgets the pin which she leaves on her dresser. A cop, Hogan, comes to visit Mary, the cook, in her kitchen, and sitting down to enjoy a fine dinner, he removes his hat and coat. Sarna gets into the house and takes the sunburst. He is about ready to get away when the auto returns. He realizes he cannot escape without being caught, and as he is looking about for somewhere to hide, he sees the cop's hat and coat. He puts them on and going out to the front door meets Mr. and Mrs. Beacon on the steps. As they enter the house Sarna jumps into the auto and drives off at top speed. Hogan, as the master and mistress enter, looks about for his things and finds them gone. He is told of the cop on the steps and rushes out to see the machine disappearing in the cloud of dust. Hogan feels badly to think that he should have let a thief get away with a robbery almost under his nose. Seeing his motorcycle nearby gives him an idea. He will win back his reputation! Jumping on the cycle he starts in hot pursuit of the car and overpowering Sarna, he jumps into the car and clasps the handcuffs on him. The Beacons, who have followed in a friend's car which they met on the road, congratulate Hogan as he leads the prisoner off, after the sunburst has been restored to its rightful owner.

MAJESTIC.

THE BITER BITTEN (Mar. 9).—Lawrence, employed by a large banking house, receives his share in a yearly division of profits and hurries to surprise his wife. On reaching the flat he finds a note from her saying that she has gone shopping. The house is upset, but Lawrence attempts to get himself some lunch, grumbling at her absence. He has no sooner seated himself at the table when the bell rings and a C. O. D. package arrives. He pays for it, but other packages arrive and he is frantic at the extravagance. When the last one has been paid for, his money is nearly all gone and he determines to teach her a lesson. He therefore puts the bedroom in a disordered condition and leaves a note saying that her extravagance has driven him to embezzle—that detectives even now may be after him. To add more color to the plot he gets the remainder of the day off, and going to a costumer's, disguises himself as a detective and returns to the flat to frighten his wife. In the meantime, however, she has returned, found the note and rushed off to the bank to plead for mercy with the president. He comforts her but gives the note to the bank detectives who hurry after Lawrence. He is in the apartment when the officers arrive and the disguise adds to the suspicions of the detective who refuse to believe the story he tells and hurry him off to jail. The wife sees her husband being arrested and follows to the station house. He is flung into a cell and she telephones to her father who joins her in short order. The bank president has arrived and the explanation satisfies him. Suspicion is laid by word that the bank examiners have found no shortage in their annual examination completed that noon and Lawrence is released, completely cured of any desire to play practical jokes again, but having succeeded in showing his wife the danger of extravagance.

Film received this A. M. We were most anxious to see it on the screen. We took down the program at the Royal Theatre that we had for today and decided to run "As in a Looking Glass" this afternoon and evening. We have done an excellent business with it without any newspaper publicity whatever and every one that we speak to in regards to the production declare it the most wonderful and beautiful Dramatic production they have ever seen. The 3rd of last January, fifteen years ago, I started in the moving picture business, nothing over 50 foot subjects and you can imagine my feelings at sight of this "masterpiece."

and finds that she, too, has reformed and is working in a small jewelry shop. His joy at this discovery is turned to sorrow upon learning that she is to marry her employer, but he bravely gives her up. Chappie's old gang is still operating in defiance of the police, and the chief of detectives decides to make Chappie go back to his old associates, win their confidence and betray them. When Chappie refuses to do this, the police begin a series of persecutions that will force him to do their bidding. He is hounded about; they won't let him hold any job, "put his landlord wise" and keep him moving, and refuses to allow him on the streets at night. Unable to get work, penniless, hopeless and homeless, his condition grows desperate. Then the shop where "The Fairy" works is robbed. Without searching for any clues they arrest Chappie. He stoutly asserts his innocence even through a brutal "sweating," but when they find a photo of the "Fairy" in his pocket, they threaten to arrest her as his accomplice. He, although innocent, agrees to confess to the crime if they will not molest her. The jeweler going to headquarters accidentally sees the photo and learns of "The Fairy's" past life. Returning to the shop, he bitterly denounces her and refuses to have anything more to do with her. In the meantime, a wealthy Mr. Brown discovers that his chauffeur is the thief and has him arrested. The thief confesses and clears Chappie and in the presence of all the interested parties the story is unfolded. Brown sympathizes with Chappie, offers him employment and dares the police to persecute him further. And "The Fairy," ignoring the now repentant jeweler, with a heart full of love and gratitude, gives herself to the faithful Chappie.

KEYSTONE.

THE SLEUTHS AT THE FLORAL PARADE (Mar. 6).—Advantage was taken of the fact that a floral parade was being held at Pasadena, Cal., in which the Keystone car was entered and won second prize, to produce a comedy film around the incident. Fred Mace and Mabel Normand are invited to take part in the parade, and Mack Sennett plans to keep her away and take her place. Accordingly Mabel is locked up in her dressing room, but she escapes after considerable difficulty. She rushes to the line of march and makes frantic and amusing efforts to catch the Keystone automobile, while the two sleuths attempt to dodge her. Mabel gets into difficulties with the police who are endeavoring to maintain order, and is championed by Ford Sterling, who is among the spectators. She finally gains her rightful place in the auto.

A RURAL THIRD DEGREE (Mar. 6).—Si marries a guileless country maid, and receives among his wedding presents a bottle of liquor. The bride samples it in Si's absence, and being unaccustomed to drink, is overcome and falls on the table in a stupor. Si discovers her just as a party of neighbors are coming to congratulate the young couple, and hides her in the yard, laying her on a bench. An inquisitive visitor finds her and reports to the constables that Si has killed his wife, and he is apprehended. The rustic sleuths emulate the stories they have heard of famous detectives, and put Si through the third degree, bringing about screaming situations. As a last resort they blindfold Si and bring in the "body" of the dead woman. In a melodramatic scene the bandage is removed from Si's eyes, and at that moment the "corpse" comes to life.

SINS OF THE FATHER (2 reels—Mar. 12).—Bill Hines, a famous cracksman, lives with his daughter whom he compels to assist him, disguised as a boy. Mary is a sweet, gentle girl who abhors the life her father leads, but is dominated by him. A detective shadowing Hines sees him loitering around a bank, and suspecting that Bill has designs upon it lays a trap for him. That night when Bill effects an entrance he meets a warm reception from the squad of detectives lying in wait for him, and is captured after a desperate struggle. Mary escapes, pursued by the officer, and makes her way to the top of a building, thence onto the roof of an adjoining house. Nearly fainting with fear, she raises the skylight and enters, dropping into a room in which a good priest is praying. The priest is startled, but will not listen to her pleadings to help her escape. In desperation she pulls off her cap, permitting her long hair to fall over her shoulders, and the priest is thunderstruck to discover she is a girl. His sympathies are aroused, and when the pursuing detective arives the priest secretes her in the room and saves her from capture.

Mary tells him the sad story of her life, and the priest determines to aid her, sending her to Father Pizzato, at Rockridge, Ariz. She joins a band of emigrants, who are attacked by Indians, and a sensational battle ensues. The emigrants are saved from destruction by the timely arrival of a troop of cavalry who rout the redskins. Lieutenant Colt meets Mary, and sees her safely to Father Pizzato's mission.

Bill Hines receives a heavy sentence, and is put at hard labor. One day he makes a dash for liberty, and though fired on he manages to escape. Hungry, penniless and hunted, he joins the army and is sent to a distant post. Three months later, Mary attends a military ball, escorted by Lieut. Colt, and meets her father. He tries to force her to go away with him, and she confides in the priest, who advises her to stand firm. The next afternoon the pay for the fort arrives and Bill determines to steal it. He attempts to secure the assistance of Mary, and that night she hears him at work and tries to prevent the robbery. She surprises Bill, but he throws her to the floor, and grasping the money bags tries to escape. Lieut. Colt sees him at the window and fires, and Bill falls back in the room—dead. People rush into the room, and Mary is plunged in sorrow, fearing that exposure is inevitable, and that Lieut. Colt will cease to love her, but he leads her gently outside and tells her that Father Pizzato has told him her story, and the only thing that matters is their love. The picture closes with the kindly priest placing her hand in that of Lieut. Colt in an affecting scene.

KAY-BEE.

THE SERGEANT'S SECRET (2 reels—Mar. 14).—Lieut. Jim Brice is the wayward son of the Colonel. Troubled over his boy's conduct, the Colonel requests Sergt. O'Grady to keep an eye on him. Jim frequents a gambling house kept by a Spaniard named Gomez, and one night loses heavily, being finally compelled to give Gomez his I. O. U. for $1,000. Upon his return home, Jim, in a tipsy condition is seriously upbraided by his father, who threatens to disown him in a highly dramatic scene. Jim has been carrying on a clandestine courtship of a pretty Indian maid, Winona, and he promises to elope with her and build a home away in the wilderness. Gomez takes advantage of the desperate financial situation of Jim, and demands payment of his I. O. U., agreeing, however, to cancel the indebtedness if Jim will tip him off when the payroll money for the fort will arrive. Jim gives him this information, and Gomez and his band waylay the stage dressed as Indians, and massacre the escort. When Jim learns of this he is stricken with remorse, but dare not reveal his knowledge, for fearof implicating himself. The Indians are believed to have been the guilty parties, and with a strong guard of soldiers the Colonel calls at the Indian camp and demands that the Indians deliver to him the guilty parties, telling them that if the culprits are not given up within twenty-four hours they must suffer the consequences. At the scene of the battle, Sergt. O'Grady finds a cuff link and suspects that white men have done the deed. He says nothing, but does some clever detective work. In the saloon Gomez is playing cards, and O'Grady gives the cuff link to the porter and tells him to let on that he has just picked it off the floor. Gomez claims the button, exhibiting the mate as evidence of ownership. Jim has been distracted, and takes a drink. His sister sees him enter the saloon and sends O'Grady in after him. When Jim comes out his sister puts her arms around him and tries to make him come home. Winona sees Jim's sister and thinks her a rival, and her heart is filled with jealousy. Jim decides to call at the robbers' hiding place and demand that they return the money. Winona follows him, stealthily, and sees the gang. Fearing for her people, and burning with a desire for revenge, she tells the chief where the money and the thieves are. He decides to capture them, and save himself and his people from the unjust wrath of the soldiers, and starts out with a large company of braves in war paint. O'Grady has also trailed Gomez to his hiding place, and rushes to the fort for assistance just as word reaches the Colonel that the Indians are on the war path. The Colonel immediately starts out to intercept the Indians, leaving word for his son to accompany O'Grady and capture the bandits. In the hut Jim has met with surly resistance to his demands, and he is finally knocked down and bound. The Indians attack the hut, and Gomez releases Jim and permits him to defend himself from the redskins. The Colonel reaches the village and is informed of the object of the Indians, and gallops toward the hut. O'Grady, at the head of his men, drives off the Indians and breaks in the door of the hut, in which the bandits have been all killed and Jim is mortally wounded. As the Colonel reaches the scene with his soldiers, O'Grady tells him Jim died fighting the bandits, keeping from the father the real story of his son's disgrace. Jim is buried with all military honors, and the old sergeant watches the funeral procession with a grim look on his face, resolved to guard his secret.

FRITZ AND OSCAR OUT OF LUCK (Mar. 15).—This is a humorous little tale of two portly comedians who find themselves "down and out" in an obscure village far away from the scenes of their earlier triumphs. They have reached the end of their financial resources and decide, after much furious thinking that something desperate must be resorted to if they are to eat and get back to the Rialto. They engage a large hall, after impressing the landlord with their supposed fame and hang a curtain across the center of the room. Then they cause to be advertised an announcement that two of the world's most famous comedians will appear and that as a matter of courtesy, Madame Bernhardt will consent to supply a classical dance. The entire village turns out to enjoy the advertised treat and standing room is at a premium. At one of the hall, divided by the curtain, Fritz takes the money from the expectant amusement seekers and at the other end, Oscar performs a like service. When the hall has been filled to capacity on either side of the curtain, the two scheming comedians depart silently and swiftly. Time passes, and the audiences, for there are two, become impatient. Hand clapping and whistling are heard on one side of the curtain and this is repeated on the other side. Finally the audiences become suspicious and the curtain is pulled aside. When the trick is discovered the two audiences join issues and with a cry of rage the villagers scour the countryside in search of the scheming comedians. They are overtaken after an exciting and comical chase and what happens to Fritz and Oscar must be seen to be fully appreciated.

THE SCULPTOR'S STRATAGEM (Mar. 6).—Preston Parr, sculptor by inclination, goes for a dip in the ocean. While he is dipping he sees a maiden fair. He follows her to the hotel. She is the daughter of Hector David, an art critic.

Mr. David has high ambitions for his daughter and that it would have been folly, for a humble sculptor to mention his ambitions to become a son-in-law. Therefore, on the grounds of art only, Parr invites David to visit his studio. The critic has severe tastes and he doesn't wax enthusiastic over the clay of the young sculptor.

Parr takes one of his statues and goes down to the sea, where he buries it, covering it with seaweed. He leaves part projecting. He suggests to the critic and his daughter that they go fishing. Parr adroitly steers the critic into the place where he will find the buried "treasure." The critic is highly delighted. He believes it to be an ancient piece of art long buried.

He heralds his discovery in the newspapers. He offers it for sale. There gather many collectors. David describes the statue as being mentioned by Cæsar in his account of the naval fight won against the Britons.

This antiquity raises interest to the extent that one bidder offers $10,000. David looks indignantly at the man who would offer such an insignificant sum. In great fear and trembling lest his bid be accepted, Parr, who probably owned as much as thirty cents at one time, says reverently, "I double the bid. Surely this work of infallible art is worth it." Another man bid $30,000. It is sold to him.

Parr then decides that a confession would be in good order.

When the critic arrives at the studio the following day there is an exact duplicate of the statue that had been found on the seashore and had just been sold. Parr brings them forward and discloses the two missing arms of the other statue. "I'll give these two arms for your daughter's hand," said he to the amazed art critic. "If you don't agree, I will tell all to the world." "Then I would have to return the antique friend's money," moans the art critic. The latter sees that he is in a bad predicament. If he refuses Parr will tell the world that Hector David, art critic, has been hoaxed, and that he doesn't know more about statues and sculpturing than does an entry clerk in a sausage factory. David sees the joke and gives his blessing.

morrow I shall be at your old shooting lodge, Louvray, at four o'clock. Until then we must not be seen together. Agnes Lorrimer." Mrs. Darrell seals the letter and puts it where she knows her husband will find it. She then writes to Mr. Lorrimer, who has gone away, telling him that his wife has the tryst appointment at the Louvray Lodge. Mr. Darrell and Mrs. Lorrimer meet at the Lodge. Suddenly the door is opened. Mrs. Darrell confronts them.

Mr. Lorrimer has received the anonymous letter. Enraged at the possibility of his wife's unfaithfulness, he hastens to the Darrell home. Mrs. Lorrimer is out. He takes a revolver and hurriedly goes out. Mrs. Darrell is accusing Mrs. Lorrimer and Mr. Darrell of their shame when the outraged wife sees Mr. Lorrimer dash up on his horse. Mrs. Darrell now regrets the move which will bring dire trouble to her husband. Accordingly, to save him she has to save Mrs. Lorrimer.

She pushes Mrs. Lorrimer into an adjoining room. When Lorrimer rushes in, revolver in hand, there is only Mr. and Mrs. Darrell to receive him. He is quick to see, however, that all is not right. He senses the "double cross." The door, unfortunately, had not been altogether closed. He hears his wife move within. He dashes aside the door and, grasping the culprit by the hand, jerks her into the room where the Lorrimers wait. In spite of the suspicious circumstances it might never had become known to Lorrimer had not his glance fell upon the table. Here, where it had been carelessly laid down, was another note to Darrell. It read: "My dear Friend: It would be a crime for you to ruin your wife's happiness. Also for me to break the heart of my husband. I will find an excuse for leaving your house tonight. Agnes."

There is an exchange of glances, a little anguish mixed with relief, and all four go out into the world to attain the conclusion which every spectator may draw for himself.

THANHOUSER.

AN HONEST YOUNG MAN (Mar. 9).—Two magnates of Wall Street who had had many dealings with each other, met at a summer resort. One was accompanied by his daughter, and the other by his son, and each parent boasted of the good qualities of his offspring. One man told of his boy's business ability, the other of his girl's beauty and accomplishments. Day by day they increased their boasts until finally the statement was made that the son "was so honest he wouldn't rob a blind man." For the first time a statement was questioned, for the father of the girl, blase after so many years on the stock exchange, could not conceive that such a man existed. The boy's father was confident of his heir's fidelity and willingly agreed that the matter should be tested. The father disguised himself as a blind man, mutely appealing for charity with a tin cup, and in that cup he displayed a $500 bill which was to test the youth's honesty. The other broker gave warning when the son approached and from a place of hiding watched to see how the experiment turned out. A moment later the father's head was bowed in shame, for his son took the bill.

The other broker jibed and jeered at the unhappy parent, but consented to delay judgment until the young man returned, the boy's father being convinced he would purge himself of evil. It turned out as he had expected. Some hours later the youth came rushing back, trembling with emotion, restored the $500 bill and in addition poured into the cup his own money and jewels.

"It was conscience," said the happy father.

"I can't understand it," mused the other broker, but convinced against his will, he brought his daughter forward to give her the pleasure of meeting an honest man, one who had learned the ways of virtue in Wall Street.

There was another story, but the young man never told it. It involved a series of astonishing misfortunes and when he saw that his hoodoo was working overtime he tried to appease it and did.

For, as said before, he was an honest young man from Wall Street.

JUST A SHABBY DOLL (Mar. 11).—The little girl tripped into the library one evening "to kiss papa good night." She found him with a doll in his hands, a shabby disreputable toy, which had never been of any great intrinsic value. It puzzled the little girl and she asked questions. The father was in a reminiscent mood that evening, so he took his little daughter on his knee, and told her the wonderful history of the shabby doll.

It seems that years before a friendless little newsboy met a little girl who was beautiful and kind and rich. The boy was able to do some favors for the little girl, and she was so kindly in her appreciation of them that the boy decided nothing was too good for her. Therefore at Christmas time he wasted an extraordinary amount of money, he thinks now it was twenty cents, in the purchase of a doll, which seemed to him to be a thing of beauty.

Well, the years passed, and the ragged newsboy grew up to be a fine, manly youth, while the little girl developed into a beautiful woman. They loved each other, but the girl's father pointed out that the young man did not have sufficient funds to support the girl in the station of life to which she was accustomed. The young man went west to make a fortune, and at first had many trials and suffered long from illness. When he made the fortune and came east with it the girl he loved had disappeared. He learned that her father had lost all his money, and that the girl had wandered out into the world to earn her own living, but he did not know where she was. Then one day while a guest at a house party, a child displayed the doll she had taken from the trunk of her governess, and the governess came in to reclaim it, and the boy recognized the girl he had sought and every one rejoiced and the marriage bells rang soon afterwards.

The little girl who heard the story rejoiced when she found that her parents were the principals in it, and vowed she would cherish "the shabby doll" as long as she lived.

THE IDOL OF THE HOUR (Mar. 14).—The young artist had searched Paris for a suitable model to pose as a shepherdess in a new picture which he hoped would win him fame. But none of the models pleased him, and at last, feeling that he could not do justice to the picture, he decided to postpone his work and take a walking trip through France.

In a little hamlet far removed from the cities, the artist found the model for his picture, a beautiful peasant girl, tending her sheep on the hillside. He tried to induce her to return with him to Paris, but she demurred, and he went back to Paris alone. But the girl thought often of the stories he had told her of the wonders of the French capital, and the simple country life palled upon her, until one day she left her country home forever and journeyed to the great city. The artist received her joyfully. She was a great success as a model, and the painting made the artist famous.

As time passed, the liking that the girl had for the artist grew into love; but it was not reciprocated, for to the man, she was merely a beautiful model. The model was the idol of Paris, but although many of her admirers were far richer than the artist she cared only for him. The artist gave his love to another woman and married her.

When models cease to be young, they are no longer in demand, and this the former shepherdess learned all too soon. Slowly she sank in the social scale until at last she was glad to earn her living as a cleaner in office buildings.

One day the woman, now old, was sent into a studio building to scrub the floors. She entered a studio and commenced her work. A man sitting at an easel, painting, turned as she entered, then seeing that it was only the scrubwoman, continued his work. But the woman stood aghast, her heart struggling with conflicting emotions. For the artist was the man whose reputation she had made, and whom she had loved in the years gone by. Her heart filled with yearning, she stretched out her arms to him as he sat, busily working at his painting; then as a realization of her position came to her, she picked up mop and pail and staggered out of the studio and his life forever.

SOLAX.

IN THE WRONG FLAT (Mar. 19).—While Violet is away from home, her husband, the Rev. John Smith, gets tired of boarding and takes up housekeeping. It so happens that Rev. Smith rents rooms in the same house in which lives a Mr. Jack Smith and his wife, Nora, and this causes much trouble. Violet Smith comes home from the country, goes into the wrong flat, and no one being home, makes herself comfortable. Later, she hears someone moving in the next room, thinks it is her husband and kisses the wrong man. Jack Smith and his friend, Harry Rogers, who is visiting him, upon finding out that there is a strange woman present, plan to get rid of her and while doing so, in walks Nora, Jack's wife. This starts a whole lot of excitement, in which Jack Smith tries to keep his wife, Nora, from going into the room where Rev. Smith's wife, Violet is, and Harry tries to stop laughing. This is rather a compromising situation for both. After much trouble and many funny incidents, Violet's husband, the Rev. John Smith, hears the noise, goes down to see what the trouble is, finds his wife in the other man's flat, and after more trouble and excitement, comes explanations which ends by the Rev. Smith taking Violet in his arms.

THE WAY OF THE TRANSGRESSOR (Mar. 21).—Margaret Summers is married to Philip Summers, a mean-spirited adventurer who skates dangerously on the edge of the law. He ill-treats her and makes her thoroughly miserable. Finally he gets into trouble with the police and returning home packs up some things in a bag, takes Margaret's earrings from her, strikes her and deserts her.

Forced to do something to earn her living, she obtains a position in the office of Gerald Pribyl as a stenographer. Pribyl becomes interested in he and eventually seems about to propose marriage to her. She learns of the death of Summers and then, when Pribyl does propose marriage, she feels free to accept him. They are married.

One evening Pribyl is forced to leave on a business trip, and bids his wife and child farewell. A strange man has been seen hanging about the house. When Pribyl has gone a burglar makes his way into the library where the safe is kept behind a screen and proceeds to open it. Margaret hears a ring at the bell and goes to the door. Summers walks in calmly and makes himself at home. Margaret is horrified at the situation.

Summers makes his statement brief. He wants money, and a lot of it. If he doesn't get it he proposes to wait until Pribyl returns, and explain the situation to him. Margaret is desperate. Summers proceeds to establish himself to wait, and starts for a table on which are a decanter and glasses. The burglar believes he is discovered and in a panic springs from his concealment and shoots Summers dead. Margaret is horrified, but suddenly sees that her problem is solved. She picks up the burglar's weapon when he has fled and on the arrival of her husband allows him to think that Summers was a burglar and that she shot him. The police are notified and remove the body.

PILOT.

LINCOLN FOR THE DEFENSE (Mar. 13).—This picture play illustrates an episode in President Lincoln's life prior to his election for Congress. It is historically accurate in every particular. It is the day before his final address to the electors and his success depends upon his final speech, which he has positively promised his political managers to make. A letter arrives from a poor mother whose boy is to be tried for murder, and she begs Lincoln to apear in his defense and save her child. Despite the protestations of his political managers, he determines to chance losing the election, in order to save the child. He tramps to the little courthouse, and in an impassionate plea to the jury tells them how this woman befriended him when he was a poor boy, and how he had held the accused in his arms as a baby, and by appealing forcibly to their paternal feelings, he succeeds in having a verdict brought in of not guilty.

KINEMACOLOR

VENICE, CALIFORNIA.—Kinemacolor proves that it is not necessary to take a long sea voyage in order to see "A City of the Sea," for there is a veritable Venice on the southern coast of our own California. Although not so old, of course, and constructed on a smaller, more modern scale, this American Venice has plenty of room to grow without encroaching on the sea, and in its miniature way is just as picturesque, if not as dirty, as the ancient city on the Adriatic. Neither is it necessary to sail to the Hawaiian Islands in order to see the celebrated sport of surf board riding, for Venice boasts a number of natives and visitors who are expert as the original Kanakas. It is an impressive sight to see these bold swimmers riding the Pacific rollers while standing upright on a board, but it is a ticklish trick as well, and Old Neptune's untamed seahorses frequently give their riders a spill, which adds to the comedy effect. This film concludes with the remarkable performance of a cowgirl lasso expert, who dons a brown velveteen coat while keeping the riata constantly circling in a ring around her.

NIAGARA FALLS.—The Niagara River extends between Lakes Erie and Ontario, having a descent of 326 feet throughout its course of 36 miles. The Falls, preceded and succeeded by rapids, are the largest in the world. The Canadian or Horseshoe Fall, is 6240 feet wide, with a descent of 158 feet, and the American Fall is one-third the width of the Canadian, with a descent of over 162 feet.

Some wonderful effects are obtained in the film which gives extraordinarily beautiful views of the clouds of spray and of the sun shining through the mist, giving rainbow effects. We see the Clifton House Hotel on the Canadian side; the Canadian-American Bridge and the famous steamer, "Maid of the Mist," going towards the base of the Falls, just above the Cave of the Winds; below the American Falls—a rising panorama; the view from Goat Island—a rainbow effect is clearly discernible here; the Horseshoe Falls; the American Falls—close view. Same from below. Crossing the rapids by the bridge of Sister Island; the bend of the Horseshoe Falls seen from above; Lookout Point, from which visitors observe the Horseshoe Falls; the American Falls—the two Falls from the Suspension Bridge—the American Falls are the nearer and the Horseshoe may be observed some distance beyond; at the foot of the Canadian Falls; the American Falls from the Canadian shore. This view gives a clear idea of the breadth of the Niagara Falls—the distance here is nearly a mile across. The "Maid of the Mist" proceeding towards the Falls and returning.

A SCRAP OF PAPER (2-reels).—It tells the story of a foolish letter, written by a young girl, Louise, to her young lover, Prosper, hidden in their post-office—a statue.

Three years later the girl returns, the wife of Baron Ravel. The lover also returns, and both try to get prosession of the letter in the statue, their efforts producing many comedy situations. A mischievous cousin, Suzanne, sees them, and interferes just as Prosper succeeds in lifting the statue. The letter falls to the floor. Dinner is announced. Suzanne remains with Prosper and begs for the letter. He refuses; she wagers she will get the letter and make him burn it before her eyes. He accepts.

The search takes place in Prosper's rooms, to which he conducts Suzanne, and laughingly goes out. In possible and impossible places she searches finally finding it in an old envelope in a tobacco jar. Meanwhile Louise, growing impatient, takes a handsome shawl and comes to Prosper's rooms. The Baron, recognizing the shawl, follows. Louise is hidden, but she leaves the shawl. Suzanne claims to have worn it and the Baron leaves, Louise going home by another way.

Suzanne destroys all matches, twists the letter up and throws it on the hearth. When Prosper returns she pretends to be asleep. On awakening she asks for a cigarette. Prosper, finding no matches, lights the twisted letter in the fireplace and then throws it out the window. The scrap of paper is picked up by the Baron, an old naturalist receives it from him and wraps a beetle in it.

Suzanne and Prosper, alarmed, make a desperate hunt for the scrap of paper. They enter the drawing-room just as the Baron is about to read it. Suzanne quickly claims it as hers, Prosper declaring he wrote it. Taking a candle from the table, Suzanne begs Prosper to burn it, he refusing unless she will marry him. The scrap of paper is burned and four people made happy.

THE ENCHANTED LEG.—A grouchy old Dutchman, Hans, has two daughters, whom he treats abominably. From morning till night it is nothing but cross words and frowns. Hans also has a wooden leg, with which he kicks all who cross his will. The oldest daughter, Gretchen, has a lover, Fritz, but Hans wants her to marry an old skinflint, Peter, by name. Fritz is forbidden to come to the house, and despite the appeals of Gretchen, Hans sets the day for her to marry Peter. The younger daughter is crying in the yard, when a fairy appears to her. On learning the cause of those tears, the fairy throws a spell of enchantment over that wooden leg of Hans.

From now on laugh follows laugh. Hans tries to kick, but the leg will not obey him. Peter informs Hans that Gretchen has gone to the church to marry Fritz. Thither comes Hans, but at the church the leg will not let him enter, instead it whirls him about in circles. The young folks hasten home after the wedding frightened, but willing to face the consequences. The leg rushes Hans home, makes him go to the closet and get out his choicest viands for the wedding feast.

When Hans is fully punished, and acknowledges the error of his ways, the fairy removes the enchantment, and on the arrival of old Peter, the leg kicks him out the door. Her mission over the fairy vanishes, leaving a united family around the table.

UNION FEATURES.

THE MIRAGE.—Arlette, the daughter of an old music master, possessed a wonderful voice. Although simple and untrained in the ways of the world, she was fortunate enough to secure a position with a famous Parisian Opera Company.

Then she felt that indeed her dreams of a wonderful success had come true. But in this same organization was Gaby Dablys, who became extremely jealous of Arlette on account of her meteoric success. Her jealousy prompted thoughts of vengeance.

One night, just before Arlette's first entrance, she induced her to partake of some wine, which she had previously drugged. Overcome by the powerful narcotic, Arlette made a miserable failure.

The chagrin and disgrace of it all caused the poor girl to lose her reason. In this pitiful condition she was brought back to her father's house.

The revenge of Gaby was short lived. Slowly but surely remorse overtook her. At last, unable to stand the lashings of her conscience, she went to the home of Arlette to endeavor to alleviate the suffering she had caused.

For weeks and weeks she cared for her, watching and waiting for a flash of reason in those staring and vacant eyes, but to no avail.

One day, while seated at the piano, Gaby unconsciously wandered into the old familiar role of Arlette. Slowly the haunting melody called back her fleeting reason. Her first rational thought was one of revenge, but Gaby pleaded so hard for forgiveness, that Arlette was touched with pity. Extending her arms to the thoroughly repentant Gaby, all is forgotten.

THE IRON MASTER.—When Gerval, the Iron Master, refused to sell out to the Steel Trust, Durville, the agent of the monopoly, planned to ruin him.

In the firm of Gerval was one restless and evil spirit, Bertrand, by name, who listened to the counsels of Durville and immediately set about to stir up discord and strife among the workmen, which would eventually end in a strike. His actions caused his discharge by Hubert, the superintendent, a tried and true friend of Gerval.

The men, angered by the dismissal of Bertrand, demanded the resignation of Hubert on threat of a strike. Rather than have this occur, Hubert wanted to forfeit his position, but Gerval refused to accept this sacrifice and dumbfounded Hubert by asserting in the presence of the workmen that he—Hubert, was the owner, and himself, Gerval, the superintendent.

That afternoon the strikers attacked Gerval's home. In the rioting, Germain, the daughter of Gerval, was injured by a rock hurled by Bertrand.

This sobered the men, as the girl was a great favorite with them, and Durville, overcome by shame and remorse, ceased the presecution of Gerval, and the strike was ended.

Germain soon recovered, and shortly there was a wedding. Hubert, the new Iron Master, was now very near to his old employer Gerval—he was his son-in-law—the husband of Germain, and so Gerval insisted that he continue in charge of the works.

AMBROSIO.

MARITZA (2 reels—Mar. 8).—In the harem of Mohammed Pasha, one of the most influential of the young Turks, Maritza, a young and beautiful Christian girl from Macedonia, is held captive.

One day, by chance, she sees Captain Nicholas Joutcheff of the Bulgarian Legation, who has been sent to deliver into the Pasha's hands a diplomatic protest concerning the freedom of Macedonia. Admiration between these two young people soon ripens into love. A secret meeting is arranged in which they plight their troth. War is declared and Joutcheff leaves Constantinople to join his regiment. Maritza also leaves the capitol, and, as a nurse, cares for the wounded Turkish soldiers.

During an encounter Joutcheff is captured and taken prisoner by Mohammed Pasha, who offers him his liberty if he will reveal the secrets of the Bulgarian position. This he promptly refuses to do, and is ordered by the Pasha to be shot at sunrise.

Maritza, hearing of the fate of her lover, though filled with grief, immediately devises a plan to liberate him. As she has now become head nurse, and having won the Pasha's favor by her sweet smile and acquiescence to his caresses, she has little trouble in obtaining the use of his motor car on the pretense of carrying supplies from the strong room to the hospital. From the strong room she then takes enough gold to bribe the soldier who is guarding her lover. After some hesitation the guard is persuaded to accept the gold and extract the cartridges that are to be used at the execution of Joutcheff. He also delivers the message in which Maritza informs Joutcheff of her plan.

Joutcheff plays his part so cleverly falling at the first volley, that the soldiers thinking him dead leave him. Maritza quickly joins him and jumping into the Pasha's car, they soon leave the city behind. All goes well until the car is damaged beyond repair and they are compelled to complete the journey on foot. Suddenly they are confronted by a body of Turkish soldiers who have been sent to capture them and seeing that their escape was cut off and their ruse discovered, they decide to fight until the end rather than surrender, as there is still a hope of escape, for they are near the Bulgarian outposts.

Snatching a gun from a dead soldier, Joutcheff opens fire on his pursuers and continues to shoot until he is wounded. Maritza taking the gun from him uses their last cartridge when in the distance she sees the Bulgarian troops approaching. She runs forward but the troops have arrived too late. On her return she finds her lover dead, and at the same time she receives a fatal wound and dies on her lover's breast.

THE CRITIC (2 reels—Mar. 15).—Henry Roberts, a theatrical critic on the Daily Record, one of the largest and most influential newspapers in the country, is a man wholly without principle, using the power his position gives him to further his own interest.

One of the persons powerless to combat with his influence, is Helene, a beautiful actress entering upon her career, and whose ambition causes her to endure his attention, she being aware that he can ruin her career if he so wishes.

While attending a reception one evening, she meets Oscar Payne, a rising young poet of great promise, but who is of a reticent disposition and tries to avoid public attention. He is asked to read some of his poems, but consents only at the request of his mother, whom he idolizes and the persuasion of his old teacher, Louis Miles. This gentleman had once been a great dramatist, but at the present time in so greatly reduced circumstances, that he is forced to appeal to Roberts, the critic for financial aid, which is promptly refused.

Roberts' jealousy being aroused by the rising fame of the young poet and his attentions to the actress, makes frequent and unjust attacks on the character and poems of his rival, through his influence in the press. The crisis is reached when both men meet at Helene's apartment and a violent quarrel is avoided only by the promise of the young girl to give her hand to the one writing the best comedy, she being confident that Payne will be successful.

Payne soon finishes his comedy and, with the assistance of Helene, is enabled to read it for approval to the editors of the paper on which Roberts is critic. The play is highly commended.

Roberts, however, is unable even to start his comedy and as a last resort, seeks the aid of the old dramatist. Ignorant of the fact that Louis Miles is Payne's old teacher and friend, he asks him to write his comedy for him. This the dramatist refuses to do and immediately informs Payne of the plot.

The information is received at a most opportune time, as the now thoroughly enraged Roberts has determined to ruin the careers of both young people. They, however, devise a plan whereby they hope to outwit their persecutor and win success for themselves. Louis Miles gives the unsuspecting critic the comedy Payne has written, but which he, Roberts, thinks was written for himself.

Thus the comedy is produced and is a great success. Roberts appears before the curtain in answer to the call for "Author" and is accepting all the applause. Suddenly Louis Miles jumps on the stage and publicly denounces his deception. Roberts is hissed off, and Payne, the real author, receives great ovation. The last fall of the curtain discloses the actress and the poet in a fond embrace.

MONOPOL.

AS IN A LOOKING GLASS (3 reels).—Mrs. Despard, a butterfly of society, finding herself widowed and without means, sends her little daughter Lena, to live with fisher folk in a seacoast town, while she seeks ways and means to continue the life of luxury and ease she has become accustomed to. With the aid of a young adventuress, she conducts a gambling house for the sons of the wealthy, and prosperity smiles upon her until her partner after a severe quarrel leaves her. Unfortunately, the partner, young and attractive, starts a rival gambling house and the scions of the wealthy soon become conspicuous by their absence. Desperate, the widow seeks other means of attracting the men, and lighting upon a letter and photograph of her daughter, decides upon bringing her to the city and make her the magnet that will draw the trade to the gambling tables.

Upon her arrival at the seacoast town she first realizes that her daughter is far more beautiful than she had anticipated, and comes to the conclusion that with her innocent, unsophisticated ways, she will indeed prove an attraction for her gambling house. In spite of the girl's announcement that she loves one of the men in the village, the mother brings her to the city and to her home. Her hopes are more than realized. When her former clients hear of the new beauty they flock to their old rendezvous. Baron von Bulow, one of the habitues, falls in love with Lena, and offers the mother $50,000 if she will arrange for a marriage between them. The love of money overcomes all maternal instincts, and the mother, by professing that ruin stares her in the face, and that she will commit suicide unless Lena marries the wealthy baron, finally achieves the desired result.

A year passes; the Baron becomes tired of his new toy, and soon his home becomes the meeting place of questionable companions whose bacchanalian feasts last till the early morning hours. During one of these parties, the Baron insists that his wife mingle with his guests, and upon her refusal, tells her of the shameful barter, when he bought her body and soul from her mother. Frenzied almost to insanity, Lena rushes to her mother for a denial, and to her horror learns that the Baron's statement was only too true. Lena in an insane frenzy attacks her mother, and returns to her husband's home, vowing to make the world pay for her suffering. She soon becomes the gayest one at her husband's gay parties, and by pretending infatuation for a jockey, one of her husband's friends, she wins sufficient money to get a divorce and become independent.

In her life thereafter, she becomes a social juggernaut, and all who come in her path, cast themselves before her and are crushed. Her influence in turn ruins a popular stage idol, a banker, a leader in society, and an officer in the army. She opens a gaming resort in partnership with an officer of the army, and soon the sons of the wealthy flock about as moths. Prosperity obtained, she seeks new fields to conquer, and is herself conquered by Cupid's dart. She learns that the man she loves, Algy Balfour, is engaged, and with the aid of her confederates the engagement is broken, leaving Algy free to fall an easy victim to her charms. She explains to her partner that Algy will make a splendid victim to pluck, and thus satisfies him as to her absence from the gaming tables.

Love finally conquers. Lena marries Algy and severs all connection with her former associates, and tries to be what nature had ordained her for, a good and loving wife. Her happiness, however, is short lived. Her former partner finds her and threatens to expose her to her husband. Again and again she silences him with bribes, until the demands become too frequent and she cannot meet them. Horror and fear of exposure, and conscience-stricken by her past, she ultimately ends her life. Her last words are to her husband—an assurance of love that will last into the hereafter.

CAUTION

ALL persons are warned against unauthorized use of Great Northern Features, all of which are protected by United States Copyright, and any infringement of which will be vigorously prosecuted. We have made ample provision for the distribution of our films through authorized sources, and no exhibitor need resort to dealings with underhand or pirating exchanges to procure our goods. As an example of this, we would cite our picture, "LOST MEMORY," the exclusive rights to which, for the Western District of Pennsylvania, are now the exclusive property of The Liberty Film Renting Co. of 105 Fourth Ave., Pittsburgh. Any exhibitor in that territory may book this picture by applying to the exchange mentioned. We were informed that a spurious copy, entitled, "STRUCK BY LIGHTNING," was circulating in that territory and when proceedings were instituted to prosecute the infringement and seize the unauthorized copy, it was spirited away. All persons are warned against booking this piratical copy, the use of which will only lead to unnecessary troubles for the exhibitor.

—Don't envy the trained man—be one

No use envying the man who has made good. Don't think he got where he is because he had a "pull." A "pull" doesn't amount to much unless you can deliver the goods, and the best "pull" in the world is training.

Just make up your mind today—right now—that you are going to be a trained man—that you are going to get the money and hold a good job. You can do it. The American School of Correspondence will show you how. This great school, with its sixty-five complete courses in Engineering, Business and Law, can soon give you the training necessary to become a successful man—a man who will be envied as you, perhaps, now envy the men above you.

How the American School Will Give You the Training You Need

The American School of Correspondence was established fifteen years ago for the benefit of ambitious men and women everywhere. This school makes it possible for you to obtain the education and training you need without leaving home or giving up your work.

No matter where you live, the American School will train you in any branch of Engineering, Business and Law, or prepare you for entrance into any resident college. Remember: no need of your leaving home or giving up your present job.

Write the American School now, while the subject of making more money is on your mind. State how far you went in the public schools, what you are doing now, and what you would like to be. Your case will receive special attention.

The American School will tell you the best and quickest way to better your condition and get more money. Check the coupon and mail it now. Don't let this matter drag another day. Another year might slip by and find you at the same old job and prospects for a raise very slim.

To Theatre Owners

Motiograph 1002-M.

Do You Read Advertisements? You Know, Don't You? We Advertise Only to Impress You—The Buyer.

HERE IS FOOD FOR THOUGHT

The Finest Theatres of America, England, Scotland, Australia and Cuba use the Motiograph Machine. Is it not a well known fact that these large Companies operating several theatres in circuit, employ only such instruments (human and mechanical) as assure positive success?

They Take No Chances; They Know by Experience

And HERE ARE SOME FACTS—

The Motiograph Machine is built in one factory—its own. It is built only of the best material money will buy. It is built under the direct supervision of the officers of the Company. It is not an assembled product of many factories.

The Motiograph Machine leads always in improvements. No expense is spared in keeping far ahead of the times.

What the management of Saxe's Lyric Theater, Minneapolis, Minn., conceded to be the world's Finest Motion Picture Institution in the world has to say about Mirroroide:

> Minneapolis, Minn., Feb. 24, 1913.
> The J. H. Genter Co.,
> Newburgh, N. Y.
> Gentlemen:
> The screen I ordered from you has arrived and I have tested it out in every conceivable way for the past thirty days and find it to be without question the best screen I know of.
> I have been experimenting with screens for the past five years and have tried almost everything on the market, but not until using your MIRROROIDE surface did I obtain results that perfectly satisfied me. I am sure a demonstration of this screen to any live exhibitor will commend its adoption into their respective theaters.
> You may refer any of them to me direct and I shall be glad to commend it to them personally.
> Very respectfully,
> S. L. ROTHAPFEL.

It's up to you! Mr. Exhibitor, it's up to you! Get our large free samples. Do it now! Mirroroide is guaranteed for five years not to turn black, peel, crack or in any way deteriorate. It can be washed with soap and water. Over 3,200 in use. They all say it's the Peer of them All.

Expert picture men everywhere who understand the profit and prestige value of dependable lens equipment place the stamp of unqualified endorsement on

Bausch and Lomb
Projection Lenses

They insure the highest degree of brilliancy and sharpness possible—pictures that are as bright and clear as real life.

Good operators insist upon Bausch & Lomb objectives and condensers. They know from experience that their use means the approval of audiences and a growing business.

The Edison and Nicholas Power machines are regularly equipped with our lenses. They can be procured also through any film exchange.

COMPENSARC

This Machine cuts 2/3 from your Light Bills

Mr. Manager

If you are on a 110 or 220 volt circuit and you are using a rheostat to reduce the voltage to 35 at the arc in your lamp, you are paying for ²/₃ more "juice" than you are actually using. Can you afford to waste all this energy supplied from the line, over and above what you really need?

The Fort Wayne Compensarc

saves all this waste by reducing the voltage without losing any: makes a clearer, whiter, steadier light, and eliminates all danger of fires caused by overheated rheostats.

We have a little 22 page booklet "Compensarc vs. Rheostat" that we want to send you. It will tell you plainly how you can make a big saving and a better light. Send us your name and address.

THREE CALIFORNIA-MADE PICTURES EACH WEEK

"Flying A" pictures are all made in California; that means superb settings, beautiful semi-tropical gardens and splendid estates or great mountain ranges—as the story needs. Also, you know quite well, it means photography clear, stereoscopic, such as no Cooper-Hewitt or Aristo lamps could ever make.

No finer stock companies operate on the Pacific Coast than those of the American. Not only widely popular, but carefully trained—a harmoniously-working aggregation of picture stars of genuine intrinsic ability. You get the best entertainment in "Americans" all the time.

ORDER NOW

Your exchange will supply beautiful lithographs of those popular "Flying A" favorites, Jack Kerrigan, Pauline Bush and Jack Richardson, for lobby display. No better drawing card.

Scenes Laid in New Mexico

A massive production, with a plot so unique that its like has never been seen in America. It deals with a heretic land owner in New Mexico who grinds down his peons, attempts to prevent a railroad from crossing his lands, incites the Indians to revolt, which results in sensational scenes of conflict which are stopped by the U. S. soldiers, and meets a tragic death at the hands of the outraged populace.

The battle for control of the peons between the iron-handed master and the good priest presents dramatic scenes and acting beyond description.

Three battles are shown in which hundreds of people are engaged—the fight between the peons and the railroad men which is stopped by the priest, the attack by the Indians on the village, and the thrilling descent of the Government troops upon the redskins.

Even excluding the scenes of conflict and sensationalism, the dramatic story unfolded would still prove a wonderful feature.

The Tonopah Stampede for Gold

Positively the Most Sensational 4 FOUR REEL 4 Feature Ever Attempted

Produced under the personal direction of Mr. CHARLES A. PRYOR, President and General Manager of the YALE FEATURE FILM COMPANY (Incorporated) AND WITH the assistance and co-operation of JIM BUTLER, the FATHER of Tonopah and the discoverer of the principal mines, and GOVERNOR TASKER L. ODDE, present GOVERNOR of the State of Nevada.

Showing the stampede for Gold in the early days, the race across the deserts, the finding of the Gold, the staking of claims and the exterior and interior of the second richest SILVER Mine in the WORLD, the BELMONT.

Showing the depths of the mine 1500 feet below the surface, showing the digging of the raw silver, the ore crushers and refiners and then eventually showing tons of GOLD and SILVER being refined and made into raw Bullion for shipments to the mints.

DID YOU EVER SEE TEN MILLION DOLLARS AT ONE TIME? See these pictures, which are the most interesting ever made. Over five hundred artists employed in the staging of one of the finest melodramatic, soul-stirring pictures ever made, THE PICTURES WITH THE PUNCH.

The following is an extract from the "TONOPAH DAILY BONANZA," under date of February 28, 1913:

"During the staging of the Great Picture, 'The Tonopah Stampede for Gold,' the following moving-picture actors met with serious injury yesterday: Mr. Arthur Bigelow, who plays the character lead, and Mr. A. N. Murphy, the Juvenile man, were racing for the register of deeds office to file the original mining claim. At breakneck speed the horses stumbled and fell, turning two complete somersaults, throwing their riders and rolling on top of them. Mr. Bigelow's left arm was broken, and he also sustained a fractured nose and various other bruises. Mr. Murphy had a gash cut on the side of his head ten (10) inches long, requiring seventeen (17) stitches. In spite of the catastrophe Mr. Charles A Pryor, who was directing the play, had his operator, Mr. Charles Wynard, continue the film for ten minutes, getting the entire scene in motion pictures while awaiting the ambulance for the injured men. It is needless to say that this will be a wonderful picture."

GET THIS FEATURE AT ONCE. A full line of advertising accompanies same. WRITE or WIRE for prices and terms to the YALE FEATURE FILM COMPANY (Incorporated), 1547 BROADWAY, Suite 619, Gaiety Theatre Building, or to Mr. A. M. MURPHY, Tonopah, Nevada.

PRESIDENT DYER TALKS ON GENERAL FILM

New Executive Gives Brief Outline of His Policy—Exhibitors Will be Treated With Every Consideration—Feature Films Here to Stay—Poster Department Installed

By George Blaisdell.

FRANK L. DYER, the president of the General Film Company, is a busy man. Likewise is he averse to interviews—for publication. After many or at least several attempts he was surrounded in his office last Saturday forenoon by the Moving Picture World and held captive for all of fifteen minutes. If he is genial in his manner most certainly is he not verbose. He will answer questions without reserve—or rather with just one reservation—and that too often to the effect that the subject under discussion is not of public interest; meaning, of course, that his individual opinions upon it are not for publication. Mr. Dyer is a big man—physically. You have not been talking with him any length of time before he impresses upon you the feeling that in these days of rapid developments and sometimes of suspense in the film world he is also a big-business man. He is one of the few who "can think on his feet" and as he talks. He has the faculty of weighing his words; thought precedes speech. Perhaps this is due to Mr. Dyer's legal training, for of course it is true of him as of all of those who have ever followed his early profession that "once a lawyer, always a lawyer."

MR. FRANK L. DYER,
President of the General Film Company.

Mr. Dyer brings to the headship of the General Film Company the experience he acquired as the president of Thomas A. Edison, Inc., of Orange. In the latter position, though moving pictures formed but a part of the industries under his supervision, he showed a lively interest in all that pertained to kinematography. It was while serving as president of the Edison Company that Mr. Dyer collaborated with T. C. Martin in writing a two-volume biography of Mr. Edison, in which the long and extremely active life of the inventor is most entertainingly and intimately pictured.

In order to learn just how closely Mr. Dyer follows the work of the manufacturers whose products are marketed through the General Film Company the inquisitor asked a leading question. "How many pictures do you see on an average each week?" was the inquiry.

"At least twenty-five or thirty," was the response. "Do I ever look over independent films? Yes, indeed. I have traveled from Boston to Denver and have visited and interviewed all the prominent exhibitors—both licensed and independent. I try to keep my finger on the pulse of the business."

Mr. Dyer is a firm believer in "things as they are" in the film industry. "You may quote me as stating," said the president of the General Film, "that the high quality of the films handled by this company is due to the fact that each manufacturer is making every effort to produce the best pictures in the licensed output. Not only is each manufacturer striving to outpoint the product of the independent groups, but I repeat he is doing his best to make his work better than that of his associates. This means real competition."

Mr. Dyer fortified the foregoing by stating his belief—and he said that in this view he was confirmed by what he had been assured by many large exhibitors—that the organization of the General Film Company had made possible the erection of costly and elaborate theaters designed solely for the projection of pictures. "These great structures, some of them costing from $150,000 to $300,000," continued Mr. Dyer, "have been possible by reason of the business methods of the General Film Company. We have been able to give diversified programs to houses in direct competition and at the same time show the public fresh films in every place of exhibition."

"Have you issued to your managers any instructions covering dealings with exhibitors?" Mr. Dyer was asked.

"Why, I have made it a business policy," was the reply, "to look upon every customer as a friend. I have impressed upon everybody that all exhibitors, big and little, must be treated with the utmost consideration and courtesy. Our success is dependent upon the exhibitors' success, and we will co-operate with them in every way to make the industry bigger and better and put it on an even firmer footing."

The question of feature films was broached. Mr. Dyer was asked if he looked upon the craze for specials as an ephemeral phase or whether he believed they would stick.

"I think feature films will stick," was the reply. "They are one of the developments of the business. Yes, it is true we have just increased our weekly output from two to four. It was in response to the demand of the exhibitors."

"Do you accept without question the features submitted by your manufacturers or do you have a system of examination and perhaps of elimination by your directors?"

Mr. Dyer smiled. "We reject, I presume, as much as 50 per cent. of the feature films that are presented to us by the manufacturers," he said.

"How do you like your new job?" asked the World man.

"I am genuinely fond of the work," was the quick response. "And I can most truthfully say that the exhibitors with whom I come in contact are fine types of men. I believe that there is going to be a tremendous business future for motion pictures. There is bound to be, for all people like to be entertained.

"There never was a time in its history when the General Film Company was stronger, and in a better condition financially than at present," continued Mr. Dyer, referring to general conditions. "When one remembers that the ten largest manufacturers in motion picture industry consider the General Film Company the principal channel through which their productions find their way to theaters and the general public, and always have so considered it, and when is added to that consideration the fact that the same manufacturers are backing the General Film Company with their influence and capital, there can be little doubt of the future of the organization.

"When I assumed the presidency of the General Film Company, the papers quoted me as saying that I had hung up the motto 'courtesy and consideration to all.' That motto is still our chief aim today as it was then, and behind it stands the dominant idea of superior service.

"During the next few months the General Film Company will demonstrate more convincingly than ever that its service is the strongest and most desirable in the industry. All of our people are imbued with the thought of co-operation, and co-operation means progress. As to what the final outcome of such a policy will be I have no fear."

Important Branch Changes.

Mr. Dyer has surrounded himself in the general offices of the company with most competent assistants. Likewise he has instituted many and marked changes in the service in New York City. Where five branches formerly existed there are but three at present. The branch in Sixth Avenue and the Actograph branch in East Seventeenth Street have been consolidated and installed on the nineteenth floor of the Masonic Building, Twenty-third Street and Sixth Avenue, under the management of A. S. Kane and Robert Etris. The two branches formerly in East Twenty-first Street were consolidated and established in the new building at 440 Fourth Avenue, where an entire floor is occupied, under the direction of I. Van Ronkel, formerly manager of the American branch of Chicago. The arrangement and equipment of these two exchanges is the most elaborate and complete in the country. The method of handling film now in operation is the best that long experience can devise. The third branch is located at 260 West Forty-second Street, under the management of D. Bernstein.

To facilitate the film service automobiles have been purchased, which make the rounds at night of all houses receiving licensed service. By this means all reels are in the branches at an early hour and are inspected and ready for reissue promptly when called for on the following day. The effect of the consolidation and the night service, Mr. Dyer says, has resulted in an increase in the number of customers and in the quantity of film handled.

The Poster Department.

Until recently posters for licensed subjects were obtained principally from companies making a specialty of picture theater advertising. One of the largest of these concerns was the Photoplay Advertising and Specialty Company of Pittsburgh, which maintained offices in Columbus, Cleveland and Detroit, and was under the general management of George Balsdon, president of the company. This equipment was recently purchased by the General Film Company, and Mr. Balsdon has been engaged as superintendent of the poster service. He is now busy installing poster departments in the Twenty-third Street and Fourth Avenue branches in New York City. Large space has been allotted to this department of both branches, and the elaborate system for the handling of posters devised by Mr. Balsdon is being put into service. It is the intention of the General Film Company to extend its poster service to every branch, and when complete this department will be able to supply every needed form of picture theater advertising.

F. E. Samuels Going to London.

Motion Picture Exhibitors League Exposition Committee Decides to Send Representative to the London Exposition.

THERE was an important meeting of the Exposition Committee of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America held at the New York offices on March 11, at which time it was decided to send a representative of the League to the International Kinematograph Exposition and Conference which will be held at the Olympia in London from March 22 to 29. Mr. Frank E. Samuels, proprietor of The Fair theater in 14th Street, New York, and also secretary of the Exposition Committee, was selected as the ambassador plenipotentiary to London.

Present at the meeting besides the regular committee members were National President M. A. Neff and Mr. Rich J. Hollaman, proprietor of the Eden Musee, New York City. The decision to send a representative to England was the result of a suggestion to that effect by Mr. Hollaman. Mr. Neff and Mr. Trigger also advocated such a proceeding as being the proper and progressive thing to do. There has been so much correspondence from European manufacturers who desire space at the coming motion picture trade exposition at Grand Central Palace, New York City, July 7 to 12 next, that it was considered best that someone should go abroad and meet those manufacturers personally and close contracts which are now pending. Mr. Samuels will have full power to negotiate and close contracts and transact any other business for the Exposition Committee while abroad. He has been very energetic in his work on behalf of the American exposition and being fully conversant with every detail of the promoting of the scheme he was looked upon as the logical man to represent the League in London.

FRANK E. SAMUELS.

It is the intention of Mr. Samuels also to confer with the various exhibitors' organizations represented at the London exposition to compare notes with them, invite them to attend the American exposition, and lay the foundation of some permanent international exhibitors agreement. Mr. Samuels will make a characteristic American flash at his booth with the sole object of advertising the American exposition. He is an excellent sample of a real hustling American and exhibitors who know him on this side of the water are resting assured that Frank E. Samuels will be on the job every minute of the time with convincing arguments and his persuasive personality.

Mr. Samuels calculates to spend two weeks at London. He will sail Saturday, March 15 on the "Philadelphia" and expects to arrive in London on March 22, which is the opening day of the London exposition.

More Glimpses of the Future

Miss Elizabeth Marbury Takes An Advanced Position in the Exhibition of Motion Pictures.

By W. Stephen Bush.

THE fame of Miss Elizabeth Marbury as a woman of tact, ability and energy is well deserved. One has but to speak to her for a minute to become aware of the presence of a beneficent dynamic force. System and a determination to do things and to do them well with the least possible friction and the greatest possible saving of time strike the visitor as Marbury characteristics before he is ushered into the cozy and handsome room where, on the twelfth floor of the Tilden Building, the highly charged mental batteries are at work. An informal call there is likely to result in a long wait, for the activities of Miss Marbury are as numerous almost as they are strenuous. When a woman is full of purpose, method and perseverance she begins to be of importance in the community. Responsibilities have a way of gravitating toward the person, who can carry them.

Just now Miss Marbury is very busy indeed. She has succumbed to the spell of the motion picture. Her pace has been quickened, as her vision has been sharpened. Instead of contenting herself with the painting of rainbows on the possibilities of motion pictures in the field of education and merely speculating on the higher and highest forms of entertainment she has blossomed forth into real action and for a start has hired the Berkeley Theater to demonstrate the practical value of her theories.

Her theories? There is nothing strikingly new in the theories themselves. She believes that the time has come when the motion picture must make a special, direct and distinct appeal to the great numbers of people, who love motion pictures, but not necessarily the kind of which "punches" and "thrills" are the chief ingredients. She really has nothing whatever against this latter variety, but she thoroughly believes that the other kind, perhaps somewhat educational in character, has not yet come into its own and she is willing and, I think, quite able to help it in the process of bursting its chrysalis.

Miss Marbury is full of her subject and her natural enthusiasm makes her ardent in her work of propaganda.

"I don't believe," said Miss Marbury, "in denouncing things, whether it's motion pictures or anything else. Don't start to deplore evils until you have a remedy to propose. Don't abuse what is, perhaps, fairly tolerable until you have something better to substitute for what seems bad to you. It does seem to me that there are quite a few people who would care to see a distinctly high class motion picture program and I have hired the Berkeley Theater just to find out how many will come to see such a program."

Right here let it go on record that the experiment has actually commenced and that the first returns favor Miss Marbury. Let us be slow, however, to blow into the Optimistic Trumpet, until all the returns are in and every dollar has been counted.

"Now," continued Miss Marbury in her quiet and determined way," I am not anxious to make money in the Berkeley Theater. Not at all. What I want is to test out this proposition of the appeal to the high class patronage. If the response is favorable I want to rent or build a nice, attractive, refined theater devoted exclusively to pictorial work of the highest grade. I had to wake up a good many prominent people to the possibilities of motion pictures and I think I have done it. Some of the clergymen to whom I proposed the Holy Week Program at first stood aghast and were simply speechless. They have recovered by this time and you ought to see the responses I am getting now. I have the endorsement of the heads of some very prominent religious orders. I want to make lectures a prominent item in this new sort of entertainment. You will see by my program that I have succeeded in enlisting pretty good aid in that direction."

Let us print the program for Holy Week right here. It surely speaks for itself:

All lectures profusely illustrated by the Gaumont Moving Pictures, and Views of the Holy Land in the Natural Color Process.

Having dwelt a little on the merits of the program, Miss Marbury launched into a most intelligent and spirited commentary on moving picture journalism and what she said about the Moving Picture World is barred from these columns for reasons of editorial modesty.

"What a fine Sunday entertainment we can furnish, even now, with the materials we have on hand and how such an entertainment would be appreciated by the very best classes," Miss Marbury continued. "We would have no sermons, but just the right kind of pictures. I have every hope of being successful."

THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD assures Miss Marbury of its support in this most laudable undertaking.

We cannot leave the subject of higher aims in motion picture entertainments without saying that these higher aims have been striven after and carried out practically in many parts of the country. New York City has always been an exception. It is a notorious fact, wholly unflattering to the local pride of New Yorkers, that specializing in higher ideals and promoting the educational side has never characterized New York. All the more welcome therefore will be the Marbury experiment, and all the more credit will be due to her if this great step in the right direction will vindicate her judgment. When visitors from other parts of the country come here and enthusiastically ask to be shown the great model picture houses of the city we have heretofore been compelled to seek a change of subject. We felt the aching void. Let us hope that hereafter we may be able to recommend the Marbury Theater of the near future.

COLLEGE STUDENTS WRITING SCENARIOS.

In the columns of "The Crimson," the Harvard college daily, there appeared recently a letter from Mr. Thomas Edison inviting the students to write scenarios for use in the kinetophone. These "talking-plots" are limited to six minutes in length, and must be clean, with free range of subjects. Now that we have school children writing compositions on the pictures they have seen, and college students writing scenarios; there can be little doubt that the moving picture is making great head-way among the educational powers of today. Hitherto the original writings in the class-room have had no profit beyond the immediate object for which they were written, now however, with both a literary and financial attraction before them, new zeal will be given to this branch of study with good results to all concerned.

SPREADING EDUCATIONALS.

With the ex-President of the United States introducing Cherry Kearton at his motion picture lecture on wild animals in New York; with the mayor of Boston advocating the schools as the center from which all moving picture work should spread, with a prominent newspaper heading an editorial: "The Greatness of the Moving Picture Recognized at Last," then proceeding to enlarge upon the kinematograph as a great teacher, and an equally great moral force; there can now no longer be any doubt as to the high and dignified standing of the moving picture. To chronicle each week the churches and schools taking up the work, and to repeat from the release columns of this paper the number of educational subjects steadily issuing from the manufacturers, would only be a vain repetition; the work is spreading wider and wider, and its becoming greater every day, and what is better still, always with more than satisfactory results.

A ROSTER OF SELIG PLAYERS.

Among the popular players that are at present identified with the Selig Polyscope Company are Charles Clary, Lyllian Leighton, Winnifred Greenwood, Adrienne Kroell, Frank Weed, Jack Nelson, Carl Winterhoff, Harry Lonsdale, Tom Carrigan, Rose Evans, Lillian Logan, George L. Cox, William Stowell, John Lancaster, Julius Frankenberg, Jimmy Shehan, Henry Otto, "Baby" Lillian Wade, William Duncan, Myrtle Stedman, Lester Cuneo, Rex de Rosselli, Tom Mix, Hobart Bosworth, Kathlyn Williams, Bessie Eyton, Thomas Santschi, Herbert Rawlinson, Al. Ernest Garcia, Frederick Huntley, Eugenie Besserer, Lillian Hayward, George Hernandez, Harold Lockwood, Wheeler Oakman, Frank Clarke.

"The Web."

Two-Reel Vitagraph Drama of Intrique.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

FERDINAND BRUNETIERE has made a clear statement of an important law of the drama which may serve as a guide for those who attempt professional criticism. He says the drama stands first and foremost among the manifestations of mind, in action, only when it deals with this or that exertion of the human will. My own interpretation of his definition is that drama becomes most intense when the chief character manifests strong desire for something to be attained and strives for it with tremendous force. "The Web" has that distinctive characteristic.

Beatrice, played by Rosemary Theby, makes a desperate struggle to retain the waning love of a society man, Lester Phillips, for whom she has sacrificed all that a woman holds dear, and is not only thwarted in her efforts by the power of circumstances but sets in motion a tragic storm of opposing influences with a result that human emotions are painted vividly in primary colors. She is made very interesting by Miss Theby, is pictured as a woman of red passions and careless morals at times, ardent, alluring, shrewd in deception, a darling of spoiling men and spoiling good fortune, incapable of self-denial, a complex of wild emotions, and therefore the very woman to have one grand passion though a selfish one.

Lester wearies of her for the very good reason that most men find themselves unable to become the slaves that woman's enveloping love would make them. Coincident with his longing for freedom comes a saner choice of Agatha, a superior girl morally and mentally to the enticing creature who thought she had him enmeshed, and to Agatha he becomes engaged with the approval of her doting father. Beatrice has a fanatical lover named Jean Zolan, whose jealousy would make him a direct instrument of vengance if she sought the death of Lester from the outset, but she first uses subtle methods to bring her idol to terms.

Lester has a younger brother, Francis, a headstrong stripling fresh from college, and he falls easily into the net Beatrice spreads for him. He adores her; he becomes engaged to her, and she induces him to notify his brother that he has selected her for his future wife. Lester is getting along very well with Agatha when this letter reaches and completely upsets him. He meets strategy with strategy—he returns to Beatrice, convinces her that no woman can ever take her place in his heart and stirs her wild passions to their depths.

Now jealous Zolan becomes an active factor. He enjoys sufficient acquaintance with Agatha to be on friendly terms and makes a point of visiting her with a malignant purpose in view. He notes a photograph of Lester on the piano and exhibits enough emotion to excite Agatha's curiosity, then admits to her and her father with seeming reluctance that Lester is faithless. When called upon to prove his statement he conducts them to a cabaret where Lester and Beatrice spend many of their evenings drinking together and contrives to show them what is going on from a place of concealment.

It is enough to satisfy both Agatha and her father, and she writes to Lester immediately upon returning home, breaking the engagement and giving as a reason his intimacy with Beatrice. The situation is now highly complicated, and the only one enjoying it is the cause of it all, the infatuated Beatrice. She is for the time being convinced that her plot to ensnare Francis that Lester might return has succeeded so well that she can now count upon realizing her fondest desires. Her joy is short lived. It ends when Lester applies the caustic to his brother's folly.

The elder brother arranges matters so that Francis joins him at an opportune moment in a private supper room where an orgie is in progress. Wine is flowing freely and Beatrice is the most hilarious of a lot of dissapated fashionables. All that is vulgar in her has been stimulated by Lester until she presents a degrading spectacle when the younger brother enters. The effect of the disillusionation upon him is pitiful. When he rushes from the scene in despair, Lester attempts to follow, but is compelled to thrust Beatrice away in disgust in order to escape. He fears that the shock will unbalance the mind of the infatuated Francis, and he finds the latter about to commit suicide. He saves the younger brother, brings about a reaction and so works upon his feeling that Francis is redeemed.

Beatrice goes in a rage to the apartment of Lester to shoot him, and this is in keeping with the character, but a strained and artificial situation is set up by having Zolan appear on a balcony outside the room where Lester is struggling with Beatrice for possession of her weapon and shoot Beatrice through the window. Too theatrical. Lester is immediately charged with murdering the desperate woman who invaded his house armed with a revolver and the hackneyed theme of the falsely accused leads to some surprising detective work on the part of the incomparable Agatha.

All this is both affected and unnecessary. A great deal could have been made of the tragic end of Beatrice and the storm has really blown itself out at her death. An ending that would have at once satisfied the requirements of dramatic effect and the artistic conscience of the author could have been easily devised instead of an indecisive one that is drawn out into anticlimax. By having Francis confess to Agatha what his brother had done for his sake before Beatrice makes her attack upon Lester, followed by the accidental death of Beatrice in the struggle for her weapon, the detective business might have been lost, but a trenchant instead of an unemphatic solution would have been possible, with a spiritual, highly emotional and artistic conclusion instead of a protracted descent from stronger to weaker action. If an anticlimax is unavoidable it must be a swift one.

The settings of this play are beautiful, the ensembles are very attractive, the story is entertaining, and the acting is without flaw. Miss Theby easily carries the honors in the role of importance, and in the one of least importance Tefft Johnson is a perpetual delight to the eye. He has a million dollar smile. The way the story is handled is eminently satisfactory because of the lack of superfluous scenes and movements, so I hope it will be understood that I enjoyed it. I do not plead for the conventional tableau at the end of a play but for the forceful conclusion that tells the audience what came of it all and leaves an impression to linger in the mind.

Scenes from "The Web," Vitagraph Two-Part Feature.

Pauline Cushman, the Federal Spy

A Patriotic Two-Part Feature by Selig.

By Jas. S. McQuade.

IT is most essential, when a pictured subject treats of actual historical incidents, that extreme care and painstaking should be devoted to a truthful narration of the facts. Otherwise the film fails to serve its purpose as an educational factor, and, indeed, it is productive of much evil, in that it misleads the uninformed mind, and not only places history in contempt but robs the moving picture of one of its greatest and most valuable attributes.

It is with much pleasure that I can congratulate Charles E. Nixon, the author of the Pauline Cushman scenario, on his fidelity to history, in the writing of this thrilling war drama. He succeeds admirably in placing us in the very midst of the strife in which General Rosecrans, on the Federal side, and Generals Bragg, Forrest and Morgan, of the Confederate army, were engaged. And he rouses us from our hazy, dreamlike remembrances of that terrible, fratricidal contest and of the desperate means employed to gain the mastery, by bringing us into close contact with Pauline Cushman, the Union spy, and Harry Holmes, the U. S. Secret Service agent, during some of their daring exploits.

We must credit Mr. Nixon with giving us the atmosphere of the times, so that it distinctly touches us, and for his inventive talent in furnishing the heroine with the means of extricating herself from several difficult situations. Take, for example, the ready wit with which she establishes communication between the room in which she is held prisoner and General Bragg's headquarters, in the adjoining room. By means of a hickory ramrod, run through the partition wall and connecting with the table on which the field telegraph instrument is placed, she reads by "teeth transmission" the important telegram that is sent out by General Bragg for the ambushing of General Rosecrans at Lewiston Gap. The use of sympathetic ink, the clever get away from General Forrest's tent by means of a drummer boy's uniform and the broken drum, with other instances of sharp-sighted resourcefulness, are evidences of careful scenario building.

As examples of strict accuracy in the matter of details, we can compliment Mr. Nixon on the great painstaking shown in securing telegraph blanks of the U. S. War Department and of the Western Union blanks used during war time. The latter could not be secured in Chicago but were finally obtained by the courtesy of Col. W. C. Clowry, head of the Western Union in New York. The newspaper excerpts taken from the Louisville Courier and the Louisville Journal, which are seen on the screen, were photographed from the original newspapers, which were kindly loaned by the librarian of the Louisville public library for the purpose. There are other notable instances in the accuracy of details—in uniforms, etc., etc., which limited space forbids recounting.

But the most carefully prepared scenario will fail without talented production. I am of the opinion that Director Oscar Eagle has excelled all his former efforts in this fine war drama. Mr. Eagle has handled the large masses of men in the opposing armies with great skill and effectiveness. There is no sign of the "tin" soldier here. The men were crack companies from the Illinois National Guard infantry, and troopers from the same source. The batteries were composed of ten pieces of artillery, and they were handled in the production with the skill and dash of veteran service. Indeed, the evolutions of the men, and the fine soldierly bearing of the officers throughout, impress us with all the realism of grim war itself.

The selection of Miss Winnifred Greenwood, leading woman of Selig's Eastern stock company, for the titular role was very happy, in more ways than one. In the first place, Miss Greenwood absolutely loses herself in Pauline Cushman. One is fascinated by her daring, her coolness amid danger, and the swiftness and cautiousness of her movements. Not once is there displayed a sign of self-consciousness. That interview with the Confederate officers, in the hotel lobby, Louisville, is just as natural as if the Union spy herself were present. The scene in Wood's theater, Louisville, where Pauline toasts the Confederacy, and throws the dregs in her wine glass on the Stars and Stripes, is positively thrilling. And here, by the way, Director Eagle is given a hearty hand-shake for a magnificent interior scene, which shows most of the audience seated in the theater and also a good view of the stage. The excitement following the toast shows up finely on the screen, as the spirited contest on the stage between Copperheads and loyal Unionists is the real thing, and has been excellently worked up. Miss Greenwood looks well on horseback, and her dashing "get-aways" in the saddle, as Pauline Cushman, are full of spirit and create enthusiasm.

Miss Greenwood's selection for the part was happy for another reason, as will be shown. When Mr. Nixon was looking for a make-up and costume that would make her a counterpart of the Union spy, a pleasant surprise awaited him. As the Secret Service archives are closed books, a photograph of Pauline Cushman was not to be found there. After much vain searching, Mr. Nixon discovered that there was a photograph of the famous woman in the army museum of the Chicago public library. As the officials would not permit the photograph to be taken out of the building, Mr. Nixon brought Miss Greenwood to the library to see it.

Miss Winnifred Greenwood as Pauline Cushman in the dressing-room scene at Wood's Theater, Louisville.

The attendant, a sharp-eyed, grizzled veteran looked quizzically at Miss Greenwood, who was an utter stranger to him, for a moment, and then said sharply to Mr. Nixon: "What's the use of looking at a photograph? That's Pauline Cushman, right there, with you!" Strange to say, the veteran was really right, for the features of Miss Greenwood so closely resembled those of the famous actress and Union spy that there was little need of make-up to complete the counterpart.

Charles Clary, an actor who will always be remembered by his impersonation of Columbus, is an excellent foil for Miss Greenwood in the strong part of Henry Holmes, the Secret Service agent. In the many disguises assumed by the Pinkerton man, Mr. Clary is equally at home, and is virile in all of them. T. J. Commerford, as General Forrest; La Fayette McKee, as General John Morgan; Harry Lonsdale, as General Bragg and commander of the Confederate forces; Grant Foreman, as General Rosecrans and commander of the Federals; Walter Roberts, as Major Blackstone, a Confederate officer, and the remainder of the cast as sustained by the members of Selig's stock company, are in capable hands.

Good photography marks the production, which consists of two reels. The release date is set for March 24.

"THE LIFE OF DANTE," Three-Reel Ambrosio Subject.

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

ANOTHER splendid Ambrosio. The series of features, recently released by this company have won for it the sincere regard of the best types of exhibitors. Such productions as "Satan," "The Thousand," "The Knights of Rhodes" and this present feature show that the higher ideal is being sought after and attained. Such reels are irrefutable arguments on behalf of the motion picture and its future mission. The domain of biography we have hardly touched, utterly ignoring the richness of the field in the blind hunt for ill-disguised melodrama.

What we know about the immortal Dante may easily be put in a hundred words. There has, however, grown around the meagre authentic records a body of charming and pathetic traditions. Of this more or less romantic lore the producers of this feature have made most excellent use. Following the Boccaccio tradition, Beatrice is made the Beatrice of flesh and blood, the daughter of Portinari and the wife of Simone de' Bardi. For a motion picture presentation this was perhaps the best way of treating the matter. The love scenes are put on with the utmost delicacy and there is not lacking that distinctly tragic vein which runs through all of the mortal life of Dante. We see a splendid picture of turbulent Florence torn by factional strife, and the scene showing the decree of banishment issued against Dante is impressive and well worked out. We see Dante as the friend of art in the company of Giotto, to whom we owe the poet's classic profile, we see him as a citizen and statesman, as a patriot and warrior on the bloody field of Campaldino, we see him in exile, eating the bread of strangers; we get a glimpse of the noble hospitality of Casa can Grande. Moments of inspiration are shown with nice art. Among the many scenes which deserve special mention is the traditional visit of Dante to the see of Pope Boniface and his indignant remonstrance against his ideas and policies. Altogether this feature is worthy of the highest praise and makes a most acceptable addition to our supply of motion picture classics.

Scene from "The Life of Dante" (Ambrosio).

There is one reservation I must make amid these well deserved encomiums. Dante was not a stout man. I suppose the average audience will scarcely make a point of this, but this production stands on such a high level, that this one defect seems all the more conspicuous.

THE FIRST MEETING OF THE INQUEST CLUB.

After many delays the first meeting of the Inquest Club was held in a private room at the Hofbrau house Monday evening, March 10th. The photoplay editor acted as Coroner and on the jury were the Rev. E. Boudinot Stockton, Dr. R. Ralston Reed, Benjamin Barondess, A. Van Buren Powell, Edmund Hirsch, Stanley W. Todd, George Hennessey, Clarence James Fleming, E. J. Montagne, Leon Demary, J. W. Kellette and Marc Edmund Jones, the latter being the head of the Chicago Circle and present as a witness. Mrs. Beta Breuil was present at the Herald Square theater, where the Questers met, but lost her nerve when she found that she would be the onlv woman present and declined to regard even the presence of the Reverend Dr. Stockton a sufficient chaperonage. An hour and a half session was held and the discussion gave light on the work to every member present.

The next session will be held at Gane's Manhattan theater, Broadway at 31st street. New members should meet in the lobby as soon after half past nine as a reel ends.

Charles E. Schneider, the New England picture theater equipment expert, advises that he has moved to larger quarters across the street from his old address. He is now located at 257 Main street, Springfield, Mass., and has been appointed distributor for the Nicholas Power Co.'s machines and parts.

"Till Death Us Do Part."

Two-Reel Pilot Release.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

A STRONG social drama, and I do not know why a photodrama that is of the people, to be shown the people, that will move the people is not one of the best that can be thrown upon the screen—particularly when it talks in terms of life that are bound to powerfully affect us for the better by rousing our finer sympathies. Besides its other merits, this story has a nationality distinctly American and the question with which it deals is one widely and recently discussed in the newspapers.

In handling native-born motive power the Pilot producers have an aim to their guns, and it looks as though they will hit the mark more than they will miss it in the future. Their trend is towards American plays of modern motive. "Till Death Us Do Part," has another significance in this day of the changing status of woman. It points out in a most pathetic manner how the old-fashioned wife, starting on an even plane with her husband, was distanced less by his superior natural ability than by the enormous amount of work of a menial kind she was obliged to perform in obedience to traditional or conventional habits.

Scenes from "Till Death Do Us Part"—a Two-Reel Pilot Production.

Like many other interesting plays this one verges on sociological questions that have become of liveliest solicitude in all progressive communities. It is clearly unfair to expect a mother to give the best of her days, the best of her strength, the best of herself to producing new human creatures who shall be of incalculable profit instead of serious menace to our development and preserve all the physical charm that would enable her to take a leading place as an attractive and entertaining member of high society. The sane and beautiful thing to accord her is reverence.

Almost unconsciously this story points to a higher love which will probably be that of the future, that of devoted wifehood on one side and an entirely new care and veneration for motherhood on the other, the only reasonable hope for an efficient humanity, for woman only seems capable of bearing on the torch of spirituality and of conserving noble emotions in the children of our race. Woman may not walk side by side with man in certain lines of achievement, but in a new community of interest and a closer sympathetic relationship than has been possible under old conditions. It is a story of love that is true to the last, of womanly tenderness and manly appreciation.

The acting of the two principals, as Jack Mason and wife, is beyond complaint of any kind, that of Miss Vail as the wife being one of the most exquisite impersonations I have seen in a long time. From girlhood to old age, in every phase of womanhood depicted, she is so consistent, so endearing, so truthful in her adherence to the role that she springs to the front ranks of moving picture actresses at a bound. If she can only stay there, be as sincere in all she does, she is bound to be one of the marked figures in this method of thought communication, in this new art that is a complex of mind and its manifestation.

The story opens when her life is drawing to a close. She has performed her duty, but her husband is moving on and on in an ambitious career until he has become a popular member of Congress and is about to be nominated as Senator. The nomination is tendered by a group of hardened old politicians, practical individuals, who select a man of ability and popularity with a view to winning an election and binding him thereafter to their financial interests. It is a game with them, and Mason's wife does not fit the part they expect her to play. They prefer a woman of vanity that they may prey on her husband through that weakness, master him through her.

They communicate with him by letter, pointing out the desirability of divorcing his present wife as one unfit for his exalted career, and on this letter the entire action depends. It does not please the ambitious politician, and he calls them into conference. The letter, meanwhile, is accidentally seen by his self-denying wife. She regards herself as a drag upon her husband and prepares to leave him free to attain his heart's desire. That her self-sacrifice is consistent soon becomes apparent. The story of her life is beautifully unfolded when the prospective candidate assembles the politicians in his library and graphically depicts the history of his career.

Scene by scene, in pitiful contrast, his early struggles are laid bare, pointing out the tireless devotion of his wife, showing that she provided for his starting point, indicating all her sweetness in time of trial, her heart-wrung denials for his sake, her cheerful encouragement, the work that withered her hands, and these pictures are not only contrasted with his present delivery of the story but with what she is preparing to do for him now. She is seen making preparations to leave him unembarrassed at the very moment he is telling their story. So cleverly are these contrasts of past happiness made with the heart-broken and silent misery of the old wife on the eve of parting from all she holds dear that the situations are deeply affecting.

The conflict in this case is that of avarice with principle, and the result is one that will be satisfactory to the average audience throughout the land. The assembled politicians at first sit enthralled by the eloquence of the man they have chosen for a leader and gradually come to recognize the nobility of soul back of his earnest defense of his wife. They relinquish the divorce project, congratulate the prospective Senator and file out of the house the better for his manly utterances. Meanwhile, during the progress of this recital, the wife who has grown old and plain when nearing the sunset of life is on the verge of leaving home and comes into her husband's library for a last fond word. She still loves him.

The final scene between these two is not only very artistic, but deeply affecting. From his first earnings as a young lawyer the husband had their marriage certificate framed. He has guarded it as a sacred relic. He produces it as his aged wife kneels by his chair and points out the words that cause her to break down in an access of purest joy. He binds up her wounds with assurances that he is hers "Till Death Us Do Part," and the scene fades on her supreme happiness.

AMERICAN ADDS TO ITS SCENARIO FORCE.

Mrs. Virginia Whitmore is the latest addition to the American Film Manufacturing Company's force at the Santa Barbara producing center. She will occupy an editorial chair as scenario reader. Mrs. Whitmore is a newspaper woman of considerable experience and brings to her new duties a splendid enthusiasm that augurs well for her work.

"With the Eyes of the Blind" (Edison)

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

ENTERING upon an interesting story, opening well and proceeding with careful preparation, I admired the appropriate settings and the skill shown by the director in handling the subject. He evidently knew his business; the preliminaries began to indicate that there was only a thin crust over a volcanic state of affairs, so I settled back to watch the current of events with that sense of satisfaction a critic enjoys when he feels that what is passing before his eyes is well worth a painstaking review. Why should not one feel at ease with such a star cast as this—every performer a gem of purest ray serene—to interpret the drama?

| John Maclane, captain of finance | Charles Ogle. |
| Nora, his blind daughter | Mary Fuller. |
| Doctor Burnett, famous oculist | Robert Brower. |
| James Horton, a broker | William West. |
| Walter Horton, his son | Marc MacDermott. |
| Mrs. Van Sittart | Mrs. Erksine. |

Scenes from "With the Eyes of the Blind" (Edison).

What a constellation to illumine any photoplay! The acting was perfect, but opportunity was meagre for all but Mary and Marc, and it was anemic for them at times. Mary looked better than she has in a long time. She is acquiring new grace of figure and manner. She was very sweet and attractive as the blind daughter of a rich broker. The delicacy of the blind girl's sense of touch was admirably illustrated by an opening incident—we were thus prepared for the use of "the eyes of the blind" at a critical moment in the drama. What is to be the essence of the story?

The captain of finance, the blind girl's father, is about to crush James Horton, a rival broker. The latter makes a vain personal appeal in order to avert the ruin of his business, then his son goes to the house of the autocrat, interviews him in his library and is menaced by the old man. The latter snatches a paper knife, a struggle ensues; the blade accidentally enters the body of the one who threatened to use it, and he sinks in death throes upon the door. Marc stands dumfounded—I take the liberty of using the performers' own names—and is in this attitude when blind Mary comes down the stairs. Marc sinks into a chair and feigns sleep instead of notifying the girl that her father has been accidentally injured that they may make an effort to save him. This is a very forced piece of business.

It was injected that the girl might examine his face with the ends of her fingers, but some other method quite as effective and far less affected could have been devised. I am prone to pardon weakness of this kind, more so than the audience, so we will glide along. Mary is surprised to find that she is touching the face of a sleeping stranger. She walks to where her father is sitting at a half recumbent position, and Marc slips out of the room. Blind girls are not supposed to hear in the deathly stillness of such a room, so we will glide along. She finds her father unconscious, returns to where the stranger was sitting and cries out in alarm. He is gone!

One year after. None of the servants saw Marc leave the home of the wealthy broker. It was known to others that he and his father were at war with Mary's father, but no suspicions were attached to them. We will glide along. Mary has recovered the use of her eyes, and people in front will be very glad of this—she can talk with those eyes. Those eyes speak from the heart when she meets at a house party the very man whose face she touched the night her father was stabbed to death in his library. We can not help expecting a magnificent situation.

In the "Star of Seville" the girl insists that the murderer be punished, not knowing that he is the one she loves. I could almost see the toils of the law tightening around Marc from Mary's insistence that the slayer of her father be found, while she is preparing to be the happiest woman in the world in the love of the man of her choice. I watched and waited through a courtship, realizing how a series of dramatic situations might grow out of the situation and follow one another in exciting succession, but I watched and waited in vain.

Mary does some very delightful acting in the gradual revelation of her heart's fond desire, and Marc conducts himself in a high-strung manner for a while, but he can not resist the winsome girl and forgets what has happened. They progress to the point that they ride out together, and Mary is thrown from her horse. Will she make the discovery? Not yet. It is deferred until Marc is about to leave the house party, then she opens her arms, and he is enfolded in them. Her fond fingers wander to his face. She is startled. Her expression is one of retrospect, then it all dawns on her, and she recoils in horror. She tells him to leave her and he does.

That is the end of the photoplay. He goes away without attempting a manly explanation. What if she does not believe him? Grand opportunity for him to prove his case. There would be difficulties, but a struggle to overcome them, to set his will against the force of circumstances and prove his innocence would have made a splendid story. It is not like a man to give up the woman he loves without a struggle. It is not like a woman to easily forget the man she truly loves. In the conflict between attraction and repulsion there was a play to come, but they simply parted.

Logic in a photoplay need not be forced on the spectator's attention, but he should never be baffled and confused by its absence. A scenario writer must face his problem squarely and either present his idea in logical form or discard it for one that works out to a natural conclusion. I am aware that most photodramas end in petty compromise, but a man who attempts to do this sort of work should have an artistic conscience, should not slip away and leave matters in an unsettled condition. This play is all beginning, all promise; there is a problem to solve, and it lies between a man and woman bound by the strongest ties on earth. To shirk the responsibility is not craftsmanship.

To ignore a situation is to falsify it so far as the audience is concerned. If an author feels unequal to the task of reaching an emphatic conclusion, or at least one satisfying to the people in front, he had better let the play mature a while rather than resort to a spineless makeshift. "With the Eyes of the Blind" could have been made heartrending or hearteasing at the termination, but the problem should have been solved instead of giving the audience a premature "fadeaway." Affairs of the heart are not settled so easily, and those of crime not to be puffed out like a candle.

CHICAGO LETTER

By JAS. S. McQUADE

"FOR my part, I should rather have a son go to three moving picture shows Sunday than to drink three ice cream sodas," said Mayor Shank of Indianapolis, recently. Now there is nothing particularly devilish in the doing of either, although the drinking of the ice cream sodas might cause stomachic uneasiness; but the good mayor has been sorely tried of late by certain Baptist Church members, who have been trying to close all the picture theaters of Indianapolis on Sundays, and so he indulged in the aforementioned wickedness.

These good Baptist brethren are doubtless jealous over the superior drawing qualities of the picture theaters on Sundays. The pastor is beginning to feel lonely and the pillars of the church look slim as they sit here and there in empty pews. Everything is going to the bow-wows, just because this pastor's voice sometimes frightens himself as it resounds through an empty church on Sundays. The wicked cause of it all must be sought and put out of business.

Let us follow these righteous people in their quest. We see them stop before a picture theater. The announcement on the posters show that "The Life of Moses" is being shown. At another, they stop where "From the Manger to the Cross" is being presented. At still another, "Cain and Abel" is heralded, and at another "Jephtha's Daughter." And so on through many noble scriptural subjects.

Now it is said to say that we have followed the righteous people in a mythical sense only. If our exhibitors would only take the pains (and show their good sense), to select Sunday programs that will not antagonize the convictions of many good people, there would be less of this opposition to Sunday presentations of moving pictures. And if the good brethren who are so zealous for the proper observance of the Sabbath would only get familiar with the many noble subjects—scriptural and educational—offered in pictures, they would spare their pastor that evening sermon and fill their church by showing some of them on the screen.

Down in Indianapolis, the delegation that called on Mayor Shank showed that at one south side picture theater, recently, pictures of a bull fight had been presented one Sunday afternoon. Such an exhibitor should be subjected to an examining committee of experts to test his sanity! He has no respect for the opinions or the rights of others.

The mayor has been a staunch friend of pictures on Sundays and refuses to close the theaters. "During this administration," said the Mayor to the delegation, "we have stopped theatrical performances, because there is a law specifically prohibiting such performances. There may be a difference of opinion as to what constitutes a theatrical performance, but my opinion is that a motion picture exhibition is not a theatrical performance, and in my opinion the only way they could be reached would be under the law forbidding one to follow his usual vocation on Sunday, cases of charity and necessity excepted."

Attorneys and others who have investigated say there is no state law specifically forbidding Sunday theaters, and the recent attempt to prevent Sunday vaudeville at Keith's theater, Indianapolis, was made through prosecution under the statute forbidding one to follow his usual vocation on Sunday. This statute was said to be the only one applicable. A city ordinance, passed in 1877, forbidding Sunday theaters, was held invalid by Judge Remster in an appeal from the police court.

"I am not ready to take on myself the enforcement of this state law against one class of people and not against another," continued the Mayor. "If you get into the enforcement of this law, there would be no end to it. I don't propose to get in the same fix the mayor of Vincennes has, where the bakers and grocers, and every one else have been affected. Why, we would have to stop the street cars running on Sunday.

"What you people should do is to go to the legislature and get a bill passed prohibiting Sunday performances of motion picture theaters, if you want them stopped. Or, if you want to file an affidavit against one of them, charging a violation of the law forbidding theatrical performances on Sunday, I will see that the affidavit is served and the city will help you get the evidence."

The delegation said it would report back to the church, as it had no authority to take any action. Later in the morning, the Mayor held a conference with representatives of the Motion Picture Managers' Association. The only matter discussed was what should be done with $475 set aside for charity from Sunday performances. The Mayor advised that the money be given to the Alpha Home for the Aged, the Flower Mission Society and the Day Nursery. During his administration the Mayor has received $25 a week from the receipts of Sunday performances, for charity. He says this money has come to him unsolicited.

"I've heard," said the Mayor, "that if I do not stop the Sunday performances in motion picture theaters I will be impeached. Well, they can go right ahead and impeach me if they want to. I haven't much time left in this job anyhow."

Moving Picture Sermons Praised by Preacher.

Recently the Rev. W. H. Jones, pastor of the First Reformed Church of Valley Stream, L. I., after seeing a moving picture based on the story of Bunyan's immortal "Pilgrim's Progress," returned to his congregation, handed in his resignation and said:

"I realized I was wasting my time, for I had before me living characters whose actions as they unfolded their sublime story were far more potent than anything I could say in the pulpit. A religious subject, thus tactfully and reverently treated, in my opinion, will do more to advance the cause of religion and to uplift humanity than a thousand eloquent preachers ever can hope to accomplish by their oratory."

The clergyman then procured a motion picture projecting machine, proceeded to Freeport and gave an exhibition at which, it is declared, every member from every church in the town was present. The peculiar phenomenon, in so large a gathering of churchgoers to hear a pastor, was that none fell asleep.

That the motion picture is to become one of the most powerful agencies ever employed in the work of the church is the conclusion reached by many of the prominent leaders in religion and social uplift in America.

"Each day," said Thomas A. Edison, in a recent conversation about the use of kinematography in the public schools, "I want to put in a little drama—a short one—showing some simple story that will interest the children and will teach a moral; something where the good boy gets rewarded and the bad one punished."

This sort of thing treated in a book would simply disgust or irritate the average boy; but when he sees the actual deed and the rewarding going on before his very eyes, the effect is different; he can not escape the impression that here is actual life and that right doing is an admirable thing. This is the idea that recently prompted Professor Milton Fairchild, of Baltimore, in a lecture before the teachers of Topeka, to advocate the appointment of a "moral instructor" by the University of Kansas to go about the state with a motion picture giving "visual instruction" in the effects of righteousness and wickedness.

An Editor With an Axe to Grind.

Six boys of Bloomington, Ill., were arrested recently for a series of burglaries and robberies. "They displayed a degree of daring and depravity worthy of old offenders" is the editorial comment of the Bloomington "Pantagraph." And then the editor indulges in speculation, as follows:

"Now, the question is, how did these notions of robbery, burglary and murder get into the heads of these boys? They came, no doubt, by suggestion from some source, either from trashy books they had read or from more vivid pictures of crime held before their eyes. The boys have declared they were liberal patrons of the moving picture shows. In some of these shows there are moving and stirring representations of burglaries and homicides. The daring exploits of outlaws are portrayed with life-like effect. It is easy to understand what effect such representations have on weak and unformed minds. The effect can only be evil and never good."

Then losing sight of all other sources to which their youthful depravity might be attributed—trashy books, evil associations, the bequeathments of heredity, etc.—the editor of the "Pantagraph" pounces with savage glee on moving pictures and makes them responsible for the boys' crimes, in the following manner: "It is safe to say that these boys now under arrest were not made better, but worse by the moving pictures they witnessed. Their weak and unchastened imaginations were not equal to the strain. And it is no more than just to say that any moving picture house representing acts of violence and crime to be displayed before children ought to be regarded as no better than a pest-house and compelled to remove beyond the city limits."

This intelligent editor must, or should, know that moving pictures are so censored nowadays that burglaries and other crimes are carefully cut out. We are heartily in sympathy with him that acts of violence and crime should not be displayed in picture theaters. So is every intelligent exhibitor. But we do object to such wholesale charges, when they are based solely on the imagination of the writer.

Has the editor of the "Pantagraph" an axe to grind? Exhibitors, are you doing any advertising in the "Pantagraph," down there, in Bloomington?

Chicago Film Brevities.

Wm. N. Selig, president of the Selig Polyscope Co., accompanied by Gilson Willets, the well known magazine and scenario writer, left for California Sunday evening, March 9th. Mr. Selig will spend several weeks on the Coast, inspecting his western interests.

Wm. Sievers and wife, of St. Louis, spent Thursday and Friday, March 6 and 7, in the city last week. Mr. Sievers is treasurer of the Grand Central Amusement Co. and manager of the Grand Central Theater, St. Louis. The new Grand Central, owned by the same company and situated in one of the most fashionable residence districts in the city, will be opened either at the close of the present month, or early in April. Delays have been caused by the slowness of certain firms in filling their contracts for some of the appointments of the new house. The new Grand Central will seat over 1900 people, and has cost $165,000. Mr. and Mrs. Sievers returned to St. Louis Friday night, March 7th.

Alfred Rosenthal, traveling representative of Warner's Features with headquarters in the Chicago office, returned from a trip to Michigan last week in the interest of his company. He reported good business for the Warner's features, and was much impressed with the fine condition of the moving picture business generally.

Robert H. Harris, manager of the Harris-Grand Theater, Bloomington, Ind., has now under construction a new moving picture theater in that city that will seat 650 people. The building is fire proof throughout, and will cost, when completed, $20,000. The front and lobby and interior decorations are creations of the Decorators Supply Co., of Chicago. The Nurre Mirror Works, of Bloomington, have the contract to furnish the mirror doors and the fine mirror decorations of the lobby. The color scheme of the interior decorations is green, and the seats are of the same color. The new house will be devoted exclusively to licensed pictures.

Wm. Schuelke, of the Wm. Schuelke Organ Co., Milwaukee, and his Chicago representative, T. D. Hume, called at the office of the Moving Picture World last week. Mr. Schuelke is very much pleased with his growing business, which he attributes largely to his advertisement in the World. He stated that the Schuelke organ is in great demand at the present time.

Chas. Hammitt, manager of the Rex Theater, Alcester, South Dakota, has the following paragraph in a letter recently received from him at the Chicago office: "Enclosed find $2.50 for new handbook. It, no doubt, must be a scream if it is anything like the Moving Picture World. I am just starting up a moving picture show house here." The information desired by Manager Hammitt, will be furnished by F. H. Richardson, editor of the Projection Department, New York City.

* * *

E. R. Lynch, of the firm of Hall & Lynch, called at the World office last week and furnished the information that his firm has purchased the exclusive state rights for Wisconsin, for Kalem's big feature, "From the Manger to the Cross." The head office of the firm is at 112 N. La Salle St., Chicago. Messrs. Hall & Lynch will devote all their time and energies to the booking of this film subject until the state is thoroughly covered.

KLEINSCHMIDT PROTECTS HIS STATE RIGHTS MEN.

According to the local newspaper of Kemmerer, Wyo., Captain Kleinschmidt dropped into the New Kemmerer theater in that city on Friday evening, February 26th, and seized a set of Alaska-Siberian films being shown in that town by Mr. E. Gerson of Denver. It appears that Captain Kleinschmidt had sold the state rights for Wyoming to Mr. G. Whitten; the state rights for the state of Colorado had been sold to Messrs. Curry, Faber & Fought of Colorado Springs, Colo. Not satisfied to exploit their own territory, Mr. Fought trespassed upon the territory of Mr. Whitten. When the latter demanded protection, Captain Kleinschmidt got on the job with the result before mentioned. If all vendors of state right pictures would act as promptly as did Captain Kleinschmidt in this instance, the state right proposition would be a safer one.

"PRISONER OF ZENDA" IN CALIFORNIA.

The Turner and Dahnken Circuit of San Francisco, Cal., which controls a chain of theaters in that state, has purchased the rights for California of the Famous Players Film Company's production, "The Prisoner of Zenda," and report an unprecedented demand for that subject.

Mexican Insurrection Pictures

Frank Dart Returns from Mexico City with Many Excellent Views of the Damage Wrought.

The 1,500 feet of film brought from Mexico to New York by Frank S. Dart, a cameraman employed by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, will make a mighty interesting release. The pictures were shown last Monday in the little Universal Theater, at 1600 Broadway. It was a first print, without titles. Not many will be necessary. The film is a story of a trip from Vera Cruz to Mexico City, of a stay there during the latter days of the latest revolution, and the return journey to the Gulf coast. The pictures taken en route are particularly illuminating, as showing the damage that may be wrought to railroad properties by civil war. Mr. Dart placed his camera on the rear of the train and gave a good sweep of country. In one view there was shown the remains of what had been a train before the explosion of a quantity of dynamite. Rolling stock is scattered along the side of the road in every conceivable state of disrepair and of wreckage. The camera reveals miles of bent and twisted rails. In the city many buildings are shown riddled by shell fire. In some places great masses of tangled telegraph and telephone wires are pictured.

That the city has not resumed the paths of peace is shown by the batteries of artillery parked in the streets. Mr. Dart took many pictures about the penitentiary. The photographer tells a circumstantial story of the death of Madero which is materially at variance with the official version. He insists that the killing took place directly back of the penitentiary, outside of the main wall, and the body was buried near where the deposed President of Mexico fell, being later removed. Photographs are shown of the alleged grave and of the wall where the bullets are said to have struck after passing through the victim.

Mr. Dart secured one scene which ranks high in picturesqueness. The railroad swings around a curving plateau. Surrounded by and under this elevation nestles a large town, its roofs so nearly of an even height it seems more like a floor. Evidently the day was fading; the sun was under the hill; yet there was sufficient light clearly to outline every building. The photography was remarkably good. Complementary to the foregoing and matching it was the view taken from the rear of the train as it traveled through a winding cut in the hills, the only remaining trace of a day that was gone being the parallel streaks of light reflected from the rails.

BITS FOR FANS.

Charles R. Holmes kindly contributes another budget of G. M. Anderson news. He writes:

G. M. Anderson has returned to Niles and started in at once upon his arrival. Brinsley Shaw had charge of the studio in his absence.

With Mr. Anderson came Augustus Carney, fresh from his Chicago triumphs. He will at once get busy with the Alkali Ike pictures. This means that Margaret Joslin (Mrs. W. H. Todd), will again resume her place as his leading woman after enjoying a deserved rest. She worked hard in the Alkali Ike comedies and found the vacation very welcome.

Mr. and Mrs. Todd had as guest Sunday, March 2, Miss Martine Levy, formerly of Chicago, but now a resident of San Francisco when she is not engaged in her vaudeville duties. She has been here on the Orpheum time. Her father is a San Francisco newspaper man. She is studying for grand opera.

Here are some unknown facts that will set the fans at rest. Miss Maude Calhoun played the leads in "The Wife of the Hills", and "A Woman of Arizona." Miss Lottie Collins was the lead in "Broncho Billy's Mexican Wife." Both were filling in following the death of Miss Bertram and before the appointment of Miss Bessie Sankey as permanent lead. Miss Beth Taylor, who played the feminine lead in "The Ranch Girl's Trial" was another, but she did not like picture work and dropped out. She is now playing leads in a stock company in Sacramento.

Miss Sankey is one of the leaders in the race for Queen of the Niles Carnival in May.

NEW THEATER AT SPRING LAKE, N. J.

Mr. Otto Morris of Spring Lake, N. J., is building a new $20,000 motion picture theater at the above place. Everything in the building will be first class, and through Mr. J. H. Hallberg, "the economizer man," an order has been placed for Power's 6-A moving picture machine, A. C. current saver, asbestos curtain, poster frames and a full line of moving picture supplies. Callahan & Bisner of Park Ridge, N. J., have also purchased from Mr. Hallberg an Edison Model B moving picture machine, which they will use for a traveling motion picture show in the smaller towns in New Jersey.

Doings at Los Angeles

Vitagraph Preparing to Extend Western Studios—Universal Activities—Photoplayers Open Clubrooms—Other News.

THE decision to form a new Vitagraph company to work at Santa Monica, where Director Rollin Sturgeon's company is now located, was one of the events of the present week. Although the announcement of a second Western Vitagraph company is not official it is nevertheless a reliable tip. Furthermore it may be said that Robert Thornby, heretofore a member of Director Sturgeon's company, will be the director of the new organization. The official announcement to this effect may be expected to follow within a week or two.

Last Fall it was announced in this column that the Western Vitagraph company would move from its then location in Santa Monica to another location in the same vicinity, but that the new location would embrace a modern studio, commodious grounds and augmented equipment. At that time the move was predicted for "next Spring," which is now. Arrangements for moving are now being made. April will probably find the two Western companies in a home of their own. A. E. Smith, vice-president of the Vitagraph Company of America, has been visiting in southern California lately. While he was here he made a trip up to Santa Barbara, where he owns a winter home, and this led to the rumor that the Vitagraph Western company was to be moved from Santa Monica to Santa Barbara. There is nothing in the report. Los Angeles, and Santa Monica, which is a suburb thereof, enjoys too many strategical advantages to be abandoned by a company so alive to its best interests as the Vitagraph.

The move to a larger plant in Santa Monica will also result in the enlarging of the output of the Western company. Thornby, for the present, is to devote a large portion of his time to the production of comedies, with an occasional drama or a Western. Sturgeon is now going into big stuff, in multiple reels whenever the opportunity offers, and in particular will turn out big virile Western and military pictures. Within another year the Santa Monica studio, it is thought, will be on an equal footing with the Eastern studios.

By way of preparing for the big things which are coming, Sturgeon, this week, signed a contract with one of the brightest stars in the Independent firmament, Edwin August, who, until this week, has been one of the chief assets in the pictures of the Universal company. He will be a regular member of the Western Vitagraph stock company until further notice.

Another result of the forthcoming reorganization will be that the number of persons on the Vitagraph payroll in southern California will be about doubled.

Fine Universal Pictures Coming.

This has been a busy week for the Universal company, but particularly for Director MacDonald, who works under the Powers brand and has turned out three pictures this week. One of them which will be released under the title "Fear" is a psychological study of the dread emotion, picturing a character who believes he has committed murder and escaping into the woods eludes the law, but not his own conscience. Another, "The Violet Bride," is a sociological study of a society climber, with a tragic ending. The third is a two-reel subject called "The Coming of Louis Mona," a religious romance somewhat reminiscent of Massenet's opera "Thais." A monk who reclaims a girl from a fast life, goes wrong himself and is in turn rescued by the girl and sent back to the church.

"The Battle of Bull Run," a historic Civil War picture with a thread of romance running through it, has just been completed and sent East for release. It is a three-reel subject directed by Frank Ford and good enough to have won the highest kind of praise from Aubrey M. Kennedy, general manager of the Western section of the Universal company. So anxious were the producers to insure the best results from the big battle scenes that they turned three cameras simultaneously upon all the scenes so that 9,000 feet of film was burned up on a 3,000-foot production. The picture will easily be in the same class with "Sheridan's Ride."

Phillips Smalley and Mrs. Smalley, who is Lois Weber when she works in pictures, have been producing another children's picture, that is, a picture for children as well as about children. It is called "Bobby's Baby" and is the story of a childless couple who plan to adopt the youngest of two orphan children. "Bobby," the elder, attempts to keep possession of his little brother and in the end the couple adopt two children instead of one. There are some tears and some smiles mixed up in this.

Bob Leonard, leading man in Otis Turner's company, has been a director himself this week. Turner has been busy with a project which will be referred to later and meanwhile Leonard turned out a sentimental heroic self-sacrifice drama of the highly improbable variety called "A Friend of the Family," in which an outsider who has worshipped the girl from afar, steps forward and takes upon himself the consequences of a stupid crime committed by the man the girl loves. The culprit is left free to marry the girl and the well-meaning goat gets what is coming to him. Leonard is not to blame for this. His good friends Willis and Dayton wished the script on him.

Dave Wall, Rex director, made a lot of fun out of a doctor and a matrimonial agency comedy this week. It will be entitled "Blind Marriage" when it reaches the screen.

Possibly there is some relation between David Horsley's recent visit to Los Angeles and the announcement that Otis Turner will begin work next week on a three-reel production of "Robinson Crusoe." Horsley hadn't been in the motion picture producing business six months before he made up his mind to put on this subject. He has always been going to do it next month. At least eight times he has bought properties and picked locations, but each time something happened to distract his attention. Now that Turner has said he is going to do it, however, nothing can stop the picture. Already a sailing vessel has been chartered for two weeks and unless it rains, the first scenes will be photographed next Monday morning. The scenes aboard ship will be taken in the vicinity of San Pedro. The pictures of Crusoe and his man Friday will be staged on Catalina Island. The DeFoe text will be closely followed.

The story of a proud father who sets his heart on marrying a count into the family, frames it up for his eldest daughter, is bitterly disappointed when the perverse girl falls in love with a young pauper and balks his plans, and unexpectedly gets his wish in the end when a younger daughter hits it off with the owner of the title and marries him without consulting anyone, is told in a comedy completed by Al E. Christie and his company this week. The name has not been selected yet, but it should be easy to select one from the list of those which have been used on the occasions when the various variations of the same story have appeared in the past. Another comedy which Christie completed this week is called "The Country Cousin." This is founded on the original theme of a young bachelor who is required to marry within a certain time or lose an inheritance. He marries the country cousin in the end. Richard Willis says this comedy is remarkable for the absence of the slapstick.

Two other Universal productions for the current week are "The Proof of the Man," a strong drama by Director Thomas Ricketts, and an Indian military picture, un-christened to date, for which Director McRae is responsible.

Biograph Players May Be Known.

There is a probability that that strange rule of the Biograph company which has been one of the mysteries of the motion picture industry for several years, namely, that the identities of all individuals connected with the company shall be kept secret from the public and the trade, so far as possible, will soon be abandoned. Current gossip here is to the effect that within a few weeks the public will be informed that there are actually human beings connected with the Biograph company and that the figures which the patrons of the motion picture theaters have seen on the screen when Biographs were being run are men and women, who have names and identities—and talents. The first departure from this long standing rule will probably take place when the names of the producers and of the cameramen appear on the screen preceding each picture. Whether the casts will be published has not been decided, but it is more than probable that within the next two or three months the producers will be getting credit. The name of David N. Griffith will thus become associated with a certain class of strong and highly artistic dramas. Dell Henderson will become famed for farce comedies and Tony O'Sullivan for thrilling melodramas. By the way, it may not have been announced that O'Sullivan is the new Biograph director in charge of the "Third Biograph."

Officials of the Biograph company have never deigned to give an explanation of their rule which forbade announcements concerning the identity of members of their several companies. Report has it that the reason is explained by a theory that the Biograph company is an institution and an entity; that the Biograph quality depends upon no individual, but is unchanging from year to year no matter who may come or who may go; and that to feature any individual in connection with the pictures would be to detract something from the name Biograph as an idea. Apparently the new theory is that the Biograph pictures have so thoroughly proven their quality and so firmly fixed themselves in the public esteem that giving credit to individuals can no longer injure them.

New Producing Company.

A new producing firm was organized in this city this week for the purpose of putting out a brand of motion pictures under the name "Seltagraph." The chief backers of the company are P. W. Horne and Frederick R. Eldredge. An explanation of how the name was chosen will disclose the aims of the new company. The first letter stands for "scenic," the second for "educational," the next for "local," the fourth for "topical," and the fifth for "artistic." By attaching the suffix meaning to write or illustrate, the completed word was manufactured. Mr. Horne is the son of "Billy" Horne, proprietor of Horne's motion picture theater, and leading amateur actor for the Biograph company. The father, not the son. He is the smiling fat man who invariably attempts to "hog" all the scenes in which he appears. Those who have any curiosity about him may detect him by his characteristic trait in any of the following forthcoming Biograph releases: "Uncle Tom's Cabin," "The Burglar," "A Horse On Bill."

Photoplayers Open Clubhouse.

With about $5,000 worth of new furniture and other equipment scattered about the building "The Photoplayers" formally opened their new clubrooms the night of March 8. The headquarters of the organization, which now has nearly 300 members, are located at 349 South Hill Street. On the first floor there is a library filled with bookcases, reading tables and comfortable chairs, a huge lounging room with a wide fireplace, settles, great deep club chairs and smoking stands, a Dutch stein room, a dining-room and a well equipped kitchen, in which there are accommodations for serving a banquet for between 300 and 400 persons, and a secretary's office. On the second floor there is a large billiard room, with two pool and two billiard tables, and seats around the walls, an English tap room, a dressing room, a large bathroom with showers, a committee room, two guests' chambers, a room for the steward and a storeroom. Every stick of furniture in the club was bought new, the walls were all decorated and they and the rugs, carpets, draperies and hangings form a color scheme in which soft warm browns predominate.

The cruel war among the motion picture exchanges in this city is still on. The independents, because of their large numbers and their determination to get business, have reduced the number of downtown theaters now using licensed pictures to six—the two Clune theaters, Tally's Broadway, Horne's, the Liberty and the Metropolitan. The General Film Company, however, continues to hold its business in the suburbs.

CHICAGO APPROVES MOTIOGRAPH MOTOR DRIVE.

A letter from the department of electricity of the city of Chicago signed by Ray Palmer, city electrician and addressed to the Enterprise Optical Manufacturing Company reads as follows:

"Gentlemen: The 'Motiograph' moving picture machine manufactured by you and covered by our Laboratory Report No. 150 is approved for motor drive in this city."

This will be of interest to users of projection machines in the city of Chicago. The Chicago approved equipment will be known technically as "No. 1002, Chicago," the number designating the number used in the Motiograph factory for convenience and the word "Chicago" defining the difference between the regular No. 1002 equipment of which there are three types. The Enterprise Optical Company have had a number of inquiries from Motiograph users asking if their equipment cannot be changed to correspond with the Chicago approved equipment. Owing to the expense of making this change, the Enterprise people advise that it will be more economical to trade in the old model and purchase the new Chicago approved equipment outright.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS., REDUCES LICENSE.

Mr. Charles E. Schneider, the New England picture theater equipment expert, was a visitor in the "World" office this week. He advises that Mayor Dennison of Springfield, Mass., has reduced the picture theater license from $75 to $50 per annum. Mr. Schneider was one of the first to get the benefit of the reduced license for his Lyric Theater in Springfield. We understand the concert license for the larger houses remains the same and the above reduction for the smaller picture theaters is only an act of fair play and justice.

THE SITUATION IN ALBERTA.

Every film shown in moving picture theaters in Alberta in the future must bear the stamp of approval of the provincial government, according to the provisions of the Theaters Act, which has just become effective. A board of not more than three censors, to be appointed by the lieutenant governor in council, sitting in Edmonton, has absolute control over the exhibition of any film in any theater or place of amusement.

The duty of inspecting the moving picture theaters to see whether the pictures and films are those approved by the government rests with the Royal North West Mounted Police, and all persons who may be appointed provincial police. The act provides that it shall be the duty of the chief of police or chief constable in cities, towns and villages to see that the new law is observed.

The license of any operator, lessee or owner of a moving picture theater may be suspended for displaying any picture or film upon which the audience cannot discern the imprint of the government's approval. Owner, licensee and operator also are required to pay a license fee. Neither will be held exempt should either throw upon the screen something daringly risky or outrageously brutal.

The proprietor of the moving picture theater cannot step across the street or out of the building while the operator shows the "sports" something extra on Saturday night and escape from being fined on the plea that when his back was turned the operator unreeled a "sketchy" film which the official critic of the government had never seen.

Whether it is the operator who is to blame, or whether it be the proprietor who may have trusted in the moral perceptibilities of an untried operator, matters not; the lieutenant-governor-in-council lies in wait with fines for both.

On summary conviction, the fine cannot be less than $50, nor more than $200, with costs, and "to a further fine of $25 per diem during the time after conviction during which such offense continues, and in default of immediate payment thereof to imprisonment for a period not exceeding three months."

KEMPTON GREEN.

Kempton Green is one of the leading men of the several Lubin Companies being under the direction of Joe Smiley. He comes from a professional family, his father being Joe Green, a vaudeville actor and his mother, Mary Clark, a light opera prima donna, all of Philadelphia. Before adopting the moving picture work young Green played considerably in vaudeville and burlesque. His work in the Lubin Studio is principally light comedy in which he has made himself quite valuable.

The Picture in the Pulpit.

By the Rev. E. Boudinot Stockton, S. T. B.

WE give below the catalogue of the educational pictures and photoplays suitable for educational and religious work that have been released during the month of January. The summary of the classification and the explanations and abbreviations were published in the issue of the World for March 8th, and are therefore not repeated here. The only two things that need annotation now are the two and three figures used in connection with some of the headings. The classification being decimal, two figures represent subdivisions of single figures and three figures subdivisions of two figures. Thus 24, Moral Theology, is the fourth subdivision of 2, Religion; and 912, Cartography is the second subdivision of 91, Geography. Place numbers are enclosed in brackets and can be used if desired in connection with any of the headings. Thus 39 is the heading number for Manners and Customs; 39 (51) is manners and customs in China and 91 (51) is geography, travel in and description of China.

CATALOGUE OF JANUARY RELEASES.

1. PHILOSOPHY AND PSYCHOLOGY.

Character and Environment.

The Man He Might Have Been. Edison 20. (15:292; n.c.p.; sp. rev. 15:138.) Conveys a strong lesson on the duty of parents to children especially as regards vocation in life.

The Dancer. Edison 27. See Duties: Moral Obligations under 24.

Fatalism.

The Ways of Destiny. Pathe 20. (3.r.; 15:172 & 290; 465; sp. rev. 15:247.) Intended to show how circumstances control one's destiny, but shows even better the overruling of God's providence.

Happiness.

The Greater Wealth. Selig 2. (14:1322; 15:264.) Contrasts the possession of a good child and poverty with the possession of a dissipated son and money.

The Family.

The Running Away of Doris. Edison 3. (14:1328; 15:263.) A good illustration of the evil of in-law kin interfering in the home.

The Unsullied Shield. Edison 7. (15:80; 265; sp. rev. 14:1278.) An excellent illustration of the doctrine of "noblesse oblige" and the duty of living up to a good ancestral tradition.

Temperance and the Drug Problem.

The Old Oaken Bucket. Lubin 23. (15:288; 571.) Exemplifies the evils of card-playing and drinking and the dangers besetting a country boy going to the city.

Absinthe. Gem 7. (n.s.p.; 15:265.) A young artist becoming addicted to absinthe is reformed through his love for and by the aid of a girl.

The Road to Transgression. Essanay 16. (15:290; 465.) A man in danger of becoming an opium fiend is brought to his senses by a vision.

2. RELIGION.

Providence.

The Ways of Destiny. Pathe 20. See Fatalism under 1.

Holy Scripture.

Saved from Sin. Majestic 26. (15:504; 573.) A very good illustration of St. Matthew 5:4, "Blessed are they that mourn."

The Psychology of Fear. Thanhouser 31. (15:506; 573.) Exemplifies, I St. John 4:18, "Perfect love casteth out all fear."

The Devil and His works.

Satan. Ambrosio. (4 r.; states' rights feature; sp. rev. 15:243.) Treats of the fall of man and of Satan's operations in the world since then.

24. MORAL THEOLOGY.

Human Actions.

Who Is the Savage? Lubin 21. (15:288; 571.) Points out the tendency in modern civilization to become godless and thoughtless and to foster breaches of the natural law.

Sins.

A Little Child Shall Lead Them. Selig 23. Extravagance. See below under Fifth Commandment.

The Lesson. Selig 30. (15:390; 679.) Jealousy.

The Commandments.

5th.

A Lesson from the Past. Cines 28. (15:382; n.c.p.; mfg. 15:475; sp. rev. 15:245.) Obedience to the command in one generation wins its reward in being instrumental in overcoming parental opposition in the next generation. In the case of Aunt Betty it is also a good illustration of the value of suffering and renunciation in the development of character.

His Old-Fashioned Mother. American 18. (15:200; 365.) A prosperous young man ashamed of his mother is shown the error of his ways.

The Tender-Hearted Boy. Biograph 23. (15:290; 571.) Good also for a sermon on duty to one's neighbor.

See also Character and Environment under 1.

A Little Child Shall Lead Them. Selig 23. (15:390; 572.) A true picture of some very common evils in married life to-day; extravagance; the weak failure to the husband to really cherish and protect his wife while he slaves to gratify her whims; the natural consequences in the wife's selfishness and playing with fire.

On the Threshold. Lubin 28. (15:384; 678.) Emphasizes the importance of mutual forbearance and acting on second thoughts in the relations between husbands and wives.

6th.

Thou Shalt Not Kill. Vitagraph 18. See Circumstantial Evidence under 3.

7th and 10th.

The Lorelei. Edison 26. (15:292; 572.) Emphasizes the evils of flirting and of the thoughtless encouragement of an illiterate man's admiration.

AUSTRALIAN BOUQUET FOR THANHOUSER.

Listen to his letter. It came all the way from South Australia, was signed "L. E. Smith, Inspector of Places of Public Entertainment of South Australia," and when C. J. Hite of Thanhouser, opened it he likely looked for some solemn, even critical, word on his pictures, as would become a censor's letter. Therefore you may imagine the Thanhouser head's surprise, when he read this:

"I have charge of the inspection department of motion picture theaters in South Australia, and your advance notes on films will be of service to me. I might inform you that your films appear to be great favorites with the public attending our picture theaters nightly. There is a great public demand for motion picture entertainments, and I am of the opinion that it is the right kind of entertainment for the people.

"I must take the opportunity of complimenting you on the excellent films that you produce weekly. They are splendid. Your films are clean and free from objectionable matter, and I might say uplifting for the people. A censor of films would not be needed if all producers turned out the same class of film matter that your good firm does."

MISS MARBURY TO SHOW EDUCATIONALS.

The name of Miss Elizabeth Marbury has spelled success in many a theatrical and dramatic undertaking in America, and the statement that she has now become intensely interested in the motion picture comes as one of the most important pieces of news in the history of kinematography. Beginning March 11, Miss Marbury will use the Berkeley Theater for three entire weeks, using exclusively the educational and religious pictures of the famous French firm of Gaumont. When one of the greatest powers in American dramatic circles thus undertakes, entirely of her own volition, to show the public the higher possibilities of the motion picture it is certainly splendid proof that kinematography has at last come into its own as an instrument of higher culture.

Doing Pretty Well.

R. J. TINDELL, Valdosta, Ga., sends a sample book of tickets in which 24 5-cent coupons to the Grand Theater are sold for $1. Mr. Tindell explains that he has contracted with the Valdosta High School to sell 1,000 of these books to the pupils, the school getting 20 per cent. of the sale. We wish that Mr. Tindell had explained just where this percentage goes to. If the school board gets it, it's graft in most places, but we take it that he has arranged with some of the high school societies to handle the sale on commission. Any way it is done, it is good work to get the high school pupils coming in. The tickets to the house are 5 and 10 cents, and the coupons are good for 5 cents each. The wording is so plain that we give the substance here for the benefit of others who may not have hit upon as concise an explanation:

5 cts

GRAND THEATER

Two Tickets Admit One Adult

One Ticket Admits Children
Under 12 Years of Age

The coupon book scheme is a good one. By the time a book is used up a fan is created, and there is a certain sense of superiority in having a bunch of tickets in your pocket. Next to the free pass, the coupon ticket is the most valuable in getting audiences. Under the deal as explained, Mr. Tindell gets only two-thirds of the face value, but it makes for business that will last. The scheme may be worked in conjunction with church and fraternal organizations to equally good effect. It is worth trying in a small town.

Another Scheme.

Another scheme of Mr. Tindell's is to give away 25 bungalow lots in a summer resort. We presume that the lots cost him nothing, being donated by the company to make other business, but a written "can't handle the crowds this week" speaks for itself. Mr. Tindell believes in newspaper advertising over posters, though he uses both forms. The advertisements are well displayed and well written. He takes a lot of space and then booms one feature in preference to trying to get all his coming features in. If you have one good talking point, it is better to display this to the best advantage than to crowd the space until nothing in particular stands out. He uses Universal subjects and has reproduced the front page frame of the old Universal house organ for his border in advertising. It works out very nicely.

Better Than Programs.

Mr. Tindell also sends a copy of a weekly giving stories of the independent releases and writes that he will add a 12-page form of advertisements of the house and local dealers to pay the cost of supplying these to his patrons. According to the dummy copy sent, his own form is placed at the back of the regular issue and bound in with staples, the original being saddle stitched. This makes it a little hard to handle the book, since the new staples come in about an eighth of an inch, and we think that it would be better to insert the extra form in the center of the magazine and again saddle stitch, but the minor point of stitching will not matter much to the fans where they are supplied with a 5-cent publication free, along with the weekly program. Mr. Tindell seems to be a good example of the small town hustler. We hope that he sends in more of his schemes and gives the full details. If you work a good scheme, and are willing to tell about it, make it complete by telling just how you worked it, as well as what you did.

One and Two Cents.

H. M. Morgan, of the Empress Theater, Slater, Mo., writes that his opposition makes a special rate of 1 cent to children under ten, and 2 cents for larger children at its bargain matinees. If this is a regular thing, and not a special stunt done but once or twice, it is a bad thing for both houses. Coming at a time when the effort is toward higher prices and a more dignified performance, this penny admission is cheapening the pictures to a point where a return cannot be made to a decent price even for specials. As the town has a population of but 3,500, competition must be sharp, but there is a difference between competition and murder and suicide. Better free admissions for a time, or free admissions masked by a coupon scheme, than penny pictures. If it reacted only against the offender it would be all right, but it spoils not only the two houses in town, but those in nearby places.

Mr. Morgan sends a very neat program on brown paper printed in black. The inside pages are given to the weekly program, and in from two to four lines a good idea of the film is had, because care has been taken in writing the copy for the printer. It is not revamped stuff, but original matter, written to fit.

With two-reel features on Wednesday and Saturday nights, we think it would pay Mr. Morgan to take some of the back page space for a longer chat, the space now going to an announcement of the house. When you get a feature, brag about it, and brag as much as you dare. Outside of this partial waste of the back page, the program is very well done, indeed.

By Wire.

Charles Blackstone, Jr., of the Blackstone Theater, Martinsville, Ind., writes:

> I have been reading your advertising department for a long time, and it has done wonders for our business. I am sending you a little scheme that we employed to run our attendance up to 1,200 persons. We delivered these in person, knocking at the door and waiting until someone came, that they might see that we took a personal interest.

The scheme is a fake telegram that is very well done, though they do not make the error of trying to convey the impression that it is an actual wire. The first glance at the envelope suggests this, but the wording quickly makes it plain that it is not an actual telegram, and so reassures. We think that if the imitation is so plain as to deceive, the shock to the average recipient is too strong and is apt to be resented, but in this case the lettering quickly undeceives. Under the "Number," for example, comes "Seats 400," and the "Charges" are 5 and 10 cents. We give in rough form the heading and ending of the message, the rest being derived from the Selig press matter:

DAY LETTER.
THE BLACKSTONE PHOTOGRAM COMPANY.
Photograms to All the City. Four Hundred Seats.
Rates, 5c and 10c a Trip.

| RECEIVED | TIME | CHECK |
|---|---|---|
| Just in Time. | First Show, 6:30. | Previous Engagements. |

SEND the following Day Letter emphasizing the Important Program for TONIGHT, 191..

One word from the management of the Blackstone Theater: We will absolutely guarantee these pictures. We want your confidence; we cannot get it unless we show you, and that is what we will illustrate to you tonight.

Thanking you for your patronage, we remain,
Yours very truly,
BLACKSTONE THEATER.

The attraction was the Selig "Kings of the Forest," a reel that will live up to the booming it received. We like the tone of the personal guarantee It argues a management that's "right."

Noise Like a Regular.

The Isis News, Trinidad, Colo., makes a "noise" like a regular paper. It is something more than an advertising scheme, and we do not think that it will remain a four-page paper very long. It's going to be a good advertising medium, because it is bright and newsy, and while the present issue gives but five foreign advertisements, it is only a matter of time when the local tradesmen will ask to be permitted to come in.

And the secret is that the News, unlike some other house papers, is not too busy with its own program to get out some stuff that gives a tang to the pages. There is some local matter that has nothing to do with the pictures, and in the current issue the editor offers to pay regular money for local daffydils that may be accepted for use.

Along local lines, there was a recent benefit for the high school gymnasium fund that netted $100, and a report of the basket ball games by the high school team. We are going to watch the News, because it was born hustling, but we think they are rushing the season when they start each issue with a new volume. Only three issues, and yet this last is Volume 3. It is better to hold to three-month volumes, with the volume number, the number in the volume and the whole number. A reference to the front of this paper—not the front page, but the page with the index—will show what we mean, though this paper does not use the whole number, as some do. If you have the time to get out the right sort of a weekly paper there is nothing more valuable in advertising, but it must carry a lot of catchy stuff, and not merely talk about the films you are going to have for the week. Listen to this:

> This paper gives news that is not given in any of the other papers of Trinidad and is in a field of its own. Last week was the first time that a program for a week in advance was ever given by a motion picture house in Trinidad, and we already know of a number of instances where the program was clipped out by the thrifty housewives and kept for reference. We believe this habit will grow.

Too Quiet.

R. B. Cable, of the Cable Theater, Knoxville, Tenn., writes that he is trying to cater to those who appreciate the best, keeping away from the sensational and not overdoing banner and poster displays in the lobby. He wants to know what we think of his advertising.

We are strong for the clean, attractive lobby, not cluttered up with all sorts of frames and banners, and we think that straight picture houses that offer their wares with dignity stand a better chance of getting good business than some of the noisy ones, if they are in the sort of locality where such an appeal takes best, but we think that it is possible to be so dignified as to lose tricks.

One of the advertisements is a newspaper announcement of "The Shaughraun," attractively worded, but badly displayed. There is a capital line, "Be with us in Ireland today," but it is set in 10-point and hardly shows up, while the name of the house is played up in 36-point that would be 42 if any of the letters had descenders.

"The Shaughraun" appeals particularly to the Irish patrons, and that "Ireland" should have been at least an 18-point, perhaps this arrangement:

Be with us in IRELAND
Today.

The first and third lines should be 10-point, and the Ireland in 18. A 60-point "speaker" cut of a man in a dress suit takes up a lot of room, without helping the text any, and the title of the subject runs in a 24-point that looks smaller because it is set in lower case.

For the moment "The Shaughraun" is more important than the Cable Theater, and should have been given much larger type. Do not use ornaments unless they have some bearing on the text, and not then unless you have so much space that you can get the proper display and still have room for the cut. Make it possible to read at a glance the title of the attraction. Here 24 points are wasted in the "The" of the title, where a 10-point letter would have done, giving the more important "Shaughraun" an additional 12 points, with two points to spare. With a condensed type the line would run even in single column in 36-point and attract twice the attention.

The other piece of advertising is a card calling attention to the house. We think we would have given more space to the fact that the house was run along lines of decency and dignity, a particularly pleasing place to particular people. That is of more importance than the fact that they pay for their program what would bring 20 reels a day of cheaper film. That doesn't make as much of a hit with the better class of people as the suggestion that more money will not produce a better three or four reel program. The card is well printed and well phrased, but the argument is a trifle weak.

Like Mr. Chaney's.

C. R. Blubaugh, of the Vaudette Theater, Fort Scott, Kan., sends in his first weekly program and wants it criticised. We'll hazard the guess that Mr. Blubaugh has one of the old Chaney programs, for his layout is rather like that, though he takes more space for himself and carries but three advertisements.

Mr. Blubaugh points out that it is a rush job, and that may excuse the various type faces used for titles. Most persons do not know why printing is good or bad, but they do appreciate good work and are influenced by the poor. Half a dozen styles of bold type are used for the titles of the week's offerings, and this does not make for uniformity and neatness. We think that between the cast and a running description we would prefer the latter with mention of the stars, throwing the names of these stars in full-face of the same point as the body type.

It is on the front page that the lack of display is most noticeable. There is a cut of Miss Turner as Dolly Dillard in "The Signal of Distress," and the caption is run in 8-point Roman, where a black letter should have been used, or at least used for the name of the star and her play. The underline is even less conspicuous. There is a difference between heavy type and a smear of ink, and these light lines rob the front page of strength and character. It is a good start, but we think that we'd have a long talk with the printer and try and make him a little ashamed of himself. It is not a good job.

Again Old English.

So far as the stock is concerned, the Gordon Brothers Amusement Company issue a very classy card and invitation for the opening of their new house in some unnamed city, but they use the same old-fashioned Old English type that strains the eyesight. We wish they would get the printer to reset the matter in the various 6 and 10-point sizes of Copperplate Gothic, with Engraver's Shaded for the leading lines, and then see how much better it is. We think, too, that it is a good plan to use the name of the city and state on the card, even if it is going only to the inhabitants of a certain section. It gives the suggestion of completeness.

Deals With Facts.

E. J. Georgople, of the American Theater, Elyria, Ohio, takes a full page in both the local papers every week, and he says it pays him. It does, because he has something to say in those page ads. He doesn't slap in the first thing that comes along. He writes stuff. These five "facts" that form part of a current advertisement should interest others:

> When E. J. Georgople tells you that "The American" Theater is the best, most sanitary and safest place in town, he tells you the facts and he can prove it to you.
> The next time you go into the "Largest Theater," look for a certificate of inspection showing you that the theater has been inspected by the proper authorities of the state and I'll say you will not be able to find it there or in any other theater in Elyria except "The American." Isn't that proof enough to show you that this is the safest theater in town?
> When I say you breathe pure, fresh air in here I do not misrepresent. I show you that you do. Last week an "Ozone Pure Airifier" was installed which purifies all the air in the theater. Look for one of these machines in the other theaters. The next time you come into "The American" you will see it on the west wall, doing its work. It's made expressly for that purpose, and when I saw it would do something for the health of my patrons a machine was installed, regardless of cost.
> You perhaps noticed the moving picture screen has been moved back 15 feet from where it was. Why? To improve the pictures. The screen is now in a box-like compartment, giving the screen a tunnel effect, putting it in total darkness, improving the brilliancy of the "Movies," and if you sit down in the very first row you will be 20 feet away from the picture.
> New lenses for the machines were also installed, at an enormous cost; but it was done for your benefit, and "The Public Be Pleased" is my motto.
> You are not seeing or letting your children see any pictures here that I would not want my family to see, and I see them all before the show opens, and if they are the least objectionable to me to look at they go back to the exchange and are replaced by other ones.
> When you come here you see the finest variety of pictures that you do anywhere. I do not believe in quantity—it's quality, and if you miss a day at the American you'll regret it.

Positive and Pertinent.

Now and then there is a tendency to drop into a paragraph in all capitals clear across the page, that hurts the temper and the eyesight, but most of the stuff is positive and pertinent. He states his facts tersely and convincingly, and it's the sort of stuff that gets the confidence of the patron, which is what is most needed.

We would like to get on the mailing list of the American and stay there.

Real Reading.

The Isis News, Trinidad, Colorado, goes on its joyous way with a single issue to a "volume," but otherwise it is all right. It puts in more and more real reading matter each issue and it has grown into a peppery little sheet with plenty about the house but enough regular matter to coax the leader clear through to the back page. February 28th was carnation day and the first thousand ladies to attend were presented with those flowers. If the Cameraphone Bulletin man doesn't watch out the Isis will catch up with him. We should like to see more of these papers issued; at least one in every town, but it's not an easy matter to get out even a four-pager with the right sort of reading matter. We've had a lot of laughs out of the Isis. Note that we say "out of," not "at." We note from the last issue that the Star Theater, Cripple Creek, is thinking of getting out a house paper. One of these days we'll have a press club of theater paper editors.

Can You Beat It?

We know of at least two other houses with printing plant attachments, but a printing plant and a bill posting organization, too, is something new. Let's hear from some of the rest of you.

Mr. Johnson sends one of the old dodgers for the purpose of comparison. We suppose that he will continue to use them occasionally, but the program is pretty complete. He uses stiff yellow card with one fold. The front is given to the special for the week and below is the comprehensive line:

> Issued every Monday to enable the public to keep in touch with the excellent attractions to be seen at the Dreamland.

The second page is given to chatty paragraphs of a general nature, the program for the week is listed on the third, and the fourth carries a paragraph with a punch.

The proofreading is very bad, but in other matters typographical there is little room for comment, though we suggest that in the program the titles of the film go in full face instead of Roman capitals. It should be upper and lower case and not all capitals, at that. If the back page display is home work there is someone around the plant who can set type right and the other matters will work themselves out. In any event it is a decided advance.

In the photograph sent most of the advertising display is for local concerns and proprietary goods. We think that Mr. Johnson should have a small section of the fence for himself instead of giving it all up to the outsiders.

Roused Curiosity.

Sid S. Levy, of the Roseland Theater, New Orleans, recently had Edison's "The Dangers of the Street." He sent out the letter given below in sealed envelopes with the printed address, "To the lady of the house." This is an old dodge, but it generally works. Inside was a sheet of note paper in imitation typewriting. It will be noted that not a word of real explanation is given. That's where the pull lies. The women go to see what it is that all the fuss has been made about and they stay because they are interested. This is the letter:

> DEAR MADAM:
> Perhaps you are the mother of a happy family,—you may be a young mother,—it makes no difference: a mother's heart is always the same, and it takes much to change it. You would be very sorry if something dreadful would happen to your dear ones: safeguard them and for yourself see what dangers they are surrounded by, especially if not in the care of their mother.
> You will be doing a kind act to tell your next door neighbor to come with you to Roseland Theater, Frenchman and Chartres Sts., to-night, Thursday, February 20th. Then you will see for yourself how to protect your little ones and avoid many a heart ache.
> Sid S. Levy, Mgr.

There was no chance for a back kick because the subject made good for the announcement, a thing to be carried in mind when trying the mysterious idea.

From the U-Kum.

The U-Kum Theater sends in a sheaf of well printed slips and carries on all the line, "The theater really worth while." It is a catchy line and one that will last.

The house has been issuing half price coupons, but one of the slips announces that hereafter the admission will be a flat ten cents with a performance lasting an hour and twenty minutes.

The PHOTOPLAYWRIGHT

Promises Reform.

T. E. Letendre writes that the February-March issue of the Photoplay Author will be along about March 1st. We used to know a man who had a habit of doubling up the numbers of his magazine. He's in jail now; but Mr. Letendre promises not only reform, but sends a picture of a type-setting machine that will enable him to get his stuff up in time. He adds that he thinks he can make it a regular 32-page issue, at that. We hope he can and does. Arthur Leeds, of the Essanay, who is to be associated with Professor Eisenwein in his photoplay course, is going to be one of the more or less regular contributors in future.

The Photoplay Author has a good field, but it must not think that because it has to do with motion pictures it needs an intermittent movement. That's for projection machines.

Post Graduate.

A school pupil writes that she follows the instruction of her teacher and goes regularly to photoplay theaters, counting the scenes and the number of settings, but that this does not seem to help much.

Very naturally not. We advise that she keep on going to the photoplay theaters, but that, instead of looking at the number of scenes and settings, she regard the theme of the story. It is all right to study the technical detail of the number of scenes and settings used, but once this is fixed—and half a dozen visits will settle this—it is important that the play itself be studied. If a drama makes a particular impression on you, see what it is in the drama that makes this appeal. Stay in for the next show; see it again. If this comedy is better than usual, try and determine just where it differs from that tiresome comedy you saw the other day. Take the story, the action, the personality of the players. See how important each factor is. Some plays are good because well played; others, poorly played, still are good because the story is too strong to be spoiled by poor acting.

Particularly look for the after effect. See if the crime story is remembered as vividly the next day as is something with a cleaner motive. Perhaps the personality of the leading player lingers, and not the play itself; see if that isn't generally the case with the play depending on the crime motive. When you've passed the elementary of the scenes and sets, take the high school of the theme, the college course of technical tricks and the post graduate of heart interest. Don't keep on counting scenes all the rest of your career or you'll never advance.

Cut This Out.

We want to make a complete list of the stories that are tabooed because they have been done so frequently. We are going to add to this list, and will appreciate additions from editors and writers. Send in your suggestions, please, and meantime cut this out and add as the rest come in. These will do for the starter:

(1) The brother and sister, orphaned in infancy, parted by adoption and reunited in later life. They fall in love, only to discover the blood relationship.

(2) The little child stolen by gypsies. Restored to her family in later life, generally by means of a favorite song.

(3) The discharged workman who goes to do injury to his former employer, but who performs some rescue instead and gets his job back.

(4) The poor man who attends a fashionable dinner. He conceals in his clothing delicacies for his sick wife. A ring or other valuable is lost. He alone of the party refuses to be searched. The valuable is found and his story comes out.

(5) The man who assumed his brother's crime for the sake of the girl he loves, and whom he thinks loves the brother.

Sincerity.

Now and then you'll run into the blustering, roistering chap who slaps everyone on the back, who exudes good humor and heartiness, and yet who doesn't seem to happen around when things go wrong. You've met him. And perhaps it has been your good fortune to know one of those quiet, kindly chaps, who never is noisy, who does not jar your mood, whether it be grave or gay; who is the first to share your pleasures and griefs alike. He's a real man, and always the same. We hope you've met him, too.

Which one do you like the best, the chap who's all on the surface, or the one who is man clear through?

Then what makes you think that the noisy, blatant story is going to be as good as the one that touches deep down, that is sincere and genuine?

Give your writings sincerity. Give them the real grip on the decent emotions. Make them get past the hurrah of the moment, to last in memory long after that blustering story written around the crash of two locomotives or the explosion of a few tons of dynamite has been utterly forgotten. The explosion or collision is remembered, but the story is gone forever, while you can remember some stories that you saw last year or the year before. If you keep on writing that stuff you'll get a reputation that will be worth more to you than the flash career that may follow a spree of sensationalism. Be one of the make-good fellows. It takes a little longer to make that sort of reputation, but in the long run you'll be the gainer.

Counting the Cost.

Carl M. Chapin, who is better known as an author than photoplay writer, sends us his slip. It contains some memoranda that we have not seen in other slips. He has, among other things, the number of hours it takes him to write a story, the price, the cost and the net gain.

We suggested that it was rather elaborate, and he replied that it might be, but that he found these details important in counting cost and result, and that a careful study of the matter frequently led him away from one type of story to another showing a greater average profit.

Did you ever stop to count costs? Did you ever set a flat value on your work by the hour, and then see what type of work paid you best? Did you make a greater profit on that split comedy for $15 than on that three-reel for $60, or did the one-reel drama for $35 pay best of all?

It is not easy to value time by the hour in brain work, since it is not possible to work a given number of hours a day, or even an average number of hours a day, but roughly you can count cost.

Suppose that you work thirty hours a week, and average $60 a week. That is $2 an hour. If it takes you three hours to write a play that pays you $30, your profit is $24. If it takes the thirty hours to write a story for which you receive $100, your profit is $40. If you write two plays in six hours for $30 each, you've made more money than in selling a story for $100, for you have consumed but six of your thirty hours, and have twenty-four left for other work.

But you can't write a play every three working hours. Perhaps in an effort to write a third play you will sit and stare at the machine, with never a thought. But you can write a fiction story, so write a fiction story and two plays. Get the idea? Work it out to suit your own case.

The Hang Fire.

Someone told us the other day that he had about fifty plots, and that he had a hundred half-finished plots. "I get tired of them and set them aside," he explained.

That's no way to feel about the way you hope to earn money, whether it is your vocation or your avocation. Don't let it lick you or you'll be licked by everything you tackle. If you get a plot, keep at it until it is a good plot—so good a plot, indeed, that it sells for more or less money, but do not set it aside half done because you are tired of it. See it through to the end, and then start all over again and see if you can't see it through to a better end. If you let your first plot defeat you you'll have a glorious succession of defeats until the close of your days, but once you tackle the game with the determination to master it or burst you'll gain the victory and will smile at what once seemed to be the difficulty of the task. If a man will write fifty photoplays and give to them the close study and application that he should, he will be the better for having done so, even though none may go through to production. He will have trained his mind and imagination, he will have gained in initiative, and he'll be hundreds of dollars better off in any other line of work. But the man who lies down when he is half through and turns to something else never will carry any one thing to a successful completion and he'll pass from failure to failure his whole life through.

If you've a script that has you beaten, dig it out and give it a return engagement. In the end you'll conquer not alone that script, but the business of writing photoplays, always granting that you have an imagination that can evolve plots.

Saving Face.

A New York school of photoplay has a new scheme for saving its face. It has arrived at the fact that to offer its course for $15 and then drop to $4 is rather inclined to react. Now it introduces the "deferred payment" plan. You pay the four and when you make your first hundred you send in another $16. They know that few of their pupils are likely ever to make as much as $100 writing plays, but now and then one will and they get $16 velvet, while in any event they can cut the price to the four without seeming to make a suspicious cut. Not the Chinese alone "save face."

In the Spirit Pioneer.

"Pan Jan," whose letterheads prove him a Japanese "Laborer, Craftsman, Student, in the Spirit Pioneer," sends from Los Angeles a clipping and wants to know: "Why is it that such dramas as these, a truth, a natural fact, and a story which melts our hearts, uplifts and renews our confidence in humanity must not be shown on the screen?"

The clipping tells the somewhat familiar story of the thief who finds a mother in difficulties and turns doctor. "Pan Jan," who seems much distressed, is gently advised that the reason this must not be shown is because it has been shown so very often that people get tired of seeing it repeated. We think that "Pan Jan" read, in the Dramatic Mirror, Mrs. Beta Breuil's very able explanation of how she got around one of these plays. The new twist that will save an old plot lay in the fact that the thief came back, after a banking trip to the Klondike or something, and married the lady. In such a case, as Mrs. Breuil pointed out, it was necessary to make him not a thief, that the interest in the man's love for the woman might not suffer. That's the difference.

But there are lots of plots that are denied the writer, though they occur in real life, and there are good reasons. Men are hanged, but the mimic execution would nauseate. Men grow seasick, sometimes with comedy effect, but it will not look pretty on the screen. With so many, so very many virile plots to select from (and "Pan Jan" has one of the oldest and finest literatures in the world to back up his American discoveries), we fail to see why anyone should complain at the exclusion of the crime themes. It is not the crime that makes the strength. It's the story. Get a clean theme about clean people, and do not glorify thieves and murderers.

Getting the Value.

It's about time to remind the new readers that a lot of yelling is not excitement, but just noise. We have just laid aside a story in which the hero is threatened with arrest. A tattoo mark is the only thing to connect him with the crime, and he has a bunch of alibis. The worst that could happen to him would be detention for a day or two, and then he would be in possession of a perfectly good lawsuit for false arrest, but never in a million years could the other man's crime be fastened upon him; yet the story makes as much fuss over this false alarm situation as though the men were coming to lynch him, the gun is taken from the wall, and all that sort of thing, and we almost begin to believe the chap guilty.

Yesterday a story hinged on an attempt to make false entry of a mining claim. We put the matter up to a lawyer in the office who knows about such things, giving the evidence that could be obtained in ten minutes after the attempt, and he assured us that the person taking the papers could be arrested for robbery even before the entry was attempted, and that in no case could the plot succeed. That was the legal side of it, and the common sense side was the same. The thing was absurd because impracticable, and the fuss over nothing did not interest because we knew that it was all a faked excitement.

If the hero ropes a tree on the other side of a chasm and pulls himself across, inch by inch, to save the heroine from a band of Indians, the incident is heroic and noble. If he goes to all this trouble just to tell the girl that supper is ready, and we know all the time that this is what he is up to, we can't get interested in a darned fool who doesn't know enough to yell.

The noble action for a noble cause is sensational and heroic, but the daring deed without adequate reason is silly. If your story is not naturally such as to lend itself to heroic deeds, do not suppose that by adding such deeds you can make it heroic unless you change the basis of the plot to give some reason for such action. Lots of beginners—those who began in a correspondence school, particularly—think that if they have enough sensational action they have a sensational story, where many times they turn their plot into burlesque.

It is not the sensational action that counts. It is the motives and causes that underlie the action.

For Script Covers.

Few authors use script covers, and fewer still have them printed up, but perhaps our cover printing will help some who merely back their script with a sheet of the same paper. Fold it into thirds and type this in:

In 25 Scenes.

| | Sets. | Scenes. |
|---|---|---|
| Interior .................... | 4 | 9 |
| Exterior .................... | 8 | 16 |
| Busts ...................... | | |

This enables the editor to tell at a glance the number of sets and locations required and the proportion of exterior to interior scenes. On our backs we also run the line:

Farce Comedy Drama

This, by crossing off part, serves, for farce, comedy, drama and, with a hyphen, for farce-comedy or comedy-drama.

Too Lively.

Lately we've been corresponding with a man with a lot of imagination and no balance wheel. He'll turn out a plot almost while you wait, but you'll wait a long time to get the right sort of plot. He is fertile and imaginative, but he is too vivid. He conceives the most impossible situations, but he can't seem to make these impossible situations possible, though we think he could if he would slow the wheels down to a more normal revolution.

There are dozens of such writers, and they are an irritation to editors who realize that if they didn't think up such wild stuff they probably could think some capital stories. Once in a very long time there comes a Lewis Carroll, whose whimsical flights of fancy are tempered by sound sense, and their nonsense becomes delightful, but the merely erratic does not impress. Temper your imaginations—if you have that sort—with a little common sense. If you lack the critical judgment, get someone to help you who has it. A fertile imagination is one of the tools of photoplay, but too much imagination is as bad as too little.

Cold Nerve.

The Rev. Dr. Stockton supplied his idea of the probable solution of a magazine mystery the other day, and promptly came a letter from a novice, asking him to assist the writer, on the plea that the experienced Dr. Stockton might have been willing to accede to the request, but the script was a downright theft of a current novel, and he very promptly and properly turned the letter down.

The man who can do no better than to steal another's ideas does not deserve help, and as a rule the man who can think out his own ideas will work out his own salvation unassisted. If you can't think, don't steal. You'll only be found out, probably before you land your first script.

Just Plain Clips.

It's an old story to a lot of you, but there are a lot of writers who still fasten their scripts together in permanent form. Some even fasten them on the side, so that they open like a book.

Unless you are particularly requested to use staples, use the paper clip that does not perforate the paper. Let the script go out so that by removing a single slip the sheets lie loose in the editor's hand. As he reads he'll pass the sheets to the bottom, so that when the last sheet is reached he'll slip that under and have the sheets as they were in the first place. With the permanent binding the sheets buckle and crease, and two readings necessitates recopying.

It's the little things that count with the busy and sometimes nervous editor.

Inquiries.

NOTE—No questions can be replied to by mail. Look for your answers here. A list of addresses to which photoplays may be sent will be supplied on receipt of a STAMPED AND ADDRESSED ENVELOPE.

FLOSSIE C. P.—G. H. H. writes that Crane Wilbur has written "No Matter Who or What You Are, It's Great to be In Love," also another very pretty little thing called "Moonlight." This is not an advertisement. Go get the songs and lets hear what you think of them.

G. H. H.—We have told Flossie as you may see above. Alfred Paget was the Smuggler Captain in The Lesser Evil. Get your titles right. Biograph did not make The Awakening in the last two years. It made Her Awakening. Such things as His, Her, The, etc., are important if you want to be answered. We are paid by the job, not by the day, answering questions. Bobby in The Genius of Fort Lapawai was Charles Bartlett. We like you, G. H. H., but please be exact.

RUBENA—Don't ask us why you don't see Cleopatra. Ask your photoplay theater man. If enough of you ask him you propably will see it. What girl do you mean? We've stopped answering questions about "the girl." "the fellow," etc. The doctor tells us we're threatened with heart disease. We know where Miss Lawrence has disappeared to. It's in New Jersey not very far from New York City.

J. H. H.—We are going to answer only your last question. The limit as to the number of questions to be asked at one time is about a third of the way down your list. We do a retail, not a wholesale business.

L. B. C.—The spy in "The Mexican Spy" was Edwin Carewe. We do not place that second title.

ARDATH—If you can't write in ink on a sheet of paper we cannot answer you. Your post card inquiries in pencil are so badly rubbed we can just about get the signature.

H. J. J.—Both companies named are working but are not releasing at present. We do not know what hit Yale Boss at Edison or Kenneth Casey and Adele De Garde at Vitagraph. Miss Buckley has not returned to Lubin. We think the recent release was one held until a retake could be made of some faulty scenes. Write the Edison Company, Kinetograph Department, Orange, N. J., for the desired photograph.

G. R. B.—The minister in Oil and Water was Walter Miller.

F. H. B.—Harry D. Carey was the hunchback in Brothers. We do not know the name of the non-committal lady in the same film. Can any reader oblige the Identifier?

C. E. D.—Gus Pixley was the messenger and Miss Peggy Reid the wife in She Is a Pippin. Lionel Barrymore was the father and Harry Carey the thief in Adventure in the Autumn Woods. We have no cast for An Absent Minded Burglar.

J. J. C.—Even so, Ed Coxen is with American. Miss Jane Wolfe was the witch in The Witch of the Mountains.

J. K.—Sign your own, not an assumed name next time. In When Youth Meets Youth; Carlyle Blackwell was Bernard and Paul C. Hurst, Will. Miss Marian Cooper was the girl, Guy Coombs her sweetheart and Hal Clements the drummer in The Girl in the Caboose.

R. H. D.—Licensed companies operate under licenses granted by the Motion Picture Patents Company. Independent companies proclaim their independence of this company and operate without licenses. There are companies working in Colorado at odd times. For which and when follow the news in this paper. James Cruze was the clerk in Napoleon's Luck Stone. Keystone wants only split reel comedies as has been stated.

A. W.—Since you live in Yonkers you might apply to Pilot for a job as extra, but since you have done no "public acting" you'll stand about the same chance that a snowball is reputed to have in certain warm localities.

A. S. W.—We will not publish in our esteemed paper the list of addresses of manufacturers. If you'll slant your eye up the column you'll see our offer to send such a list if you'll send a stamped and addressed envelope. It has been there right along. And if you'll think it over there have been published in the advertising pages the addresses of more than "three or four companies."

L. L.—The title role in Lubin's The Drummer was played by Allen Hale. The title in Lubin's The Miser was John H. Smiley. Edwin Carewe was his son. Miss Ernestine Morley was the girl he married. Romaine Fielding was Lowry in The Power of Silence and Miss Mary E. Ryan his daughter. Robyn Adair was the nephew. Harold Lockwood and George Hernandez were the millionaire vagabonds in the Selig of that title.

F. M. B.—Give something more than Los Angeles as an address and we'll pay some attention to your letter. Communicate with the company before you write us again. Common sense should have suggested this course in the first place.

J. A. M.—David Thompson was the eye specialist in The Psychology of Fear.

C. A. C.—Joe King was the private in His Sense of Duty.

D. M. W.—It is necessary to number scenes. Run synopsis, cast and action in that order, starting the action on a fresh page. It is anything but a waste of time to get your leaders just right. Good leaders often help the sale of the play.

J. M. P.—American's "The Loneliness of Neglect," was released December 30, 1912. Have not the release date of the Powers. It must be back of June 30, 1911. No cast for "The Stolen Play." Miss Bessie Sankey was Nell in "Broncho Billy's Brother." Robert E. Green was Jack's Grandfather in "The Lipton Cup."

J. R. S.—Miss Hazel Neason was the typist in "Jimmy's Job." Miss Miriam Nesbitt was the lady whose features gave title to "Her Face." Vitagraph produced the former and the Edison company the latter. Query the companies as to copies.

SALEM.—We do not follow the decisions of the Censorship Board.

New York Operators' Ball.

On Sunday evening, March 23rd, Local Union No. 35 I. A. T. S. E., will hold its annual ball at the Amsterdam Opera House. The event is expected to be one of the notable affairs of New York filmdom. Preparations are being made on an elaborate scale, and we believe that after the ball is over the New York operators will have every reason to be proud of their success. Slides advertising the ball will be shown in all theaters employing union operators. The various committees are hard at work, and have been for some time past.

Transparent Screen.

From the Motion Picture Screen Company, Shelbyville, Ill., comes the information that orders can be filled for transparent glass screens ranging in size from 6 x 8 to 13 feet 6 inches by 18 feet. Where there is ample room so that the machine can be set not less than 40 to 50 feet back of the screen, a transparent screen of this kind is an ideal proposition. It gives a very brilliant picture and the machine is removed entirely outside of the theater. It is also possible, by the use of a shadow box and this type of screen, to project a picture in the broad, open light of the day, in such places as public parks etc. Moreover there are a number of uses to which such a screen can be put. And while I am about it let me say that our good friend Rembusch is still working away at the mirror screen proposition, endeavoring to still further improve it. Many letters reach me in which inquiry is made regarding the efficiency and desirability of the mirror screen. I wish to say that, provided due care be exercised in selecting the type of finish best adapted to the house it is to be used in, I regard the mirror screen as an ideal projecting surface. But with a wide house the rough finish should be used and the satin finish should never be installed except in a very narrow room where all of the audience sits practically directly in front of the screen. The only thing that can now be said against the mirror screen is its cost, but when considering this it must be remembered that, barring accidents it is practically indestructible and will last a lifetime.

Operating Room Location.

Columbus, Ohio, seeks the following information:

> If you were building a house to seat 1,200 people, having a lower floor and balcony, would you place the operating room on the lower floor, at the extreme top of the balcony, or at the foot of the balcony? I would much prefer to place it at the extreme top of the balcony, not only for fire protection and to avoid possible panic, but also for the appearance of the house. Still I do not wish to sacrifice the appearance of the picture.

In order to reply intelligently and briefly to this question I would have to know the height of the center of the screen from the floor and exactly how high the front and the rear of the balcony floor would be above the center of the screen. Unless the pitch in projection be excessive I think it would be, taking everything into consideration, best to place the operating room at the top of the balcony. Theoretically the bottom of the balcony would be the ideal place, since thus a greater percentage of the people in the entire house would be nearer the plane of projection than with the operating room located at any other point. But the gain would probably not be sufficient to justify the marring of the house and the sacrifice of seating capacity made necessary by such location. I would not consider placing it on the lower floor at all. If you build your room in accordance with the plans set forth in the new hand book and equip it with fire shutters hung in the manner described, and installing a vent flue two feet in diameter through the roof as therein set forth, you need have no fear of fire panic in your house. But a newer and better idea is to use a piece of film just above the spreader over the film box and machine apertures, instead of the waxed cord as suggested, attaching the master cord to either end of the strip of film by a suitable clip. This would absolutely cause the instantaneous closing of the wall shutters and the opening of the vent flue when a fire starts.

Bernhardt in Brownsville, Texas.

Our good friend Dittmann, proprietor of the Dittmann Theater, Brownsville, Texas, sends in some newspaper clippings concerning his successful running of the Sarah Bernhardt films. One paragraph reads as follows:

> How wonderful to think that she came all the way to Brownsville last night, to play to an audience, many of whom might otherwise never have had the opportunity of seeing her. To those who had seen her in the larger cities it gave the coveted opportunity of attending another Bernhardt performance. For this rare privilege we must thank the moving picture film makers, and more especially our Mr. Dittmann, for his enterprise in bringing this splendid attraction to Brownsville.

I mention this matter for the reason that it calls pointed attention to what a real boon moving pictures are, in that it allows the resident of the small town to view the performance of the world's most famous actors. Without the moving pictures millions of people who are now enabled to view a performance by Bernhardt would never have had that pleasure.

From South Africa.

Mr. Edwin M. Jarvis, Alhambra Picture Palace, Cape Town, South Africa, writes:

> In this far off corner of the globe, we are always interested readers of the Projection Department. In a current copy there is an inquiry regarding condensers and, as a somewhat similar query has just come to hand, I would esteem it a favor if you would give your valuable assistance in the matter. With a 20 foot picture and a 70 foot throw, using a 3 inch focus Cine lens, of what focal length should a condenser be to give a perfectly even white light, without undue flooding of the gate of the machine?

This question of condenser focal length is an exceedingly hard one, Brother Jarvis, and does not always seem to work out the same, due, I think, to the fact that condensers vary widely in the amount of spherical aberration that different lenses possess. With a 3 inch e. f. objective lens, usually the best result is had by using two 6½ condensers. But I understand that out there a great many of you use the three-lens system, with a menicus next the light. With this system I am unfamiliar, so far as its necessary focal length is concerned. The best advice I can give you is to get two 6½ lenses and one 7½. Try the two 6½ lenses first and then one 6½ and one 7½ with the 6½ next the light.

Some Errors.

Mr. C. L. Croll, Denver, Col., writes thusly concerning the new hand book:

> The handbook reached me a few weeks ago, and the new King James version is certainly good, though I have discovered two or three minor errors, which I will set forth. I find the fifteen or so pages next to page 86 especially interesting since therein are contained many exceedingly valuable points on projection room equipment. On page 20, the 14th line from the top, where it says, "from C, which represents the line voltage"—I think the C is an error and should be E. (you are correct, owners of the hand book will please, with a pencil or pen and ink change C to E as indicated. Ed.) On page 200 I notice the word "head" where it should be "lead," in the third line, which is also plainly a typographical error. These trifles I think are worth mention, although very few operators would be puzzled by them. On page 9 the alternating wave looks to me to be too low, although we all may have wrong impressions. Unless I am in error the wave goes to 160 or so in a pointed top and to 140 in a common crest-top or "cine wave," 110 being the average of pressure between 0 and maximum.

Brother Croll also gives a formula for figuring lenses, but inasmuch as all such formulas depend for their accuracy upon the width of the aperture, which is a variable quantity, I see little value in them. In addition to the errors in the hand book pointed out by the brother, I have found two others, namely: On line 11, page 110, "20.5" should be "20.05," and in the next line 500 "feet" should be 500 "degrees." On page 339, the second line from the bottom, "black ten feet in depth," should read, "black two feet in depth." These errors are fortunately of such nature as to be readily detected and should confuse no one, but I would ask owners of the book to make the corrections with pencil. It is almost impossible to get out a book of this kind without a few minor errors. I am only too well pleased that no more serious ones have been found.

Likes the Book.

Mr. Geo. Proux, Saginaw, Mich., discourses concerning the new hand book, thusly:

> The old book was a surprise and a great assistance to those owning it. It was the first great step towards better projection. The new or second edition is a wonderful improvement over the first. It is replete with details of the moving picture profession. To my mind its greatest commendation is the fact that it is so very plain and explains things in such a simple way, without technical terms, that anyone having some knowledge of our profession can understand every detail. The book not only is of assistance to the operator but also imparts knowledge to the manager, the musician and in fact everyone connected with the business. In conclusion I desire to say that I can heartily recommend it to those who desire to increase their knowledge of projection and things allied thereto. The price of the book, in my judgment, cannot be better expended.

The above is but a sample of many letters received. We thank brother Proux for his kind words and appreciate his commendation.

Try Changing Condensers.

Sutherland, Iowa, has trouble with his pictures as follows:

> There is a dark spot just below the center of the screen. Moving the lamp house clear back gives best results, but does not altogether clear the field. Use ⅝ Bio carbons above and below; one 7½ and one 6½ condenser, the 7½ next the arc. We have a Power's 4½ projection lens and the throw is 60 feet with a 10 foot picture. Use 26 amperes of 100 volt current from our own light > plant, consisting of a 3 kw. d. c. generator and a 6 h.p. Special Electric engine.

You should have your 7½ condenser in front if you use that kind of a combination. You will do better, however, with two 7½ lenses, but block them back in the holder until their convex surfaces almost touch; also be sure they set square with each other. I think this will cover your case.

Rectifier-Stereopticon Connection.

Johnson Bros., Cranbrook, B. C., ask:

> What is the best way to connect the lamps of a dissolving stereopticon to a 30 ampere mercury arc rectifier?

Such a connection is not practical, except the lamps be connected in series, which is very difficult to handle. To accomplish this, connect the negative carbon of the upper to the positive carbon of the lower lamp by means of a short piece of No. 6 asbestos covered wire, then connect the positive carbon of the upper lamp to one lamp lead, and the negative of the lower lamp to the other. Freeze the carbons of one lamp (either one), and strike an arc on the other, after which open the carbons of the second lamp. This will work all right, but, as I before stated, it is hard to handle.

Canadian Bugs.

Winnipeg sends a sample of a Solax film in which Mr. Bug made his debut in that far north city. He says that it is mighty cold up there and I have no doubt but that he is telling the exact truth. I think, however, that we have had plenty of bugs for the present. Therefore, we will drop that particular subject.

Vanoscope Projectors.

Mr. E. B. Lockwood, the Vanoscope Company, Chicago, Ill., writes:

> An inquiry from Mr. C. H. Owens regarding the Vanoscope projector noted in the projection department of February 22nd issue. I am sorry that up to date you have not become familiar with the new Vanoscope. Am sending you a few clippings and articles which I believe will give you a comprehensive idea of the machine. The Vanoscope eliminates all flicker because we do not use either shutter or intermittent movement. The film moves continuously, and one picture dissolves into another similar to the dissolving stereopticon, thus utilizing 100% of the light.

With regard to Mr. Lockwood's letter allow me to say, that I cannot accept anything except a complete demonstration and personal examination of the machine as conclusive evidence of its practicability. There are quite some people who depend upon my judgment in matters of this kind, and it therefore has to be shown to me conclusively that a new device is all that it is claimed to be before I can give it my personal approval, or the approval of this department. If the Vanoscope Company arranges to provide some means whereby I can examine this machine and see it demonstrated, I will be glad to give a detailed description of it in the department without any cost to them, and to set forth my impressions as to its practicability for theatrical work.

Eliminates Power's 6 Grind.

Brother M. B. Watson, Sedalia, Mo., writes:

> I eliminate the grind in my Power's 6 as follows: As connecting link, 682 plate 7, page 284 of the new handbook, becomes worn, small casting 685 must be forced over by set screws 744, to eliminate lost motion. This shoves connecting link 682 over towards fly wheel pinion 677 (all on plate 7), causing it to mesh too tightly and creating a grind. I overcome this by placing a thin piece of tin between the connecting link and casting 684, thus forcing toggle gear over towards gear 680, plate 3, page 276. This holds gear 678, plate 7 (the toggle gear), midway between the two gears, 677 plate 7, and 680 plate 3, and Presto! Mr. Grind is gone. The tin can be held in place by allowing enough at the ends to bend around the casting. I am using a battery lamp inside the mechanism to thread in frame, a scheme recently described in the department. It works fine.

The brother's idea as to the connecting link is correct, and his method of taking care of the matter is unique. I think he can, however, accomplish the purpose by forcing casting 684, plate 7, page 284, over as described in instruction No. 24, page 275.

Announcement Slides.

The Spragg Amusement Company, Bellaire, O., describes the making of amusement slides as follows:

> Use ordinary gelatine, secured from any theatrical supply house. Place between two sheets of carbon paper, remove the ribbon from the typewriter and write whatever you want on the gelatine. It is easily and quickly done and shows clearly on the screen.

Samples are submitted.

The color of the gelatine used is too dark. The Utility Transparency Co. (see advertisement elsewhere), furnishes a very practical outfit for this purpose. They do not recommend the use of carbon paper, but it can be used with their outfit if preferred.

Oily Film.

Trenton, N. J., writes making a strong kick on the oily condition of the film he receives. He says they are so covered with oil that it is impossible to get sharp definition. He then continues:

> Am running a Power's six, having a three wing shutter which I have improved as follows: I drilled the two flicker blades full of small holes. There is no flicker and twice as much light. Do you think it would be worth while getting a patent on this idea?

I do not, brother. The perforated blade has been thoroughly tried time and again, and has been generally discarded as being of no value. I have never been able to see any particular gain through its use myself. As to the oily films, your manager should make a strenuous kick to the exchange, since it is up to them to send the films out in better condition.

Polarity Indicator.

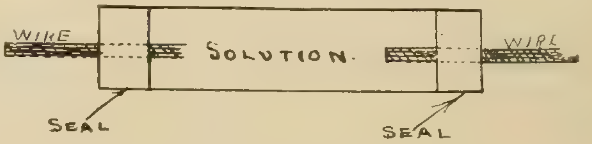
Winston-Salem, N. C., writes:

> Enclosed find rough sketch and formula for polarity indicator, good for 100-600 volts, direct current. Take a piece of glass tube about 3 in. long, same as used for water glass in front of boilers, cork one end and fill same with iodide of potassium dissolved in glycerine, seal end of tube, then pass two wires (platinum wire preferred), one at each end of tube, as shown. To test for positive and negative run wires from indicator to line. The positive wire will remain clear, and the negative will show a deep brown, or purple color in the solution. Have taken the liberty of sending the above, as so many are continually writing the M. P. World how to test out positive and negative poles.



I am very much obliged to you for the excellent sketch and description of the polarity indicator. If it works as you say it will be a valuable little device for the operator, and one which he can readily make for himself. I am sure its contribution will be appreciated by the department readers.

Fine Scheme. Unions Take Notice.

Mr. Urban L. Eiseman, Oil City, Pa., writes:

> In my opinion, Houma, La.'s, trouble with pictures quivering on the screen is due to either one of two things, viz.: the picture was taken a little slow or he is running his machine under speed. I believe speeding up the projector just a little would cure the trouble. By this do not understand me as being a "speed fiend," but there is such a thing as "too slow" the same as "too fast." Our local, Oil City, Moving Picture Machine Operators, Auxiliary Branch No. 7, I. A. T. S. E., has been in existence just a year. We are making application for a direct charter the same to remain open for sixty days to give the boys a chance. The large cities have nothing on us when it comes to projection. I do not mean by this that ours is perfection, but at the same time when we are running our union slide the picture which follows it is projected right or it is not the operator's fault. There is a friendly rivalry among our men, each seeking to excel. A certain member of the local drops into a picture theater one night each week and watches results. Prizes are awarded each meeting, or the member is given a credit mark. We pride ourselves on having the finest operating room in the city, at the place where I work. We have d. c., with a. c. in case of emergency, using two Motiographs which work fine.

I do not quite see why a slow speed should cause moving objects to "quiver" on the screen, but perhaps I have not quite understood the effect complained of. That scheme of the union's is certainly a good one. It cannot be very well applied in a large city but in the smaller towns it certainly would have my earnest recommendation. It is exactly the kind of thing that would keep the operator on his mettle, not knowing when his work was going to be inspected. There are a great many unions that could adopt this plan or something similar with immense benefit.

Lamp House Ventilation.

Mr. G. J. Kamm, Lancastershire, Pa., writes:

> I have one of your old handbooks; also the new. If the old book was worth $1.50, which it most certainly was, then the new one is worth $5 of anybody's money. It's great! As to the lamp house ventilation concerning which considerable is said in the department, above and below the lamp house there is a line of vent holes and on the inside is a piece of metal forming the air duct. This latter I have bent upwards, which increases the ventilation. It should not, however, be bent too much on the bottom left hand side or it is likely to cut the insulation on the wire. I. A. T. S. E. Local Union No. 247 is getting along fine.

Glad you like the handbook, brother. Your plan would increase the ventilation all right, but it would not be allowed in cities, nor could I recommend it very highly since it would injure the lamp house to some extent. The brother sends in a list of the officers of No. 247, but there is no time and place of meeting given, and the list of officers is very incomplete, therefore I cannot place it in the directory. Glad that the union is getting along so well, and that projection in Lancastershire is good.

Condenser Breakage.

Mr. H. P. Walls, owner and manager of the Bungalow theater and the Maywood Opera House, Corning, Cal., orders a handbook and remarks:

> Some time ago I loaned my copy of your first edition to a brother exhibitor and had a hard time getting it back. I would not be without even the old book, much less the new. Am having a little trouble with condensers breaking in my new Power's 6A. Am using 60 amperes a. c. through a formostat with fine results. I fully agree with brother Gregg, page 463, February 1st issue, regarding motors. I was literally forced to take the motor away from my operator from no other reason than his failure to watch his projection.

It is a lamentable fact, Brother Walls, that there are too many operators who will neglect their projection unless they are tied right there to the machine. I regret to say this, but facts are facts, and this particular fact cannot be denied. Many of them even neglect their projection when compelled to run the machine by hand. I think if you will pad your condensers with asbestos, so that they do not touch the metal of the mount, breakage will stop. Many thanks for your kind words of appreciation.

Small Town Man.

Mr. Geo. Denniston, Ellsworth, Kansas, comes eastward with the following:

> What would you advise for a screen for an airdome. We want one which is weather proof and which the wind will not blow over. Can you give us any dope on the Edison Talking Pictures?

Such a screen can be built of lumber, sheet iron or cement plaster; the latter being best, and painted with flat white, to which enough ultramarine blue has been added to make a very faint blue when in the pail. Do not use enough oil to produce any gloss whatever. As to the "won't-blow-over" proposition, I think I will ask our airdome readers to set forth any scheme they have found to overcome the wind pressure. I do not myself know of any method of handling that particular proposition. I do not care to comment on Mr. Edison's latest invention—yet.

Forty Cycle Current.

Mr. Jos. Abel, writes from Columbia, S. C.:

> I am here to run moving pictures during the Corn Exposition. Brought along a Motiograph and A. C. R. universal rheostat. Found the only current available to be 110 volt, 40 cycle. Of course I brought along the new handbook, which is proving very beneficial to me. Connected the rheostat in multiple, which gave 45 amperes, but the illumination was very poor. What I want to know is this; is there no device other than a rheostat which I can use on a. c. of different cycles, or what could I do when I get caught like this again? I am showing government films and naturally want to secure good illumination.

I know of no form of voltage reduction other than the rheostat which can be successfully used on different cycles of a. c. A transformer made for 60 cycles cannot be used on 40, and vice versa. The only suggestion I can make is: when you strike a town having very low cycle current, hunt around and see if there is not a 40 cycle economizer, rectifier or motor generator set available. If not then I would secure some ¾ cored carbons and try using 70 or 80 amperes of current. I would not say that this would be successful, but it would be worth trying.

A Unique Scheme.

Mr. Bertram I. Williams, Ponca City, Okla., contributes the following idea:

> I made two magazines 28 x 28 x 3", with supports on the back so that they can be fastened to the wall with screws. For use in these magazines I made two special reels 26 inches in diameter. The attachment of the magazines to the wall helped considerable in reducing vibration on the screen. With this arrangement I am able to run a whole show with one threading of the machine.

I rather like that idea of the magazine being fastened to the wall, but I cannot agree with you on the 26 inch reel business unless you can devise an automatic take-up-tension regulator which will supply the same amount of tension throughout the rewinding of the film. In order to take up all of a 26 inch reel of film (I don't know but I should think a 26 inch reel would hold about 10,000 feet of film), the pull on the film at the beginning would be very, very heavy indeed. I publish this idea because the fastening of the magazines to the wall is in itself an excellent idea.

Noisy Arc.

Mr. Hy. Ratzlaff, proprietor Casino Theater, Davenport, Wash., writes:

> I cannot overcome the noise at the arc. I take 110 v, 60 cycle current through a Bell inductor-compensator. Have tried everything recommended, as well as nearly every make and set of carbons. It is worse when using 60 amperes. The arc not only makes a lot of noise, but sputters and flames excessively at times. My voltage is rock steady, so much so that striking the arc does not affect the house lights one bit. I get a clear picture on an aluminum screen of my own make. I see you are opposed to home-made aluminum screens, I therefore send you a sample of my own and want you to express your opinion as regards it. I also would like your opinion as to the concave principle, not referring to any particular make of screen but to the principle only. I am making a change in my house, and am going to make a new screen, hence the request for this information. My pictures have the reputation of being the equal of any in Spokane, which has a population of 100,000 as compared to 1,500 here. What is your opinion of a motor driven rewind with an automatic uniform tension? Would it be worth patenting if made as simply as anything now on the market?

As to your arc, first be sure of where the noise is. If your operating room is iron lined you should see that the transformer is removed from the iron by at least 18 inches in every direction. If that does not stop the trouble then it is inherent in the transformer, and you should take the matter up with its manufacturers. The screen Mr. Ratzlaff sends in, would, I believe, be as efficient as one could expect an aluminum screen to be. It appears to be some heavy kind of card-board, having a sort of rough matte surface. But this material cannot be had the size of a screen. How about the seams? As to the concave idea, it is, in my opinion, of no value. Projection lenses are ground to project on a flat surface and distortion will occur when the screen is concaved, unless a spherical lens be procured, ground to project on a concave surface. There are other serious objections also. I have long advocated the kind of a motor driven rewind described. I cannot pass an opinion upon the advisability of patenting such a device, however, without first examining it.

Impractical.

Cleveland, O., writes:

> I am a worker in a charitable institution in this city. We have been presented with a moving picture machine, but have no funds for its running expenses; therefore I felt it was up to me to learn to operate it. My entire sympathies have always been and still are with union labor, though I have never had an occupation enabling me to join such an organization. I now have a trade that might enable me to become a member and I would like to join, purely out of loyalty to the union idea. Do you think they ought to accept me? I have spoken to members of the operators union and they do not seem to look upon me favorably. Under the circumstances, of course, I would not think of accepting pay for my services from the charitable institution. It would take away the pleasure I derive from the work.

It would be practically impossible for the Cleveland local to accept you into membership, my friend. In the first place I take it that you are an amateur. In the second place you are not working for wages. You are not to be censured for giving your services to a charitable institution, but, inasmuch as the union has for its prime object the maintenance of salaries and working conditions, you will readily see that you, who are not working for salary, are not eligible to membership.

Shutter Out of Balance?

Mr. Frank P. Bryan, High Point, N. C., is puzzled by the following, he says:

> I have long delayed visiting the department, but here I am at last. Say, who is the gink who first started this "bug" argument, and what did he do it for? Does he realize he is keeping me pore brane in a turmoil trying to solve his cussed old bug puzzle? Will someone please spring a new one on us, something like "How old is Ann"? Heaven forbid any more bugs. I have a model B Edison, outside revolving shutter. It is a little different to explain my trouble, but I will try. The three gears controlling the shutter appear to wiggle or jump, which causes the machine to pull hard; also at times it seems as if there was something between the gears causing a constant knocking sound. I have installed a new mitre gear, placed new bushings in the machine and done everything I know, without any effect whatever. The trouble only occurs when a film is in the machine, without the film it runs as smoothly as you could wish. I have repeatedly written the Edison Company, but their only reply is to send the machine to the factory and they will examine it. I would like to get your opinion before I return the machine, which is but six months old. My own idea is as follows: My lens extends out pretty far which, of course, throws the shutter out a good distance, and I find that the vibration of the shutter shaft is caused by the weight of the shutter itself. I let my cam shaft a wee bit loose to eliminate the grinding and it accomplished that end all right. I have examined all the shafts and they are not worn enough to cause any trouble. This is my fifth year operating and this is the first difficulty of this kind I have encountered.

I cannot be certain, but I think that your whole trouble lies in the fact that your shutter is out of balance, the effect of which would be aggravated by its being out near the end of the shaft, hence a good way from the bearing. Another thing which might cause this trouble would be the casting which holds the shutter spindle getting loose. I think your trouble lies in one of these two things, or in a combination of both. Any competent machinist can test the balance of your shutter and remedy any trouble of that kind there may be. If the casting is loose you can fix it yourself. The thing that puzzles me, however, is the fact that the trouble does not show up except when the film is in. I can see no answer for that end of the proposition. The trouble could also be caused by defective gears.

Everything Lovely.

Mr. Tom McCormick, business agent Local 228, I. A. T. S. E., Toledo, O., writes:

> Just a line to let you know Toledo is still on the map. Local 228 is getting along fine, and sends its best regards to ye Editor. We have no wage scale as yet, but every union man is working. Toledo boasts of a lady operator who works in the largest house in town. She has held her position for 14 months. The house uses two Simplex machines and gives a continuous performance. We ran Kinemacolor here a short time ago for about a month, and here is something that bothers every operator in town. In framing a Kinemacolor machine both aperature and lens work in conjunction, but outline of light on screen remains stationary. Why? Has any other lady operator ever run Kinemacolor? By the way I forgot to say that the lady is married and works in the same projection booth with her husband. And last, but not least, here is a money order for the new handbook. I have one of the old ones and it creates a desire for your last work. I would not be happy till I got it.

Glad to know that Toledo is getting along nicely. Hope that that condition may continue. As to the lady operator, let us have her picture for publication. And now about that Kinemacolor machine.

Your query was referred to the Kinemacolor Co., who reply as follows:

> The lens and aperture plate when moved in conjunction will not raise or lower on the screen, because they are always in line with each other and each ray of light passing through the aperture is brought central at the focal point in the lens. Should either lens or aperture plate be separately moved, then a movement will be apparent on screen in proportion to the amount thrown out of alignment.

I must admit that I cannot understand, even considering the above explanation, why there ought not to be a movement on the screen equal to the movement of the framing carriage, the maximum of which is ¾ inch. I shall look into this matter further. Booth? Huh! !

The Ft. Worth Problem Again.

Kansas City, Mo., writes:

> In February 8th issue you request comments on the Ft. Worth screen problem. I believe the light you would use to project a reasonably clear picture on a mirror screen is fully as much as should be used on the other. It would be nearly impossible for B to project a 12 by 14 foot picture, since 3/4 of 14 equals 10½ (good boy you got it.—Ed.). He must project a 10½ by 14 foot picture covering 147 sq. feet, or 39 sq. feet more than A who has a 9 by 12 foot picture. In the two cases the difference in throw should not make any difference in the light requirement. With .2 of an ampere per sq. ft. B would require 7.8 amperes more than A. However, conditions are so variable considering the lenses, shutters, lamp, connections, etc., etc., that it is next to impossible to determine accurately the proper amperage for illumination on any screen other than by actual test. However, I am sure of this: I judge A to be using something in the neighborhood of 25 to 30 amperes d. c. and if B should add 15 amperes d.. c. to this making a total of 43 to 45 amperes, he would have bushels of light for the most dense film. I assure you that I am neater with a Power's six than with a pencil or pen.

You have succeeded in bringing out a point overlooked by everyone else, and an exceedingly important one, viz.: the quality of condensing and objective lenses and the percentage of light cut by the shutter. That is something that everybody else lost sight of. Whereas Power's 5 machine or a Motiograph 1909 model cuts only about 41 per cent. of the light, the more modern 3 wing outside shutters, as well as some inside shutters cut a little more than 50 per cent of the light. I sprung this question because so many things were involved, and I wanted to see if any of you could catch all of them. All who replied have caught some of them and I have complimented you on your answers, but so far no answer has come anywhere near being complete.

Screens.

The Bainbridge Amusement Company, Bainbridge, N. Y.., wants to know whether I consider that a patented reflecting screen, such as mirroroid or gold fibre, is superior to a well made plaster screen for a small hall. Also as to whether it is better to have a screen with a slight bluish tint instead of pure white. They say they are using commercial films and that the General Film Company of Wilkesbarre has been treating them "whiter than snow," although they take but four reels a week. The particular gain through the use of the screens named lies in the fact that an equal illumination is had with considerably less current. Nothing gives a more artistic picture than white cloth or plaster, but that kind of a screen is expensive in that it requires comparative heavy amperage to produce brilliancy. For this reason I consider a rightly made aluminum coated screen as superior to plaster or cloth for ordinary theater work. A painted screen should, in my judgment, be perfectly white. That is somewhat a matter of taste, however, as some prefer a slight tint of blue, green or flesh color.

Powers Six Trouble.

La Grande, Ore., writes:

> Am running two Power's six machines with motor belted to the flywheel with a ⅜-inch belt. But machine No. 1 I must run with the framing lever clear down, and No. 2 with the lever in about the center, or else there will be a very loud humming and grinding noise.

You should not belt to Power's Six fly-wheel. Send to the Nicholas Power Company, 90 Gold St., New York City, and get their regular motor drive attachment. I have repeatedly warned operators and managers against belting to the fly-wheel, particularly of Power's Six. As to the grinding trouble, it is probably due, in one way or another to your toggle gear. I would refer you in this connection to instruction No. 23, page 273, and No. 24, page 275 of the new handbook.

In Error.

Nicholasville, Ky., writes, saying that he is using 110 volt, 60 cycle through a Ft. Wayne Compensarc. His carbons get red hot by the time he runs a three-reel show. All terminals and connections are tight and the carbon holders perfectly clean. Lamphouse is cleaned every day. Is using 60 amperes. City electricians tell him he should have ¾ carbons instead of ⅝, but he thinks there would be danger of burning up the compensarc by using a larger carbon. Nicholasville is in error. The use of the larger carbon would only reduce the resistance of the circuit slightly, practically not affecting the amperage at all. Maybe his compensarc is delivering more than 60 amperes. Let him get some ¾ cored carbons and try them. It is possible, however, that the insides of the carbon arms are rough and pitted so that the contact is poor.

Resistance With Transformer.

Mr. Harry Dietrick, Columbus, O., writes:

> The new handbook received and it is a beauty. In it you say do not hook any resistance up with a Ft. Wayne Compensarc. We are using Power's 6A machine at 220 volts a. c., with a Ft. Wayne Compensarc. Thirty amperes is not enough and 40 too much, making it hard to control the light. We tried hooking one coil of resistance wire between the compensarc and lamp and it worked satisfactorily. Please come to my rescue and advise me if this is all right.

You must have a very small picture, or else you are using a reflecting screen if 40 amperes is too much. I do not know that any harm would be done by connecting in resistance between the compensarc and lamp, but it is, or ought to be unnecessary. I think your compensarc must be delivering more than it is supposed to on the contacts named. The instruction to hook no resistance up with the compensarc came directly from the manufacturer. The resistance does no harm, I believe, but it creates waste. I think you would do well to write the Ft. Wayne Electric Works, Ft. Wayne, Ind., placing the matter before them in detail.

Equipment.

Brother Gerald, S. M., principal of St. Peter and St. Paul High School, St. Louis, Mo., writes:

> A local dealer has installed in our auditorium the following equipment, which he maintains in the best possible condition: Power's 6A, with 11 and 9-inch condensers, the former next the light; 5½ objective for the moving picture; 18½ b. f. for the stereopticon; 100 foot throw with about 10 foot drop; 18 foot screen, coated with alabastine; current, 220 volt, 60 cycle, through a Ft. Wayne Compensarc; also have a Mercury Arc Rectifier; picture is 17 feet. So far the results are not satisfactory, especially when the compensarc is used. The light fluctuates or flutters considerably and makes lots of noise. With the rectifier the light is steadier and the noise considerably diminished. Do you think that the equipment is as good as can be had? Would a mirroroid screen improve conditions perceptibly? Would a Gundlach lens give a better picture than my present Bausch and Lomb? Would I be imposing upon you by asking you to sketch the best method for arrangement of compensarc and rectifier? Should the longitudinal diameters of both carbons be in a perfectly straight line? How far apart should the carbons be? You see I am a school teacher and I want my boys to ask all the questions they possibly can; in this case I am the pupil and you the teacher.

Your machine equipment is high class, but your condensing lenses, while all right for stereopticon work, are altogether too long local length for moving picture projection. Install two 7½ lenses in their place. If you purpose to project a 17 foot picture, using a compensarc, the mirroroid screen would be certainly much better than alabastine, since the compensarc only delivers 60 amperes and this would not give a very brilliant illumination on 216 square feet of alabastine, especially with dense films. The illumination supplied by your mercury arc rectifier ought to be very good. If your carbons make excessive noise when using the compensarc take the matter up with the Ft. Wayne Electric Company, Ft. Wayne, Indiana, and demand that the noise be eliminated. If your operating room is iron lined do not have the compensarc within 18 inches of the iron, as the magnetic action will cause the sheet iron to vibrate. If your Bausch and Lomb lens is in good condition it should give you excellent results. The claims of various manufacturers are sometimes a trifle extravagant. Your question about carbon setting will be found fully answered in the new handbook. I could not advise the use of the compensarc which delivers a. c. when you have a mercury arc rectifier delivering d. c. Why use both?

Defective Film.

Erie, Pa., is advised that the course requested has been taken in regard to the defective film sent in.

A Scheme.

Cincinnati, O., contributes the following:

> When you have a film with a very short title, thread the machine in frame, strike your arc and put a piece of clear mica, the size and thickness of an ordinary song slide, in the slide carrier in front of the condenser. You may now open the dowser and raise the fire shutter without danger, being sure that the revolving shutter is clear of the lens. You will be surprised at the length of time you can hold the light on the film without injury. The effect on the screen is not of the best, but it is better than no title at all. What does 16 m/m x 305 m/m mean on the label of carbons?

I think thin mica frosted with sandpaper would serve your purpose better. The carbon mark means 16 millimeters in diameter by 305 millimeters in length.

From Reno—Good-Night!

Mr. W. J. Neff, Reno, Nevada, where single blessedness is made to order, has troubles which are not matrimonial. He says:

> I am running two 1911 Motiographs and have a bad case of travel ghost due to play in the shutter gears. Have set the shutters in every position, also put in a new set of gears, but no use. There is about ⅛ inch play in the outer and 3/16 inch in the inner shutter blade. This produces about an 8 inch travel ghost which does not reflect much credit on the operator.

I have referred your letter to the Enterprise Optical Company, Chicago, Ill., with request that they take care of you. I think you are using one of the old style narrow shutter blades. They will probably send you a different blade which will obviate your difficulty. There is always considerable play in these gears but in the earlier models of the Motiograph an attempt was made to cut too small a percentage of the light, which resulted in considerable trouble.

A Good Scheme.

Mr. Geo. J. Eberwine, Marblehead, O., contributes the following:

> Having been troubled with condenser breakage, using an Edison machine with the round ring mount. Stopped it by sawing, with a hack saw, into the side of the mount at two or three points on either end for a considerable distance.

This scheme looks all right since it gives the lens a chance to expand. It is a wonder that some of us did not think of such a simple thing long ago.

"THE OPEN SWITCH" (Kalem), March 10.—A fair offering of a conventional kind. We have had several Kalem railroad melodramas, in character and general outline like this. They have been popular, and this offering has enough of freshness in incident to make a good choice for the average audience. The acting of the villain, Stewart Holmes, who is well known, is better than that of the rest of the cast, among whom are Irene Boyle, the heroine, and E. A. Miller, the hero. The scenes, especially the trains and the switch, are very good. It is clearly photographed.

"DIVERGING PATHS" (Selig), March 10.—A picture contrasting the lives of two sisters, one of whom marries a good man, the village blacksmith, and the other a bad man, who takes her to the city. It fails to get any firm grip on our sympathies, because it wastes time at the start with insignificant things not really needed, and after it gets started leaves too much to our imaginations; isn't clear as to many small particulars soon enough. Malcolm Douglas, its author, doesn't deserve credit for anything very original. The producer is Lem Parker. Harold Lockwood plays the blacksmith, and Amy Trask the girl who marries him. On the other side, H. W. Otto plays the evil man, and Goldie Colwell the girl who elopes with him. A. W. Filson and Eugenie Besserer play the girls' parents.

"THE SOUL OF A ROSE" (Lubin), March 10.—A fairy story in which Ormi Hawley plays a creature born at the touch of a fairy's staff from a beautiful rose, and who to get a soul must win the love of an honest man. The human race invented fairy tales solely for the sake of the happy ending; our minds are not usually interested in fairies except as helping the hero or heroine. We naturally take sides with our kind against them. Now this story asks us to sympathize with the fairy who wins the man away from a mortal girl. Edwin Carewe plays the man, and the fairy who holds the magic staff is Ernestine Morley. It is well photographed and has some charming scenes.

"A GIRL'S STRATAGEM" (Biograph), March 10.—By the stratagem of the girl her lover is kept from taking part in a "little job," and so is kept from being arrested with his pals. He then braces up and becomes a good workman. In the way the picture is written and in its general conduct it is a typical Biograph story. The action is held in pretty closely to its center of interest, and the scene-making searchlight snaps back and forth from one actor to another and seems to pick out the different elements of the situation almost simultaneously. This is a speedy method and makes the picture, as a whole, clear at the expense, now and then, of the acting. The scenes change so fast that the players now and then seem all arms and hands. Mae Marsh plays the girl; Kate Bruce, her mother; W. C. Miller, her father; Harry Carey, her sweetheart. On the other side of the situation are Charles West, leader of burglars; Del Henderson, a loafer with a comical run; Alfred Paget, a saloon keeper, and the policemen. It held the audience and is probably the best among today's releases, several of which are split reels. The photography is clear.

"BEES AND HONEY" (Edison), March 10.—A good, clear picture of honey bees and what they do for their living. It isn't a great scientific picture, and gives only a general idea, but it will be most acceptable.

"IT WASN'T POISON, AFTER ALL" (Edison), March 10.—A very fair comedy picture is on the same reel. Its author, Mark Swan, has provided a tip-top situation, which has been produced by C. J. Williams. A druggist's son fixes bottles so that his father's clerk thinks he has put poison in a prescription, and then we see what comes of it. The spectators found it enjoyable, and at times laughed heartily. There is much in it that is farcical, and this pads entertainingly, but is now and then a bit thin. Harry Beaumont is the clerk; Andrew Clark, the boy; F. A. Lyon, the druggist; Edward O'Connor, the man who buys the medicine for Arthur Houseman, a sick man.

"PATHE'S WEEKLY No. 11," March 10.—The topical this week is varied and, as usual, of great interest.

"THE ONE GOOD TURN" (Vitagraph), March 7.—A picture the strength of which lies in the work of Miss Turner and Leo Delaney. There is a pathetic finish.

"THE GRANJA" (C. G. P. C.), March 7.—A hand-colored film showing in castle grounds the fountains said to be the most beautiful in Europe. They may well be. A beautiful film.

"HYDROGEN" (C. G. P. C.), March 7.—On the same reel is this interesting scientific. A rare picture is a view of a balloon in the clouds, apparently taken from another balloon in flight.

"THE VALLEY OF THE LAUTERBRUNNEN" (C. G. P. C.), March 7.—On the same reel are fine views of mountain scenery.

"A HUSBAND WON BY ELECTION" (Selig), March 7.—Here is first class drama enlivened by a vein of refined comedy. Dr. Charles Blumenthal has furnished Oscar Eagle with a real plot, and Mr. Eagle has used brains and spent money in producing it. Here, therefore, we have some of the essentials of a good picture. Fortifying these is the splendid work of the actors. Winnifred Greenwood has the part of Edna Dusenberry, the daughter of a senator who is anxious to see her married to a corrupt politician, a candidate for mayor. Miss Greenwood gets out of her part all there is in it. To her charm of personality is added the art of the actress. She is finely supported by Charles Clary, T. J. Cummerford, Jack Nelson and a good cast.

"PARCEL POST JOHNNIE" (Kalem), March 7.—There is fun in this burlesque on Uncle Sam's postal innovation. A girl leaves the East for a visit in the West. The car on which she starts out is marked "Pacific Electric." Even the snowy backgrounds did not excuse the director for this oversight, which easily could have been eliminated in the laboratory without affecting the picture. There is a lively comedy finish that brought laughter.

"THE LOST DEED" (Edison), March 7.—A story that reaches the heart. It is well played and well put on. Mabel Trunnelle, Robert Brower, Herbert Prior, Richard Neill, Augustus Phillips and Richard Ridgely form the cast.

"HIS CHILDREN" (Lubin), March 7.—This story of Shannon Fife is well produced by Barry O'Neil. It is a drama of deep heart interest. Harry Meyers and Ethel Clayton have the principal roles.

"A MISTAKEN ACCUSATION" (Essanay), March 7.—Short drama. The story is simple; Frank Bushman, in the role of an Italian seeking employment, gives the picture what virility it possesses.

"THE HAND OF FATE" (Essanay), March 7.—On the same reel as the foregoing is this bit of drama. There is an interesting dog in the cast. A small cabin blown up by dynamite gives a momentary sensation.

"A HEART OF THE FOREST" (Vitagraph), March 5.—There is encouragement in every good picture. Here we have a distinctly interesting and commendable offering with freshness, humanity and the quality that holds both heart and mind. It is an Indian story, set among forest trees, near a rocky glen, and deals with a young brave who has been helped by a settler's family. When his people go on the war-path he gives his life to protect the white man's wife and child. The little log cabin is burned and makes a fine series of scenes. John Garrett and Roger Lytton are given as the joint authors, and it was produced by Ralph Ince. Tefft Johnson, Richard Rosson, Rose Tapley and Ned Finley play the chief roles with that naturalness that keeps one from thinking of the acting. The photography is good.

"A LETTER TO UNCLE SAM" (Edison), March 5.—A light and playful fancy runs through this pleasing little story of a child who lives near one of Uncle Sam's big forts. The big guns shook her doll off the table and it was broken, so she wrote to "Uncle Sam," and her loss was properly investigated and atoned for. The offering ends with the beginning of a little love story in which two big sisters and two officers lead. It has pretty scenes and a most charming player in little Marian, who is not only pretty, but can act. Gertrude McCoy and Elsie McLeod play the big sisters; Mrs. C. J. Williams, whose acting will mark her out in the picture, the nurse. William Bechtel is the postmaster; Robert Brower, the general, and R. Neil with R. Tucker, the officers. The photography is good.

"THE STORY OF LAVINIA" (Selig), March 5.—We find in this picture a good idea that has been used in the same way a number of times before. In Lavinia's coming to the college there is a very pleasing group of scenes. There is also a most dramatic series of fire scenes. These parts make one wonder why the rest of the offering falls so far short as to seem, beside them, amateurish. The audience watched the picture closely and seemed to get much pleasure from it. The photography in the important scenes is good.

"THE DISCOVERY" (Essanay), March 5.—A farce-comedy which won considerable laughter from a large audience. It has very little that is new, and its story is padded with lawn games in which half a dozen men and girls participate, but in its acting there is a pleasant light-heartedness. Even the padding made laughter. Howard Missimer and Francis Bushman play a father and son, both of whom fall in love with Mildred Weston, a stenographer, who later discovers, very conventionally, that she is the daughter and sister. The photography is good.

"THE BLIND COMPOSER'S DILEMMA" (Kalem), March 5.—Perfect photography helps this picture, which sets out with a very good situation, but falls into the old rut and has the blind composer's sight restored by the not very novel operation. The offering's weakness is the story, for in its clear, pleasingly acted presentation it has much artistic merit and a good deal of beauty. The opening scenes contrast the characters of two sister, and we are kept deeply interested, knowing that if the blind composer chooses the wrong one it will be a tragedy for him; and we can see how the selfish girl might be able to hoodwink him into thinking her the most desirable of the two. But he gets well and the ending doesn't convince. Dixie Compton and Isabella Rea play the good and bad sisters; Tom Moore, the composer, and Adelaide Lawrence, the little girl.

"THE WATERFALLS OF IDAHO" (Pathe), March 5.—For this month the camera that is seeing America first is in the mountains of Idaho. The views of Shoshone Falls, especially that through the trees, are extremely beautiful. One result of showing black and white pictures of grand scenery in the mountains is that they give a rather cold, barren, lonely impression of the country.

"THE HAIRY AINUS" (Pathe), March 5.—On the same reel is this extremely well photographed series of views of the original inhabitants of [illegible] who were conquered by the Japanese. They are long-haired folk and have interesting primitive ways.

"THE WRONG BOTTLE" (Biograph), March 6.—We find in this picture the usual good quality in the acting of the players, with perhaps one exception, but not quite the usual grip on the emotions that is found in Biographs. It fails of being tense chiefly because of the obviousness of the means used to retard the danger side of the picture until the rescue side can catch up with it. Of course we don't know how it is to end, but we think we do, and the result in our emotions is the same. The photography is excellent. Clair McDowell plays a blind girl who has to take medicine. There is a bottle of poisonous antiseptio near that looks like it. Hector Dion plays a man in love with the blind girl's younger sister; but she elopes with Harry Carey and accidentally takes the medicine, leaving the poison which the blind girl's father, Lional Barrymore, thoughtlessly pours for her.

"A MONTANA MIX-UP" (Essanay), March 6.—A picture that is a bit too regardlessly farcical to be wholly funny, but which made laughter that was more or less general. Its opening scenes are in Southern California, and this, when we consider its immediate long jump to Montana, makes one expect a drama or anything but a farce. Arthur Mackley's company play it, and both acting and photography are fair.

"WILL WILLIE WIN?" (Lubin), March 6.—There is very little to this picture, taking it all in all. Perhaps Willie might have made it more amusing if he had had more life; he might have put more comedy into it. Willie buys an automobile for his friend to make love in—to Willie's girl. Marguerite De Moyer is the girl, and George Reehm is the friend. The photography is first class. Willie is Arthur Hotaling, the producer, and the author is Epes W. Sargent.

"ARMY TARGET PRACTICE" (Lubin), March 6.—On the same reel, this topical is well photographed and will be liked.

"THE FERRETS" (Selig), March 11.—This is an interesting picture. Oscar Eagle produced it. It is a story of the underworld, so called, in so far that a band of counterfeiters is to be rounded up by a detective. A rat catcher, with a couple of ferrets, releases the detective when the counterfeiters catch him.

"FRENCH ARTILLERY" (C. G. P. C.), March 11.—Stirring and thrilling views of artillery bounding over embankments and across country. One view especially will attract. It is a battery driving at full gallop across a tree-fringed plain in the twilight.

"THE STICKLEBACK" (C. G. P. C.), March 11.—Close-up views of a small and pugnacious fish.

"A TRIP OVER PAU, FRANCE, IN A DIRIGIBLE" (C. G. P. C.), March 11.—On the same reel as the two preceding is this finely photographed and very interesting scenic.

"JAN VEDDER'S DAUGHTER" (Edison), March 11.—A picture that will hold. Robert Brower has the rŏle of the father who objects to an army officer for a son-in-law. Mabel Trunnelle has the part of the daughter. William Bechtel plays the favored suitor, who gets drunk instead of getting married, and Herbert Prior is the officer who changes clothes with the drunk and wins the daughter when her father isn't looking. Good comedy-drama.

"THE WAY OUT" (Vitagraph), March 11.—Kate Price, as the woman who takes a man and woman to board, gives a couple of bits of fine comedy. Mr. Costello and Miss Young are the boarders.

"A LUCKY CHANCE" (Lubin), March 11.—The luck in this case was too good to be realistic. The picture was written and produced by the same man, and bears internal evidence of the relationship.

"HIS GRANDCHILD" (Cines), March 11.—This is a simple story—one of the every-day kind. It will interest some audiences.

"A BOTTLE OF MUSK" (Essanay), March 11.—Acceptable drama. There is a good cast, composed of William Walters, Ruth Stonehouse, Bryant Washburn and Whitney Raymond. The picture is well staged.

"FIREMEN'S DRILL, NEW YORK FIRE DEPARTMENT" (Vitagraph), March 10.—A well-photographed picture of firemen handling a big fire. It is instructive.

"PUT YOURSELF IN THEIR PLACE" (Vitagraph), March 10.—A love story with an elopement, produced in comedy vein and a pleasing offering. The backgrounds seem to be near Quebec, and the story is well acted by Tefft Johnson, Charles Kent, Clara Young and James Young, who is both author and producer.

"THE MISFORTUNES OF MR. AND MRS. MOTT" (Melies), March 6.—A not very substantial picture, taken mostly on the steamer which carried the Melies Company to Tahiti. It is simply fun amid scenes of great beauty and there was considerable laughter in the audience while it was on. The photography is very fair. One of its features is a picture of the Upa Upa dance in which men and women keep time to the "tum tum."

"AN EQUINE HERO" (Pathe), March 6.—The best thing about this picture is its lovely scenes and its perfect photography. Those views of silver grass in the moonlight are fine. As for the story, it will interest, but not very deeply, for it is regardlessly melodramatic. The players will please everyone and deserve good commendation, especially the hero and the little cowgirl heroine. That trick horse we have seen before.

"THE SPANISH PARROT GIRL" (Selig), March 6.—A love story set in Spain and dealing with a pretty senorita and an American youth traveling with his parents. It is markedly melodramatic, yet fails to get hold of us strongly. It takes a form that has been used many times. We are not sure that the American really loves the girl and most spectators will feel that he was too self-confident in handing out his photograph when he did, and also that he was too simple to make a good lover when they see him buying so many parrots and taking them home to the hotel—in this he makes himself a proper target for ridicule. In the picture there are many fine scenes, but the photography is not always perfectly clear.

"THAT COLLEGE LIFE" (Vitagraph), March 6.—The central situation in this picture is not the college boat races which make an incidental part of it; but is a little farce in which college boys hock each others' clothes back and forth. Billy Cook, the author, may not have seen an Essanay picture, "A Money," but if he did, he got something more than a mere suggestion from it. He has, however, rearranged the scenes and changed them to suit his different story, but without much originality. As producer, William Humphrey has put it on, it makes an amusing offering and the audience laughed a good deal over it. Louis Thomas, F. Bennett and Mr. Richmond play the college boys, with Leah Baird as the girl. The photography is fair.

"BRONCHO BILLY AND THE SQUATTER'S DAUGHTER" (Essanay), March 8.—The pretty daughter of the squatter helps Billy whom she finds drunk and when the villainous owner of the land attempts to have her invalid father's cabin set on fire, she in her turn finds a friend. It is like other offerings of this company that feature Broncho Billy; has the old thrill, the good acting and scenes, etc.

"THE WAR CORRESPONDENT" (Kalem), March 8.—About two years ago, the Edison Company released a picture from R. H. Davis' story of a war correspondent during the Cuban War, which might have suggested the plot of this picture. Here, the scene of the war is in Central America and a few not very important circumstances are different, but in all the underlying mechanism, it is practically the same story. Yet, as an offering, it should rank high; for it is an interestingly pictured, well made and acted melodrama. The young reporter, whom the star reporter gets fired and who goes to Central America, is Harry Millarde. The girl in the office, whom he loves, is Marguerite Courtot. The star who is sent down to report a battle and who gets drunk, giving the boy his chance, is Robert Vignola. The photography is good.

"PETE JOINS THE FORCE" (Lubin), March 8.—We believe that this farce, which is full of fun, was written by Shannon Fife. Peter Lang and Mrs. George B. Walters play the leads, the former a lovesick and poverty-stricken but not very courageous man. He gets a job on the police force, but is not very happy there. The job leads him back to his beloved Amelia through a comical entanglement in which burglars shut him up in a very spacious chest, manacled with his own handcuffs. It is a very good offering, well acted, clearly photographed and caused a good deal of laughter.

"BROKEN WAYS" (Biograph), March 8.—A speedily conducted picture of the West, in quality like others by this maker. It is lifted above the ordinary picture story of bad-man and sheriff by the acting which is full of character and at times of human significance. Henry Walthall, a road agent, has married Blanche Sweet and she has found that he is often brutally drunk, so she leaves him and gets work across the mountain, where the sheriff, Alfred Paget, falls in love with her. Edward Dillon is the expressman. The story is soon wound up by a galloping to and fro of horses and then punctuated by a pistol shot. It will surely hold. The photography is good.

"THE IDEAL OF HER DREAMS" (Cines), March 8.—A very pleasing little picture with a slight, but high class situation, in comedy vein. It's a picture to please the discriminating; for it's human, pretty and artistic. Especially commendable is the acting; the characters don't seem actors, but people and this is the best of qualities to make a picture truly popular and is found less often than one might wish. The scenes are, almost all, outdoors and show the producer's good sense. With the scenic offering on the same reel, it makes a very desirable picture.

"SCENES IN MONSONE, NORTH AFRICA" (Cines), March 8.—Clearly photographed and interesting to one who knows something about the place. We confess that we do not.

"THE PRIEST AND THE MAN" (Edison), March 8.—A clearly pictured incident, but a little disappointing; because the dramatic possibilities of the situation were not developed and it seems to end before it is through. It deals centrally with a priest who, to free a woman from Indians, consents to break the law and send to them five bottles of whiskey. This priest is the interesting character; but the other figures are kept in the center of the stage, and this leaves the offering rather commonplace. It is well acted and photographed. Charles Sutton plays the priest; Laura Sawyer, the woman, and James Gordon, her husband. It was taken from Gilbert Parker's story, "The Going of the Golden Swan," and was produced by L. S. Dawley.

"GOING SOME" (Pathe), March 8.—This brisk and amusing farce is well named. It is a freak-bet farce; but because of the acting, especially of the leading man (M. O. Penn) who, as wheeling a baby carriage about the city at noon and dressed in evening clothes, shows himself a true comedian. He is well supported by a large cast, including Rosa Gore. We have seen other freak-bet farces, but never supposed one could be so truly amusing as this. It is clearly photographed and made much laughter, which at one point became general.

"THE RETREAT FROM MOSCOW" (Pathe), March 8.—This two reel special offering was reviewed on page 869, issue of March 1st.

"HE WAITED" (Vitagraph), March 8.—Perhaps this picture was suggested to its author, Florence Turner, while she was playing in a recent picture, "While She Powdered Her Nose." The heart and meaning of it is entirely different; but it well might have been suggested by it. In this case, "he" (Courtnay Foote) waits while "she" (Lillian Walker) is dressing waits—so he dreams—until he is a white haired, old man, ready to topple into his grave. It is so human in its impatient exaggeration that every one in the audience is in sympathy with it and it brought out a good deal of appreciative laughter. It makes, with the industrial picture on the same reel, a good offering. Frederick Thompson produced it.

"BLACK DIAMONDS" (Vitagraph), March 8.—A clearly photographed, interesting and instructive offering.

Independent

"THE NEWLYWEDS" (Eclair), March 16.—This series has been causing much favorable comment, and surely this is an extremely amusing picture. It is quite out of the ordinary and very laughable.

"LIZARDS" (Eclair), March 16.—Many kinds of lizards can be viewed in this picture. It includes a fight between a Mexican lizard and a viper, and a drawn match between a lizard and a rat, both of which will furnish excitement and thrills. The specimens shown here have been taken from Algeria, from the Sahara, from Australia, from Mexico, etc., covering sharply contrasted lands. It is a very valuable and interesting offering. The photography is of high order.

"THE INAUGURATION" (Mecca), March 5.—These views are, for the most part, very clear and good; a few are out of focus. The marching of the West Point cadets is worth seeing, so well photographed is the parade.

"THE SATCHEL GAME" (Imp), March 20.—This has the interest of a good story, clearly told, and the subject it deals with is always very welcome to most people, for although we are not going to be caught in any satchel game ourselves, it is pleasant to know how the other fellow was caught, and then one never can tell when a little information will come in handy. The story could hardly have happened in all things just as shown here, but it truthfully reflects human nature, except that the confidence man at the head of the stairs seemed unaccountably slow, and perhaps the youth (John Harlow) was unnaturally clever. It is a well-acted picture. Jane Gail plays the farmer's daughter, John's sweetheart.

"BILLY WINS" (Gem), March 18.—A farce, featuring Billy Quirk as a lover who wins the pretty daughter of the laundry owner, in spite of stern papa and of the sentimental butcher next door, who also loves her. It seems for the most part rather thin even for a farce but will probably make laughter.

"INDIAN BLOOD" (Bison), March 15.—A two-reel picture telling a tragic story of East and West—of an Eastern college where the son of an Indian chief cannot understand his white classmates nor hold up his end in the campus banter, and later of the wild lands where the lad, now full chief, meets the classmate he hated most in the "agent" for that reservation. In the East the Indian had fallen in love with the sister of the classmate in question, and in the West the white man takes a fancy to the chief's sister. The writer of the scenario did not rely wholly on the dramatic possibilities in his situation, but used it as a means to more commonplace events, like the attack on the village and the troops to the rescue. He has been successful in getting his purpose over and it makes a good offering.

"WAS SHE TO BLAME?" (Rex), March 20.—There plainly was a sincere effort to make this picture realistic in both sets and acting, and consequently it holds the attention strongly. "She" is a downtrodden, drudging wife of a brutal drunkard, and runs away to act as the companion of an invalid girl. Later she sees an inaccurate report in the paper that her husband has been killed, and soon we find her married to the invalid's brother, a clergyman. The other husband hears of this and comes to haunt her. People will like the way this picture is handled, although there is a good deal in it that is unpleasant. The way out of the difficulty is in this case the old sentimental path. Some day some producer will face this situation squarely and courageously. The acting of all the cast is very commendable. The photography is clear.

"THE HONEYMOON LODGING" (Champion), March 17.—A man and his wife who have been separated and are looking for each other, are, without knowing it, living as day roomer and night roomer in the same room and bed of a lodging. The landlady was reaping a double harvest. There is more to the picture than this, the scenes as a whole being pleasing and full of naturalness. Evelyn Francis plays the girl, with her usual ease and sureness. The photography is fair.

"LINCOLN FOR THE DEFENSE" (Pilot), March 13.—Here is an offering that we feel sure will be a strong favorite with the whole public. It takes for its subject a little incident in the life of Abe Lincoln while he was still practicing law, and shows how he saves the life of a boy unjustly accused of murder. In the opening scenes it is noticeable that the leading player has some slight resemblance to pictures of Lincoln, but in the trial scene, when he is addressing the jury, he grows more and more like the man he is portraying until, it is safe to say, many people will forget that they are not looking at Lincoln himself. This speaks much for the player's acting. We like the way the whole incident is handled. Its simplicity and naturalness make it effective, and one is made to feel that it is historical. At first the trial scene seems a bit cramped, but as the trial goes on and the camera picks out the chief actors (now the mother, who is also a fine portrayal, and now the counsel for the defense), the action takes on life and seems real. A good picture.

"PLANS OF THE HOUSE" (Solax), March 14.—This offering takes a good theme, but handles it in a colorless way, without liveliness, and in its effect is rather flat. The plans of the house as shown are awkward, and when they are changed to make room for the old father it only accents the picture's sentimentality. None of the players do themselves credit; we have seen every one of them to better advantage. The photography is also not up to Solax standard.

"THE DIVIDING LINE" (Ramo), March 19.—A comedy of newly married life by Producer Wray Physioc. It has much freshness and a good deal that deserves commendation. It begins with the first quarrel and carries through the economies of the pair (who are saving up $500 to procure a divorce) to an acceptable reconciliation. Jack Hopkins, the man, plays at most times very well, but with a bit too much of the farcical in one short scene. Mary Alden, as the wife, is very pleasing, while Kathryn Dana shows marked feeling for character in her role as mother-in-law. Florence Noonan was not happily cast as the cook. There is much character in the offering and it will be liked. The Ramo cameraman deserves notice also.

"IN THE GRIP OF JEALOUSY" (Ramo), March 26.—A picture of working people, in which the husband is jealous of his wife's brother, who isn't introduced to him. The story is a dream—what might have been, if the man had given way to his feelings and killed his wife. It features the acting of Jack Hopkins, but we dare not say that he justifies it by his work. The offering's highest asset is the camera work, that has given us some lovely scenes. Mary Alden plays the wife.

"THE AMATEUR SLEUTH" (Gaumont), March 27.—Low comedy which will make fun.

"HYPNOTIZING HANNAH" (Gaumont), March 27.—On the same reel as the foregoing is this short dish-breaking farce.

"AN INTERRUPTED SUICIDE" (Champion), March 24.—A comedy half reel, in which George's friends assure him he looks sick so often that he attempts suicide—first by shooting, then by poisoning, then hanging, and finally tries drowning. His girl saves him and all ends happily. Moderately amusing and well acted.

"A TRIM AND A SHAVE" (Champion), March 24.—The wife of a man who patronizes lady barbers decides to revenge herself by getting work with them. She shaves him by plastering him with lather and chasing him down the street. There are one or two funny moments. On same reel with above.

"THE DOWNFALL OF MR. SNOOP" (Powers), March 19.—This is a refreshing comedy film, in which some college boys and seminary girls cure the snooping professor of his curious ways. They pull him up into their room in a basket, and his exposure to the teachers of the girls' school is very funny. The acting is done mainly by a good cast of young people, headed by a very pretty girl, Elsie Albert. A good comedy release.

"THE CURSE" (Powers), March 14.—Edwin August gives in this a good presentation of the effect excessive drinking has on a man. The club scenes are good. The lines written on the flyleaf of the gift book bring his condition home to him, and he leaves home to fight the habit. The scenes showing his return are somewhat unconvincing, though well acted. There are big moments in this story, which ends happily.

"A MEXICAN RENEGADE" (Frontier), March 13.—This is a border story more thrilling than convincing, but contains new situations. The Mexican camp was realistic. The girl is captured, but released by Pepinta, a jealous Mexican senorita. Later the heroine, after sleeping alone on the plains all night, saves Pepinta's life by her long distance shooting. The chase which follows is good. A very fair Western offering of the frankly sensational type.

"THAT BOY FROM MISSOURI" (Victor), March 28.—Owen Moore, as the country boy who bursts into the middle of the reception, gets hold of the observer immediately. The story runs smoothly and develops nicely up to a certain point, but we looked for greater change in the country boy's manners and appearance. We do not believe the fascinating Fritzi Brunette would have married him in that short coat and high-water trousers. Not enough contrast, but a good piece of character work as far as it goes. Above the average picture in interest.

"WHO WAS THE GOAT?" (Crystal), March 16.—A bright little half-reel comedy, concerning $400 left in a vase. Father breaks the vase and is stuck to make good the loss.

"CALUCOWANI" (Crystal), March 16.—On same reel with above. A comedy burlesque in which Chester, as the old salt, has some fearful and wonderful adventures. The scenes on the cannibal island are amusing. An enjoyable split reel.

"ANIMATED WEEKLY No. 52" (Universal), March 5.—A generous feast of interesting features in this number, including the carnival at Nice, Mexican war scenes, before-inauguration pictures of President Taft and his successor, Easter hat fashions, etc.

"THEIR COMBINATION SUIT" (Nestor), March 24.—A good half-reel comedy, in which two young men employed on a ranch have only one presentable suit of clothes between them. The girl and her maid accordingly get them badly mixed up, but all ends happily.

"DAD'S STENOGRAPHER" (Nestor), March 24.—This, on same reel with above, is a slight and fairly humorous story of the office type. It concerns the employment of a girl stenographer.

"THE FLAMING ARROW" (Bison), March 11.—This two-reel offering is the first of the promised series by Lincoln J. Carter. As might have been expected, it is melodramatic in the extreme. The story centers about White Eagle, a halfbreed, educated at an Indian school. He falls in love with the colonel's daughter and in the end marries her, the old perplexed question of blood not being raised. The entire two reels fairly teem with action. Incident crowds upon incident, till in one or two places the plot becomes somewhat obscure. The chief fault, however, is that the situations are almost without exception time-worn. Photographically this is good, but in plot and treatment it does not seem much of an advance over the ordinary Western offering.

"BILLY'S TROUBLES" (Gem), March 11.—Billy makes an appointment to meet a girl at 3 o'clock on the park bench. He arrives first, and two excited mothers leave their babies in his care. The scenes following this, while they have been done before, are decidedly funny and bring much laughter. A good half-reel comedy.

"THE TWIN AND SHOSHONE FALLS" (Gem), March 1.—This, on same reel with above, gives us beautiful views of the Idaho waterfalls, from various points of inspection. Clear, attractive pictures and well worth seeing.

"THE INAUGURATION OF WOODROW WILSON" (Mecca), March 5.—Clear cut, attractive and comprehensive views of the recent inauguration ceremonies in Washington, D. C. The film is delightfully clear and full of spirited scenes. Besides the inauguration itself, with the attendant parade, principals upon the platform, etc., there are also views of the crowds attending the suffragettes' demonstration a day or so previous. A very satisfactory offering.

"THE STRONGER" (Eclair), March 12.—A two-reel production, containing a real fire scene in the second reel. The story is forced and unnatural throughout, yet at the same time holds the interest well. The opening scene, in which the father falls down the shaft, is very abrupt; the situations immediately following bring out the old situation of two young men raising the girl baby and falling in love with her. There is a good race through the snow between dog teams, but the appearance of a modern dwelling in the picture destroyed the atmosphere considerably. The hero gains no sympathy when he threatens to shoot his rival, who is sick in bed. An odd assortment of good and bad situations. Good photos.

"THE REPROBATE" (Reliance), March 12.—A picture in which the church committee brings suffering to a poor woman by its unsympathetic intrusion into her affairs. The woman dies later from overwork and starvation. Her little girl seeks aid and is turned aside by the wealthy people. Finally she goes to the cabin of the reprobate, who fishes on Sunday and is generally reprehensible. He takes care of the child, and she eventually leads him to attend church. Not a strong picture, but one that holds the interest, in spite of its mixed motives. Photographically good.

"FATHER TAMED" (Punch), March 13.—The father, who has interfered with his daughter's proposed wedding, has his clothes stolen by an escaped convict. The hero comes to the rescue, providing the father will submit to the marriage. Passably amusing.

"HIS FIRST KODAK" (Punch), March 13.—Much better is this, on same reel with above, in which little Herbert Rice swipes a kodak from sister's beau and takes a number of interesting pictures. He can get anything he wants as long as he has these pictures, but once they are destroyed he gets a good spanking.

"CHAPPIE'S CODE" (Majestic), March 11.—A good film story concerning two young convicts, Chappie and Spike, just released from prison. Chappie determines to live right, but the police are against him because he will not act as a stool pigeon. He is arrested for Spike's crime later, but his girl clears the mystery. An entertaining story, in which the scenes follow naturally and convincingly.

"A CADET'S HONOR" (Excelsior), March 10.—This company's first release is a very promising one. It tells an interesting story of college life at a military school, in which a jealous rival puts up a job on the hero and has him expelled for theft. The scenes where the boy's parents and his girl show their trust in him are effective Later he is exonerated and the truth comes out. The college spirit is strong in this, and as a whole it is pleasing.

"THE CITY FELLOW" (Majestic), March 18.—In which a New York young man goes to Tennessee to purchase timber lands for a syndicate. The mountaineers dislike him. Their leader, Clay Nash, is impetuous, and suspects the visitor of being in love with his girl rather too quickly. The hero is suave and equal to all occasions. They both handle weapons too freely. The plot is obvious, but the action is brisk and the film has many good points to balance its less convincing ones.

"AN EASTERN FLOWER" (American), March 22.—A very charming and attractive film story is this, with its effective poses and good Western backgrounds. The story is simple and concerns the coming of an Eastern girl into the Western country. Warren Kerrigan and Pauline Bush appear, assisted by two other principals whose work is very good. The film demonstrates the wisdom of joining the various incidents together by artistic effects, rather than by sensational claptrap. A good offering.

"THE IDOL OF THE HOUR" (Thanhouser), March 14.—The fore part of this film is wonderfully artistic and pleasing. The shepherdess, played by Marguerite Snow, is discovered, tending her picturesque flock of sheep, by the young artist, impersonated by James Cruze. He induces her to come to Paris and pose for him. She becomes the popular model of the day, but when he marries another she loses ground, and the picture winds up with her acting as his maid, both at an advanced age. Unusual for its artistic effects.

"BABIES PROHIBITED" (Thanhouser), March 16.—The troubles experienced by a young couple from the country who come, with their baby, to the city. They are turned away from various places because of the child, and finally return home, and are delighted to get there. A portion of this film is based on actual conditions, and it is exaggerated just enough to give it a number of amusing moments.

"THEIR ONLY CHILD" (Eclair), March 23.—A sure laugh-producer. Drawings by George McManus, creator of the Newlywed cartoons. The baby, Snookums, is seen in all his glory, and the eccentric effects of the line drawings in motion are irresistible. A splendid little novelty.

"THE PRIDE OF THE SOUTH" (Broncho), March 19.—A long, three-reel story of war times, in which the fierce passions of war are mingled with domestic difficulties of ten years' duration. The offering is consistent throughout and tells a strong moving story. The battle scenes are exciting and well done; there is a sharp conflict, in which the machinery of war is nicely demonstrated. One side is gradually pressed back, but, suddenly augmented by mounted troops, this side rallies and overcomes its adversaries. The girl's husband is killed, and she finds his body on the battlefield. In the last reel the grandchild, an attractive girl, brings about the forgiveness of the aged colonel, the close being very effective. The photos are uniformly good, and the offering as a whole an excellent one.

"THE TWO WIDOWS" (Keystone), March 13.—A hurly-burly plot, in which Schnitzel has trouble in wedding the right widow.

"FICKLE FATHER" (Keystone), March 13.—On same reel with above. Father and son love the same girl, but the son palms off another on dad, getting Mabel for himself. Rather amusing.

"THE FRONTIER WIFE" (Kay-Bee), March 21.—A one-reel offering, in which the doctor discovers a friend trying to make love to his wife. He sends them both away and keeps their child. The wife goes with the man, but leaves him in a couple of hours, when he becomes drunk. She becomes ill with grief, and the doctor is called to attend her. They reunite, but when they reach home their child dies. The death of the child was shown a little too quickly and vaguely to be entirely effective.

"WHEN A WOMAN WON'T" (American), March 17.—A good comedy plot, in which Betsy is something of a flirt, we fear, and very generous with her lockets. But the duel between the rivals for her hand results happily, for one of the bullets strikes a cliff and turns up pay ore. The boys call off the fight and form a partnership to work the mine. It was just as well, for when they got home Betsy had married another. A light idea, nicely presented.

"THE LESSON" (American), March 20.—This is an entertaining film story, making much of simple situations. The stranger's arrival throws the jealous country boy, played by Edward Coxen, into a terrible state of dejection, but the girl finds a note written by the stranger's wife. This brings the girl back to her senses and her country lover. Good pictures and pleasing.

"THE MAN NEXT DOOR" (Keystone), March 17.—This half-reel picture is full of rapid-fire situations, which fortunately are easily understood and bring shouts of laughter.

"LOVE AND PAIN" (Keystone), March 17.—Another case of extreme farce, which has funny moments, on same reel with above. As a whole the reel is successful, of its type.

"THE GREAT GANTON MYSTERY" (Rex), March 27.—In these two reels there is a real story. It is also well put on. Robert Leonard, as the detective, does excellent work. In him the Universal has an acquisition. His method is convincing, restrained. Others in the cast are Edward Alexander, Lillian Herbert and Charles W. Travis, and, as the maid, Marguerite Fischer. The conclusion of the story, where the detective, instead of turning the maid over to the officers of the law so that she may stand trial for murder, writes a report that he cannot solve the mystery, will not jar much; it will please many.

"BY DESIGN OF HEAVEN" (Gaumont)—Special.—This hand-colored picture will easily stand alone on its wonderful photography and its artistic settings. The story is of a girl who secured her marriage portion through winning a competition in lace designing. The outlines were suggested to her by the formation of frost on her bedroom window. It is a pretty story, although there probably will not be much admiration for the prospective bridegroom, who would reject the choice of his heart, or, rather, sanction his father's rejection, because she can bring to him but 2,000 florins, instead of the 5,000 demanded by the parent.

"FRITZ AND OSCAR OUT OF LUCK" (Great Northern), March 15.—There is a twist in this picture that will make fun. Two men hire a hall, divide it by a curtain, and from two doors sell tickets for an entertainment. The persons on each side of the curtain believe the stage is on the other side. Things happen when the truth is known.

"ENVIRONS OF SILKEBORG, JUTLAND, DENMARK" (Great Northern), March 15.—On the same reel are these finely photographed scenics.

"THE LURE OF THE LORELEI" (Gaumont), March 25.—There is a double tragedy in this two-reel hand-colored subject. It is not a pleasant picture. An officer under the spell of an adventuress deserts his fiancee just before the wedding. Later he returns, to find the fiancee dead. For a while he remains with his mother. Then he goes back to the society of the adventuress. His mother learns that the woman is urging the officer to use for the purchase of a bauble, funds of his regiment. The mother kills the adventuress.

"THE BAKER AND THE SWEEP" (Lux), March 14.—There is a lively chase in this picture, which may please those who liked that style of films a half dozen years ago.

"INDIAN JUSTICE" (Lux), March 14.—The interesting feature of this picture is a leopard, which attacks a woman in the forest. This is thrilling.

"THE VILLAGE CHOIR" (Nestor), March 17.—Good comedy. There is a large cast, and they make a lot of fun when they portray a church picnic. There is a basket auction in which one man, in order to obtain the privilege of taking luncheon with the girl of his choice, buys all the baskets, to be certain. How he failed will cause laughter. There is one scene especially worthy of mention. This is where it is desired to show a choir in its loft. The picture shows the choir and the pulpit only—which is enough, of course.

"WITH A GRAIN OF SALT" (Nestor), March 14.—Use is made in this well-photographed drama of a phrase well known to miners—salting a mine. A man about to be led into purchasing a piece of land, in the belief that it contains gold, is warned in time of his danger by means of an overdose of salt in his dinner. This is fortified later by an application of salt to the contract papers. This twist materially aids in putting over the picture.

COMING RELEASES OF WARNER'S FEATURES.

Some big things are in store for exhibitors using Warner's Features. Down in Austin Texas, the Statex Film Co. is turning out some wonderful three-reel productions, featuring Miss Martha Russell, formerly Essanay's leading lady. The first picture, "Their Lives By a Thread," has been confiscated by the Mexican Government because it contained some striking scenes taken across the border in which real untamed Mexicans are shown attacking Americans. But the second release, more thrilling than the first, is on its way North, and will be ready for booking this month.

Down in Florida the Gene Gauntier Feature Players are working night and day to duplicate their first big success released through Warner's Feature Film Co., "A Daughter of the Confederacy." The second release, "The Mystery of Pine Creek Camp," is a powerful story dealing with the convict labor problem. It will be ready very soon.

"A Traitor to His Country" is the title of a strong military production in three reels, ready for immediate booking.

"Rescued From the Burning Stake" in three reels, portrays vividly the exciting adventures of the early western settlers. Also ready to show this month.

Facts and Comments

JUST why exhibitors of motion pictures and exchanges should be charged so much per foot for plain advertisements in their films it is hard to understand. The evil is growing and unless checked swiftly and thoroughly it will do much harm. Several prominent manufacturers, among them representatives of every group, have been notorious offenders in this respect. We have seen as many as fifty feet of Somebody's tobacco and not much less of Somebody Else's Soap, Chewing Gum, etc., worked into comic, dramatic and all kinds of pictures. This is absolutely unfair to the exhibitors and we cannot discover any valid excuse for the manufacturer who releases this sort of reel. Possibly the objectionable matter got in through no direct fault of the manufacturer.. It may be that the camera man was at fault or that some "enterprising" advertiser forced himself into the reel. We fail to see how this exonerates the manufacturer. It is his business to cut the advertisement out under all circumstances. That much censorship must be expected from every studio. In the mean time it seems to us that an exhibitor is perfectly justified in refusing to run these thinly disguised advertisements and likewise in refusing to pay for them. If such a policy were adopted and strictly followed by all exhibitors these attempts at surreptitious advertising would soon come to an end. If exhibitors want to do any advertising on their screen that is their business, but they have every right to object to others wanting to use their screen for advertising purposes. To ask them to pay for allowing "ads" on their screen is adding insult to injury.

INTELLIGENT agitation for an open Sunday is carried by exhibitors in very nearly every state of the Union. Everywhere exhibitors are following the counsel given them time and again in these columns to conduct their campaign in a fair, dignified and courteous way, and everywhere the results are gratifying. We cite as a true sample of such a campaign of education the action of the organized exhibitors in Birmingham, Ala. The exhibitors there had for some time been watching an agitation in favor and against the Sunday entertainment without themselves taking any official stand in the matter. They have now come out with an appeal to public sentiment, published in the newspapers of the city. It is splendidly worded and conceived in the right spirit. The exhibitors explain their reluctance to take official action by saying that "their direct interest in the matter has made it more or less embarassing as a question for argument."

Their appeal goes on to say that the time had come to take "some definite and public stand in the matter." As a result the exhibitors formed The Moving Picture Exhibitors' League of Birmingham. They describe themselves as "a mutual and protective organization for the purpose of enlightening and instructing the Birmingham public concerning motion pictures; their educational value, their high moral standard and their great possibilities in furnishing innocent and instructive amusement." The exhibitors then declare that they do not want to open their houses on Sunday, "unless it be the expressed wish of the majority of the people." To ascertain this fact in the fairest and most effective manner possible the exhibitors have applied to the Commissioners for a referendum to settle the matter.

The exhibitors waited upon one of the commissioners, who asked them to hold their petition to the commissioners in abeyance, but to ask for a referendum on the Sunday question. The commissioner took pains to make clear his own position in the matter and incidentally testified to the fine personnel of the Birmingham exhibitors. We printed an account of their efforts on the Exhibitors Page of our last issue. We mention the matter here editorially because the management of the Sunday campaign in Birmingham may well serve as a model for exhibitors everywhere.

PERSONS intending to reform things and devoting themselves to the uplift of humanity owe it to themselves and to their cause to be specific. Nothing is more useless than a reformer given to loose and indefinite statements. He is a mere displacer or disturber of air. When Mr. John D. Lindsey, the president of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, writes to a legislator, that "the lives of many children have been ruined through moving picture shows," he ought to supply specific data. Mr. Lindsey, upon the strength of this general statement, asks for sweeping laws which would put an end to many of the smaller theaters in this city. There are scores upon scores of these small theaters, which are conducted by good citizens fully aware of their responsibilities and anxious to live up to them. To wipe them out of existence at the request of a biased and one-sided and more or less interested reformer would be tantamount to confiscation. Of course, there is little chance of such a law being passed, but its proposal on such foolish grounds once more emphasizes the inability of so many reformers to take a broad and just view of things.

READERS of THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD have undoubtedly taken notice of Mr. Frank Richardson's commentary on the Jenkins moving picture machine, which is specially designed for home use and for all occasions, where a comparatively small picture is adequate to fill all needs. What will please the friends of the motion picture most is the fact that this machine uses standard film. This will insure the widest possible field of usefulness. A standard size film will make every inch of film available for the home and the school. It will promote systematic ordering of the materials now on hand. It will be a veritable boon to the teachers and to all who wish to use the motion picture for educational purposes only. A variety of standards would bring in its train confusion and annoyance and might seriously hamper the progress of the educational motion picture.

Letters to the Editor

Troy Chamber of Commerce Urges Use of Educational Subjects.

New York City, N. Y.

Dear Sir:—During the past four months the Municipal Affairs Committee of the Chamber of Commerce of this city have been conducting an "Ask the People" campaign by sending into the homes of four thousand citizens as represented by business, professional men and clergymen, members of labor organizations, young women employes in shops, factories, offices and stores, members of women's civic and social societies, members of school teachers' organizations, to enrolled out-of-town pupils attending our local schools, to get an expression as to what they consider needs earnest consideration and prompt attention in matters civic.

A list of twenty questions was submitted. No. 20, increasing the interest of children in civic life, received a strong checking.

These slips were returned in an enclosed stamped envelope, and the results were 40 per cent. net. Aside from the subjects listed, a large number of suggestions were made relative to the welfare of children. Many references were made to moving picture shows.

This committee is asking if you can furnish a list of subjects which could be used by local managers to promote a greater interest in the minds of our children regarding civic life—"The City Beautiful," "Street Beautiful," "Safe and Sane Fourth of July," "Children's Flower Gardens" and other films with kindred subjects.

On Monday afternoon, January 13th, a meeting of all the managers of the moving picture shows in Troy was held in the rooms of the Chamber of Commerce. These gentlemen represent twelve different houses. Their co-operation in this work is sought.

They were urged to safeguard the morals of thousands of children who are numbered among their patrons and furnish only illustrated subjects which will work for a better class of future citizens.

Very sincerely yours,
BERT E. LYON,
Chm. Municipal Affairs Committee, Chamber of Commerce; also member of the General Committee of the American City Planning Association.

A Commendation and a Just Criticism.

THE EDITOR, MOVING PICTURE WORLD,
New York City.

Dear Sir:—Last night I saw "In the Ranks," an excellent Broncho film, played at the Star Theater in this city. One of the characters is of a soldier who is first seen in a barroom fight, and who later, while still intoxicated, gives away the story of the sergeant's wedding with the colonel's daughter to Lieutenant Cole. The man played the character in perfect style, but, as an ex-service man, I was angered to hear the man sitting alongside me remark, sotto voce, to his companion, "Isn't he great? And the whole army is just like that, with possibly a few exceptions."

The point is that films showing characters such as these two drunken soldiers do a great injustice to Uncle Sam's army and navy. In my four years' service in the United States Marine Corps I noticed that there were not more than 5 per cent. of the entire number of men with whom I associated who would rather spend their money for liquor than for some clean amusement. That may, at first glance, seem a big figure, but if you stop to think that if you would go into the street and pick out the first hundred men you came across, relieve them from absolutely all responsibility, deny them the pleasures of association with these good people who think "the whole army's like that," you could easily see that it is not so easy to always remember your mother's teachings.

While the film in question teaches one good thing that is always to be found in the service, it immediately contradicts it in the second reel. In the fight before the saloon you can see one of the things that is always certain; that is, when a fight is forced on one soldier—and it is not hard to do so—it is forced on his comrade also. But no soldier would attempt to obey an officer's orders to "see that he never reaches his destination," in the case of an enlisted man of his own company.

The two scapegraces in this picture redeemed all their faults by the manner in which they fought when they were surrounded by the Indians—but the gentleman on my right did not remark that "the whole army was like that" in that part of the picture. But I should like to tell him right here that it is.

I don't think the Broncho company meant to do the United States service any injustice in this really excellent picture, but I am a firm believer in the educational value of the moving picture, and I think care should be taken not to show anything that will educate people into thinking that the service is as bad as the reputation it may have earned long ago, and which it has ever since been doing its best to live down.

If you think publicity would do this subject any good, you are welcome to use this letter and my name. Wishing the Moving Picture World and the pictures themselves all the success possible, I am

Yours very truly,
THOMAS DE V. HARPER,
Ex-Sergt., U. S. M. C.,
Portland, Ore.

Concerning Illustrated Songs.

NEW YORK, Feb. 8th, 1913.

EDITOR OF THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD,
New York City.

Dear Sir:—Have read with much interest your article on page 440, Moving Picture World of February 1st, 1013, in reference to illustrated songs, and think that same is very much to the point and well put, and certainly the principal cause of the general lack of interest taken in illustrated songs of today.

As you state, this very beautiful form of amusement is so horribly misgiven, both in rendering of obscene and disgusting songs, and also from the fact to expect an intelligent audience to join in the chorus and make themselves ridiculous, would be enough in itself to kill the whole proceeding. Would also state that the cheap music publishers of today or a certain class have tried to use this excellent form of amusement for the purpose of cheap advertising for their miserable musical publications which are unfit in many cases to ever see the light of day. They employ a lot of cheap, irrepressible, ineffective and utterly unmusical boosters, as they are called, to render these musical compositions, which are truly an insult to any clean-minded audience, as most of these individuals would be much better adapted behind a push cart, or assisting the well-known gun men of today with their labors. When these factors can be eliminated the illustrated song properly done will again be restored to its proper place as a much desirable and beautiful diversion to the picture theater of today, as there is nothing more beautiful than good music and song poems properly rendered musically and pictorially.

I can well remember the time when a refined theatrical audience would show more appreciation to a well-rendered act of this kind than to any headliner on a program.

As I have been the principal one to develop this beautiful feature of amusement, it seems a pity to allow it to go down in dust without some word of remonstrance. Trust that you publish this letter, and hope it will have some effect. I remain

Sincerely yours,
ALFRED L. SIMPSON,
Manufacturer of Simpson's Celebrated Slides, and formerly of Maxwell & Simpson, Kings of Illustrated Song.

Flickers.

IT seems strange that those people whose word bears weight with the exhibitors don't try to show them where they are daily losing money for no other reason than the very vulgar display of advertising in their lobbys and fronts. At a first glance many of the picture theaters, instead of resembling a photoplay house, look more like a shooting gallery or a side show to some circus. The present day feature film manufacturers and dealers, with but few exceptions, are responsible in a measure for the cheap multicolored lithographs portraying blood-curdling scenes which do not as a rule appear in the film, and if these persons whose duty it is to order lithographs for film stories and the exhibitors of them, would only stop to reason, they would realize that, instead of attracting the better element to witness the photoplay—which they claim to be their desire—they are coaxing only a rough and undesirable audience to their houses. After a little thought on this one subject I should think an exhibitor would see the advantage to be gained in tabooing the cheap lobby display, and in compelling those responsible to furnish clean and attractive papers.

Joe Brandt, formerly advertising manager for the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, returned to New York this week after a three weeks' trip through the West and South, in the interests of the World's Best Film Company, of which he now enjoys the title of general manager. Some hustler, this fellow, and we all admire him for his "get-there aggressiveness."

Have you been up to see the new offices of the Universal Film Company, yet? They sure have some layout. I got lost in the maze of partitions and furniture, and but for the timely arrival of Joe Engle, sales manager of the company, would have seen nothing else; but he ushered me around and pointed with much pride to their new projection room, which, though not yet finished, promises to be the handsomest place of its kind. The decorations and fixtures will be completed within the next week or so. Go up and see it.

WOODS OUT OF KINEMACOLOR.

Frank E. Woods, who accompanied David Miles and the company of Kinemacolor players to Los Angeles, Cal., as director, has severed his connection with that company and is open for engagements. Mr. Woods has written and produced a number of excellent photoplays and would be a valuable addition to the producing staff of any wide-awake company.

Florence Turner Going to England

The Vitagraph Girl, First Real Photoplay Star, Will Produce Her Own Pictures in London.

By Hugh Hoffman.

WE are going to lose Florence Turner, for she is going away from here. By this time it is, of course, well known that she has left the Vitagraph Company and has gone upon the vaudeville stage. But few of us had any idea that she intended to leave America as well. Florence Turner is surely entitled to be known as the queen of motion picture actresses, and what is America's loss will be England's gain.

We had the pleasure of a little chat with Miss Turner in her dressing room at the 116th Street Theater, New York City, where she played last week. The young lady was never looking better in her life and her stage appearance was remarkably fine. She has a complete new outfit of the most stunning gowns that one could imagine, and she appears to have taken on some weight recently which benefits her appearance. If we were only a lady fashion writer now, instead of a mere man, how easily could we burn up a column describing those gowns to the delectation of our lady readers. But her ability is the main thing. Florence Turner is a wonderful mimic; her control over her features is really marvelous. She can tie her face into more knots than any other person we ever saw.

Miss Florence Turner.

Miss Turner's act is put on in a very sensible way. Just before she appears for her turn, a Vitagraph reel is run in which Miss Turner plays the leading role. This scheme is doubly effective. First, because if by any chance there should be a person in the house who had never seen her it would be a preparation for the young lady's appearance; and secondly, because it heightens the effect of wonder to see a person acting a picture and a moment later see that person stepping out upon the stage in person. Miss Turner's act consists of impersonations. Her first one is that of a little girl singing a song, which is capital. Her next is that of a boy in the gallery following every move of the villain, the hero and the heroine. It is a remarkable character study. Perhaps her best piece of work is The Village Gossip; a character sketch of an old woman done without make-up and entirely by facial control. As a finish Miss Turner gives an imitation of a saleslady in a 5 and 10 cent store, which is funny and only too true.

We saw Miss Turner at a matinee and the big house was jammed from gallery to orchestra. The Vitagraph girl is a wonderful drawing card. Entire families had come there to see her, and the children were restless until she appeared. The big reception at the 116th Street Theater she informs us was only a repetition of the tremendous welcome she received at the Victoria Theater, Rochester, New York, where she played the week before.

The real news came, however, during the dressing room chat when she announced that in the middle of April she would be sailing for England for a prolonged stay, in which country she will take up her moving picture work again as an independent star, at the head of her own company and organization. For several weeks, Miss Turner will fulfill music hall dates in the larger cities of England. When the warm weather comes it is her intention to recruit a company of capable people and begin work on a series of pretentious two and three reel feature subjects. It may not be generally known, but Miss Turner (if possible), is more of a favorite with English audiences than she is in America. Her vogue there is tremendous and she realizes that England offers better opportunities for her than America. The open market, which obtains on the other side of the water, was the determining factor of her making pictures in England. She feels that there she will not be circumscribed by any existing trade factionalism, and that her pictures will find a better sale and a more ready distribution from that point. It is her intention at present to do large picture plays at intervals, taking plenty of time in their preparation, instead of being tied down by a time limit. Between pictures she will rest up by filling music hall dates in the larger theaters of the English provinces and London.

The Vitagraph Company is very sorry to lose Miss Turner, and the Vitagraph owners, who are her warm friends, endeavored to convince her that she was making a mistake in leaving them; but her mind is thoroughly made up and she knows what she is going to do. For six years she did wonderful work at the Vitagraph Company, especially during the first four of them, and her work increased the sales of the Vitagraph pictures over those of all other makes. She figures that the Vitagraph Company can spare her now better than it could before, and therefore she is going out to get some of the "good gravy" for herself while she is still in her prime. We tried to get Miss Turner to tell us what persons will be interested with her in her new venture, but this information she withheld, saying that the time is not yet ripe for such an announcement.

At the Sign of the Flaming Arcs

By George Blaisdell.

THERE are some merry parties at the Screen Club these Saturday afternoons. The cast seems to be nearly the same on each occasion; there are slight changes from week to week, but it is always a new picture. Time there moves on no leaden wings. Those who have to take their departure around 5 or 6 o'clock—please bear in mind we are speaking of afternoons—do so with the alacrity and cheerfulness displayed by a nervous man getting into the chair of a grouchy dentist. As one member was overheard to say last week, as he cast a long look at the "bunch": "It's all right, you know, this going home on Saturday afternoon. It's the regular married fellow stuff, and after I get home I'll be glad I came home. But, say! wouldn't I like to finish the evening right there!" Such is the lure of good fellowship.

One afternoon the memory of which will linger long was spent in company with Matt V. Snyder, the distinguished-looking veteran—of armed strife as well as of the stage. Howard Crampton, an old and younger "pal" of the actor, had been drawing out reminiscences of early days. They were of the period just before the Civil War. It is hard to believe that this vigorous and sturdy man could have first-hand knowledge of those times. There were days in the navy—"Matt" was an Annapolis man—and in the carrying trade; of incarceration in a Spanish jail in Havana—an adventure not infrequently happening to seafaring Americans at that time and place; the offer of freedom if he would go to Spain, join the army and fight against the Moors. The story of that expedition was a chapter of romance. The final escape from Morocco is worthy of a long story. Afterward came fighting on land and sea, and then at the close of the rebellion across the border into Mexico with Kirby Smith, the last Confederate to surrender, and a mix-up in the Maximilian imbroglio.

A sealed box of candy lying on the table turned the current of conversation. "Yes," said one of the group, "it's for my wife. Seventeen years we have traveled together and never missed a meal;" and then he added reflectively, "but we postponed several."

"That's right, boy," said "Matt" softly; "don't forget those little things to take home. I had a wife, too, and she was—"

The quartet about the table listened as the veteran talked. What they heard was a tribute to a woman—recently passed away. In feeling, in sentiment, in phrasing, in unconscious eloquence it was matchless; it was more than twoscore years rolled into two minutes. No master of stagecraft could have arranged a dramatic climax that would have so stirred and plumbed the hearts of his audience. For this was of the drama of life.

When "Larry" Trimble and John Bunny returned from their European trip last summer there were some skeptics who suggested that on account of atmospheric conditions in England we would have no right to expect much in the way of photography in the "Pickwick" pictures. The result as shown in the first two reels to be released proves how badly mistaken these doubters were. The photography was excellent. By the way, what a find that man Jingle was! Arthur Ricketts well might have stepped out of the book. His portrayal of the smooth, the slick, and unscrupulous actor was worthy—comparisons are odious, to be sure, but there are times when neither party mentioned stands to suffer—was worthy, it is repeated, of Marc MacDermott. Another factor—individual, of course, but it counts nevertheless—was the apparent shortness of the reels. To the writer the first part seemed to be of not more than 500 feet in length. Let us hope that the Vitagraph Company will again send to the haunts of Dickens Director Trimble and "Mr. Pickwick" Bunny, that we may have more of these rare stories.

Captain Jack Bonavita, who is now convalescing in the Tampa Hospital from one of his periodical encounters with a peevish lion, is already planning for further adventures. His latest injury came during the making of a two-reel picture, "The Wizard of the Jungle," for the World's Best Film Company. Brutus, a lion who had twice before assailed the animal trainer without doing any damage, angered at the approach of a horse, fastened his claws in the side of Bonavita and before he could be subdued had done a lot of damage.

William J. Branigan of Philadelphia was at the offices of the Universal Film Company the other day demonstrating his new Lorbranograph projector. The weight of the entire machine with stand is fifteen pounds. The magazine will carry 500 feet of film. The whole outfit can be taken down and stowed in a suitcase. The machine is the first model made; Mr. Branigan has been working on it for two years. The picture shown, although small and from a regulation film, was clear. The light, which was an incandescent of 75 candlepower, was by a reflector magnified to 300. Mr. Branigan said he could increase his initial power to 250. Connection is made with an ordinary incandescent lamp socket. The machine is designed for the use of salesmen in displaying on the wall of an office representation of machinery in motion. It may well be used for purposes of home entertainment, or, apparently—and this is a matter Mr. Branigan did not mention—in schoolrooms.

Mrs. D. W. Berry, attending a meeting of the Woman's Welfare League recently in St. Paul, disagreed with the statements and deplored the intentions of some of her associates who are backing a bill designed to establish local censorship of picture shows. "I have seen hundreds of shows and have never seen one that was demoralizing," said Mrs. Berry. "They are not more immoral than are our high priced theaters, and they are as sanitary as can be expected. I don't consider the fact that films depicting crime are shown means the encouragement of criminality in children. The culprit always gets the worst of it. The bill as proposed would mean the closing up of every small moving picture show, and I am not in favor of it."

Employes of the People's Amusement Company of Portland, Oregon, have organized with a full list of officers what they have named the Screen Club. It is intended to hold entertainments once a month, at which will be discussed matters pertaining to the motion picture industry. It is probable that the action of the Oregonians in selecting a title which already is not only carried but was originated by the big players' club in New York will arouse criticism among the Screeners. The actors on the coast very courteously avoided any possibility of engendering this feeling by giving their organization the equally appropriate name of The Photoplayers.

VITAGRAPH PLAYER DIES.

Mr. Robert McWade, Sr., a member of the Vitagraph Company, died at his home on Wednesday, March 5th. Mr. McWade has been attached to the Brooklyn studio of the Vitagraph Company for some time and has done some very excellent comedy work for that company. His taking away will leave a gap in the Vitagraph ranks that will not be readily filled.

SOCIETY LIFE AND UNDERWORLD.

The Exclusive Feature Film Company is offering a three-reel production for state right buyers entitled, "New York Society Life and the Underworld." The story brings in Chuck Conners, notorious as the "Mayor" of Chinatown and shows a number of good scenes of New York's Chinese quarters and the Bowery together with other reputed rendezvous of the denizens of the underworld. There is said to be a number of thrilling scenes in the picture similar to that shown in the accompanying illustration of an exciting chase over house tops in the police raid. Despite the strong title, the company says it has not an offensive incident in its picture.

"By Design of Heaven"

A Hand Colored Gaumont Special Tells a Sweet Story.

By H. C. Judson.

THE motion picture may be successful merely as a thing of beauty, and it may be successful as the narrator of a thrilling tale or as illustrator of a drama. Whether it is better in the one or the other case is still open to discussion and the answer will depend partly on one's temperament; but perhaps all will be agreed that, where it combines the beauty of art and the interest of a good story, it will be most sure to be acceptable to the many. In the story of Yolande, the beautiful lacemaker of Antwerp, are found the human elements that touch and warm the heart and the poetic atmosphere that gives the producer a fine chance to make lovely scenes. Of it, the Gaumont Company has made an offering that will charm all who love a simple story, told in scenes so lovely that some of them seem as fine as any picture could well be. It is in two parts and carefully hand colored.

The story is a miracle tale in the modern style, in kind, something like Maeterlink's more dramatic play, "Sister Beatrice." Set in Holland, its neat costumes (kerchiefs pinned snugly in front of the corsage, Dutch caps of fine lace and wooden shoes) and its quaint backgrounds (interiors looking out on a typical landscape marked by a windmill), keep in the spectator's mind a sense of what is typically Dutch; it may remind him of Delft pottery. As the picture opens, we find Yolande sitting in a little Dutch window which looks out over the sidewalk. She is conversing with a youth who soon turns out to be Peter Claus, an alderman's son. Yolande is not a poverty-stricken girl; her home, where she lives with her father, is pretty and comfortable, with its well-made furniture and its plate-rack; but Peter's father is very rich. This difference in fortunes gives us the situation which has been developed in a simple, truthful way. There is nothing sensational, no harsh colors in the story from first to last.

Scene from "By Design of Heaven" (Gaumont).

Peter's father half consents to the marriage; but demands a dowry of 5,000 guilders, bigger than Yolande's father can give; and so, despite the lovers' sorrow, the happy culmination is postponed. The girl is a lacemaker, no mean occupation in Holland at that time, and we find her among her companions in the home of the master lacemaker where, just outside the windows, the town crier soon proclaims that the queen has offered a grand prize of 5,000 guilders for the best new design of lace during the year. Yolande has more incentive to win the prize than most of the girls and it disturbs her that she can almost, but not quite get clearly before her an original design of a beautiful piece of lace. She carries her troubles to the shrine of Our Lady of the Distaff in the cathedral. The season when the picture opened was summer; now it has become winter and there is snow outside of her window. In the night, while she is asleep, the frost on her casement weaves for her the design. Using this, she wins the prize and having now the required dowry, marries Peter.

It is worth nothing that Susanne Grandais, who plays Yolande, is very pretty; for personal beauty is worth something in a picture. She is not a great actress, but has the faculty of posing naturally and is intelligent. She is certainly pleasing in this part. The whole cast carries the picture through quite acceptably. The sets, which are few, are worthy of the highest commendation. Almost all are studio scenes with painted backgrounds (seen through the windows), of summer and of winter. We weren't sure at first that these were not real landscapes.

"An American Princess" (Kalem.)

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

THE action of this story is laid in one of the mythical kingdoms of Southeastern Europe, time out of mind the favorite hunting ground of fiction writers. All things are possible in these shadowy realms, and surprises are entirely out of order. With Miss Alice Joyce as the king's daughter we do not care very much about any further geographical researches and are perfectly reconciled to the informal ways which prevail at the court of the fabled king. She falls in love with a young American diplomat, who persuades her to marry him, renounce her royal privileges and come to America. In due course he is rescued from a horde of rapacious creditors, whom he had accumulated in his desire to make his princely wife feel as princely as possible. His financial difficulties are made very credible to the male eye by a sight of gorgeous gowns and dresses which I am sure will charm the eyes of every woman that goes to see this picture. I have not the hardihood to attempt a description in detail, but they are wonderful even to the sight of mere man, and probably fatal to the pocketbook of any one rated in less than six figures.

Scene from "An American Princess" (Kalem).

Scene from "An American Princess" (Kalem).

Who rescues the husband in distress? Why, the American princess, of course. While he has been yielding to temptation and has almost departed from the straight and narrow the princess has pledged her jewels and has paid off the creditors. The ending is happier even than usual. The young man's honor is saved, the American princess has the satisfaction of knowing that she saved him, and the last scene shows husband and wife in the glow of a happy fireside. There is a sweet love story for the young, a bewildering splendor of gowns for the ladies in general, and a heart-warming patriotic appeal to everybody.

APRIL 8th—EXHIBITORS DAY.

A Day of Great Importance, in View of the Threatening Censorship Disturbances Everywhere.

Tuesday, April 8th, has been chosen as the day for all exhibitors throughout the United States and Canada to set a part a tithe of their day's receipts. These receipts from all parts of the land divided between the State and National treasuries will constitute a formidable self-defence fund. On this day every loyal exhibitor is expected to set apart ten per cent. of his gross receipts for the day. Five per cent. of this money should be sent to the treasurer of the state league of the state wherein the exhibitor is doing business; the other five per cent. should be sent to the National Secretary, Mr. C. M. Christenson, 703 Euclid avenue, Cleveland Ohio, to be turned over by him to the National Treasurer.

The question of censorship is looming larger than ever all over the country. The legislature of one state usually copies after the legislature of another state. In Ohio the exhibitors are hoping to head off local censorship boards by passing a law providing for a state board which will simplify the work and lessen the expense.

President Neff is at this writing in New York, working tooth and nail on the censorship proposition. He is busy interviewing legislators, film manufacturers, exhibitors, editors and any other persons of influence who are interested in censorship, one way or the other. He has a perfect schedule of legislative meetings. He knows exactly what time a certain legislative body in a certain city is going to meet, and he makes it a point to be there, wherever it is, if there is anything pertaining to moving pictures on the tapis. Most always when he comes to New York he looks at his watch and ends his visit by saying: "Gentlemen, I must be leaving now as there is a session of the legislative committee in Pennsylvania and I must be on hand." Such is the activity of M. A. Neff in his work for the exhibitor.

Therefore it behooves all loyal and steadfast motion picture exhibitors to observe Tuesday, April 8th—Exhibitors Day. Let each one contribute, with a hearty good will, ten per cent. of that day's gross receipts, and in that way help to roll up a tremendous fund that will settle the censorship question once and for all; settle it not in the politician's way, but in the exhibitor's way.

LEGISLATIVE "CLEAN-UP" IN INDIANA.

President J. M. Rhodes and Secretary A. C. Zaring of the Indiana Motion Picture Exhibitors' League give an account of their work with the law-makers of that state in a communication to the Moving Picture World. Among the principal bills killed was one to establish a state board of censorship. Others were proposed to regulate the business in one way or another, but all were successfully sidetracked. The letter to the World follows in full:

Editor Moving Picture World,
New York, N. Y.

Dear Sir:—The 1913 session of the Indiana legislature is now ended, and the Indiana Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, through its officers and legal department, has succeeded in preventing all unfavorable legislation that would apply to our business, for there were a great many bills presented to the legislature that would have been detrimental to the picture show business and very expensive to the managers, but through the work of the league all these bills were defeated and the picture show business stands now as it did before the legislature convened. No new laws have been passed, and the managers can conduct their business in the future as they have in the past.

The Censorship Bill that we defeated was very unfair and unnecessary and a direct invasion of personal rights. Had this bill become a law the managers would have had to leave it to the censorship board, consisting of a $1,500-a-year man and a $1,000-a-year woman, as to what pictures they could show and what they could not show. This board would have had the power of telling the people of Indiana what they could see in the picture show. A provision was made that a fee of $5 be paid for every reel examined. Even had the manufacturer and the film exchange paid this fee in the first place, we know that the exhibitor would have finally paid this extra charge by having his rental raised.

The bill requiring a high state license was defeated; the regulation "ventilation bill" also died. Mr. Walsh, the Indiana state factory inspector, presented a very drastic "fire bill" to the legislature and made a strong fight to have it passed. It was killed in one committee, and then presented again by Mr. Walsh. At the second hearing he brought fire chiefs to Indianapolis from all over the state to argue in favor of the passage of this bill. Had Mr. Walsh been successful about 35 per cent. of the Indiana exhibitors would have gone out of business, and the other 65 per cent. would have been compelled to expend several hundred dollars to have complied with the provisions of this proposed law. Besides this, Mr. Walsh would have had vested in himself the power to go into any picture house in the state at any time and stop any show or require any changes that he saw fit. We defeated this bill, and its author, Mr. Walsh, has no more authority over a picture show than any other civilian.

Another bill we defeated was a bill requiring a city fireman in attendance at all picture shows, fireman to be paid by the manager of the show at the rate of $2 a performance.

We were successful in everything we undertook before this legislature except the bill we tried to pass legalizing Sunday picture shows, and in this we feel that a failure was a success, because it required all of the attention of the so-called reformers to defeat this bill, and they didn't get time to prepare and present a bill that they had in mind which would have made it unlawful to operate a picture show or theater on Sunday.

The officers of this league—J. M. Rhodes, president; A. C. Zaring, secretary and treasurer—were in full charge and on duty all the time and with the state league's attorneys, Messrs. Brown and Gronninger, watched each and every move made by the legislature, and feel that the Indiana State League has made a very successful fight and that every exhibitor in the state has been saved a great deal of money.

CONVENTIONS SCHEDULED.

President Neff of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America, announces the following schedule of state conventions. The league of Tennessee will meet in convention at the Tulane Hotel, Nashville, Tenn., on Saturday morning, March 22nd. National Vice-president W. H. Wasserman of Nashville will have full charge of arrangements. Request for information should be addressed to him.

Big preparations are being made for the Exhibitor's League convention of Alabama which will meet at the Hillman Hotel at 10 o'clock Monday, March 24th. There is considerable enthusiasm in Birmingham over the prospective meeting and a large attendance is anticipated. Alex Wall of Birmingham is in charge of the arrangments.

The Motion Picture Exhibitors League of Louisiana will meet in New Orleans on Thursday morning, March 27th. The convention will be held at the Grunewald Hotel commencing at 10 o'clock on the date mentioned. W. H. Gueringer of the Alamo theater, New Orleans will have charge of all arrangements. Louisiana exhibitors are requested to communicate with him.

Mississippi exhibitors will meet in Gulfport, Mississippi on March 28th. Arrangements are being made by National Vice-president Fred Abbley of the New Dixie theater, Gulfport. Mississippi exhibitors are requested to address him for particulars.

The West Virginia Exhibitors League is planning to hold a big convention on the 15th and 16th of April. Secretary L. R. Thomas of Moundsville, Va., is chairman of the committee on arrangements. All West Virginia exhibitors should communicate with him. It is the intention of President Neff to be present at the several conventions, and he expects also to make a visit to the headquarters of the Texas league at Dallas, if possible.

PRESIDENT NEFF IN TOWN.

President M. A. Neff of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America was in New York last week, looking over the plans for the national convention to be held here in July. He attended a meeting of the convention committee and transacted considerable other business while in town.

OPERATORS' BALL.

On Sunday evening, March 23d, the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employes of Greater New York and vicinity, Local No. 35, which organization is composed of theatrical stage electricians and moving picture operators, will get together and give a pleasant evening to their friends, the occasion being their second annual ball. Among those present will be Charles C. Shay, international president of the alliance, and a number of notable stars now appearing in current successes. From the sale of tickets it is already more than evident that the New Amsterdam Opera House will be taxed beyond its capacity.

SHE SAW NO COLORED PEOPLE.

J. H. Kempner, chief of the Cincinnati Kinemacolor office, was pestered for passes by the family washerwoman, whose racial interest had been aroused by his advertisement of "the only real colored motion pictures." Finally he gave her some gallery seats, and the next Monday morning when she reported for her regular weekly laundry engagement he inquired:

"Well, Auntie, how did you like the show?"

"'Deed, Mistah Kempnah, dat sutn'ly wuz one fine show, an' dem dresses was just gorgeous; but I didn't see no real cullud folks in de play,—an' I reckon I'm getting too deef to sit in de gallery, 'cause I couldn't hear one word dem actors said!"

PRESIDENT MACK OF THE MASSACHUSETTS LEAGUE.

By Henry.

Joseph Mack, for the past six years manager of the Hub Theater, Boston, and President of the Massachusetts Branch of the Exhibitors' League, may be truthfully classed as one of the pioneers in the motion picture business, and was a prime mover in the present State Branch. When interviewed, Mr. Mack was in "good form," and we secured a very interesting and instructive story.

Joseph Mack.

Things theatrical have always been his pursuit. Preceeding his advent into the moving picture business, he was for three years with David Belasco's staff in New York. Among some souvenirs that he values is a cigarette case, which was presented to him by Mrs. Leslie Carter on Christmas, 1903. After severing his connection with these forces, he was for a season, manager for Archie L. Shepard, on the New England circuit, then playing one-night stands, with pictures only, at prices that are far in excess to those charged now-a-days. Later on Mr. Mack was manager and lecturer of the Battling Nelson pictures, and of the San Francisco earthquake pictures. After this, Mr. Mack secured the Grand Opera House, Boston, for Sunday nights, and ran straight picture shows, lasting two and one-half hours. As lecturer, manager and film exchange man, there is but very little of the business with which he has not had intimate experience.

Mr. Mack has many pleasing reminiscences of the early days when he did his best to convince the public that there was value, virtue, and much educational merit in the pictures. Mr. Mack is one of the most optimistic and enthusiastic men it has ever been the writer's good fortune to know. He believes in the greatness of motion pictures most sincerely, and he has the unquestioned ability to transmit his ideas to other people. Wherever he happens to be, he is always ready to champion the cause of Cinematography. This optimistic trait of Mr. Mack has stood the New England exhibitors in good stead. It is due in great measure to his efforts, that the Massachusetts exhibitors have their league. Most men would have become discouraged at the utter lack of interest displayed by the majority of exhibitors when the League was first talked of. Not so, with Mr. Mack; he has every faith that the League will surely accomplish great things.

The Massachusetts State Branch is now negotiating for headquarters in the center of the theatrical district of Boston. To co-operate with out-of-town managers, a telephone will be installed, so that after booking his picture program, the manager can communicate with his local house and attend to any business he may desire. The proposed "headquarters," as it is now called, will have an adequate exhibition room, where film exchanges may show their product to League members. "Headquarters" will be a sort of combined business and pleasure place, and should prove a good thing for all concerned.

The fourth regular monthly meeting of the League was held on Tuesday, March 4, 1913, at 694 Washington Street. It was voted to assess the members $10 each to cover necessary expenses, that will be incurred for the acquiring and furnishing of the League's new headquarters. Members who have not sent in their dues to March 1st, are requested to do so at once. More interest should be taken in these monthly meetings, and it is hoped that, no matter what other important business exhibitors may have on hand, that these meetings will take precedence. The officers of the Massachusetts State Branch, Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America is as follows: Joseph Mack, president; Charles Hodgdon, first vice-president; C. H. Buckley, second vice-president; S. H. Bunce, treasurer, and Alden Washburn, secretary.

News and Views of Houses Here and There.

THE NEW THEATORIUM, MOUNT CARMEL, PA.

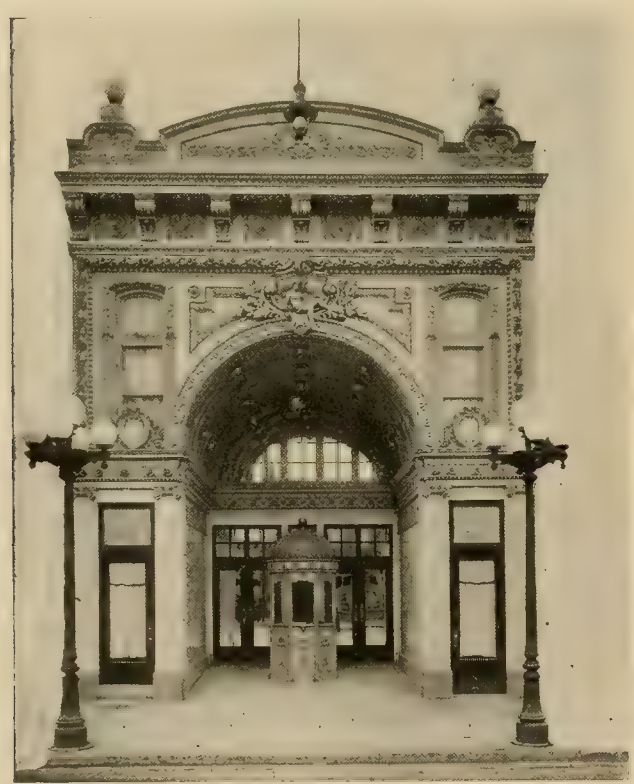
ABOUT five years ago L. J. Chamberlain opened the first moving picture theater in Mount Carmel, Pa. It was a small structure with no fancy appointments, but Mr. Chamberlain always gave his patrons the best show of pictures that could be obtained at that time, and his unfailing courtesy and evident wish won him a constantly increasing patronage. Mr. Chamberlain ran the old house, improving it from time to time until several months ago when he entered into negotiations with Dr. W. J. Harvey, the owner of the property, for the enlargement of the theater which he readily consented to. Plans for the new place were drawn by architect W. H. Lee, and work on the enlargement of the house was begun immediately after the plans were presented to Mr. Chamberlain, who passed upon them. The new theater was opened on Thursday, September 26th, 1912.

The new house occupies ground measuring twenty-five feet wide by one hundred and fifty feet deep. The front, which is two stories in height, is made up of elaborate and massive ornamental decoration, finished in old ivory. The parquette floor has five hundred seats and on the balcony there are two hundred more, making a total of seven hundred in the entire auditorium.



The Theatorium.

Beautiful indeed is the entrance to the new house as the accompanying engraving will attest. The color scheme of the front is of old ivory. The eighteen foot lobby is walled with nine feet of Vermont marble. The floor is mosaic tiled with the name "Theatorium" inlaid. In the center of the lobby is a beautiful ticket booth, which is studded with hundreds of lights. Two entrance doors are on the right and a corresponding number of exit doors on the left.

The interior decorations are indeed pleasing to the eye. Onyx pilasters mounted with golden capitals and embellished with gilded fan shelves and chandeliers rise majestically between panels of delicately toned colors encircled with massive mouldings done in old ivory and trimmed in gold leaf. The color scheme throughout is ivory, old rose and light green with gold leaf. The wood work is all mahogany finished. An unobstructed view of the picture and stage, which is twenty-eight feet deep, eighteen feet wide and has a proscenium opening of seventeen and a half feet, is to be had from any part of the house.

Singing booths are on each side of the stage, crowned with a semi-circle of colored lights. Along the ceiling are seven immense domes, each containing five one hundred-watt tungsten lights, which cast their light against the ceiling. Not a light is in sight while pictures are being shown and yet the place is never dark, always well illuminated. The right number of exits have been provided for and the ventilation is good.

THE STERLING THEATER, SUPERIOR, NEBRASKA.

We publish herewith a photograph of the Sterling theater, Superior, Nebraska, which plays to moving pictures, vaudeville and lectures. The house has a seating capacity of over three hundred.

There are two machines in constant use in the operating room, Power's No. 6a and Pathe. Both are equipped with motors. A mercury arc rectifier was also installed. Mr. E. C. Preston, the proprietor and manager, says that he is well satisfied with the harvest he is reaping from the house and that he could not get along without the Moving Picture World.

THE LYRIC THEATER, SHENANDOAH, PA.

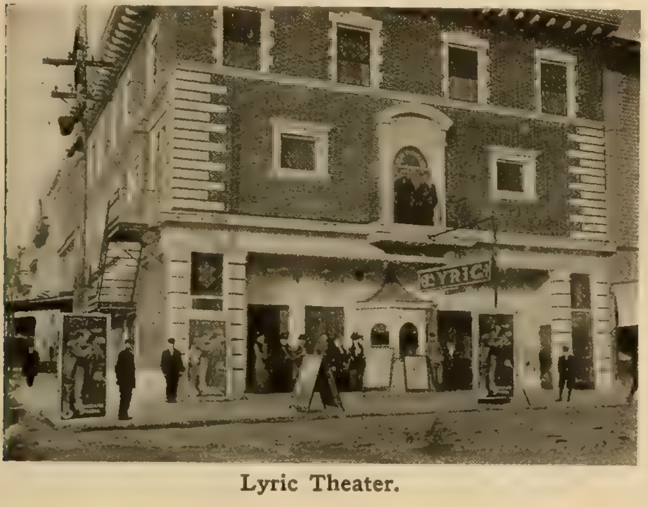
Representing an Intrinsic Value of $25,000. Built Exclusively for the Exhibition of Moving Pictures.

The accompanying engraving of the new Lyric Theater, which is erected on the site of the old Lyric Theater, located at the corner of Center and Jardin Streets, Shenandoah, Pa., is owned and managed by Richard Dabb, a man who has spent many years in the moving picture business and who has never missed a copy of the Moving Picture World since its first issue. Mr. Dabb's old Lyric Theater brought him in such a good harvest of greenbacks that he thought the people of Shenandoah were deserving of a more handsome theater erected exclusively for the exhibition of moving pictures, so he built the new Lyric at a cost of $25,000. The house stands in the center of the city of Shenandoah, which has a population of about 30,000, and is one of the most thriving cities in the anthracite coal regions.

The new structure has a frontage of 46 feet on Center Street. It is three stories in height and is built of pressed Tuna Valley brick with white terra cotta trimmings. Two large entrance doors lead directly to the auditorium, and the only stairways to climb are those which lead to the balcony. On the parquette floor there are 300 beautiful opera chairs and two hundred in the balcony, making a total seating capacity of 500. Directly above the box office in the lobby the name of the place—Lyric—has been worked in electric lights which, together with the large number of other lights, illuminate the entrance beautifully. Terrazzo flooring, a new process of covering used by Mr. Dabb instead of the conventional tile flooring, extends for a distance of twelve feet into the lobby from the pavement.



Lyric Theater.

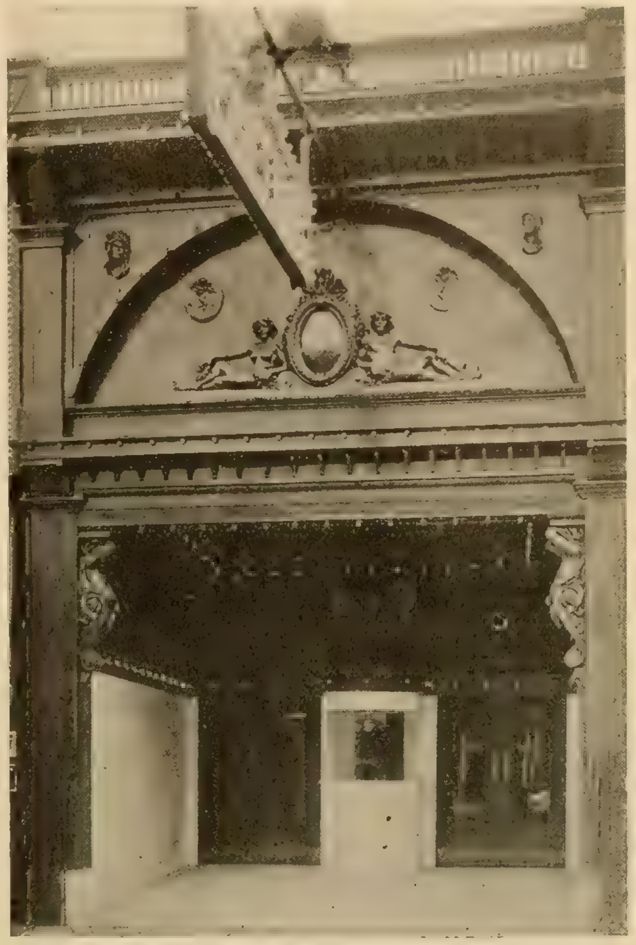
The color scheme of the interior is light and dark green and tan. The wood work is all mahogany finish. Above and on each side of the proscenium arch, which is done in light green and old gold, are several allegorical figures representing drama, art and music. On the ceiling are painted panels in delicately toned colors. The floor of the uaditorium is pitched just enough to enable patrons to see the picture from any seat in the house.

The ventilation and light are perfect in every detail. Suspended from the ceiling are five immense brass domes each containing five 100-watt globes which cast their light against the ceiling. Not an incandescent light can be seen, yet the place is never dark. In the center of the building is a thirty-six-inch ventilating stack which runs the entire length of the building to the roof. Ventilators have also been provided for at the sides of the house. In the operating room there is a Power's No. 6 projection machine. The picture is thrown upon a screen eighteen feet square.

Everything for the benefit of the patrons has been carefully considered and not a thing escaped Mr. Dabb's mind when he had the place designed. He even had installed in various places of the house telephone booths for the convenience of patrons.

TWO PHOTOPLAY HOUSES OF COSHOCTON, OHIO.

The accompanying illustration is a view of the front elevation of the Pastime Theater, owned and managed by C. G. Chacos & Brothers. The Pastime is situated at 538 Main Street, Coshocton, and has a seating capacity of 600. It plays to vaudeville and moving pictures and an admission price of five cents is charged. The picture programme is changed daily. It is known as the most beautiful theater in Coshocton. While we have not been furnished with detailed information as to its embellishment, a careful examination of the cut published herewith will no doubt bear out the manager's statement that it is a beautiful house. The name "Pastime" has been worked in the tessellated flooring of the lobby, which is beautifully illuminated.



Pastime Theater.

THE UTAHNA THEATER.

Another of the theaters owned by C. G. Chacos & Brothers is the "Utahna," a moving picture house located at 549 Main Street, Coshocton. This is a beautiful little moving picture theater with a seating capacity of 300. Its front, as will be seen by the engraving published herewith, is plain but neat and the name "Utahna" has been worked in electric lights which can be seen from a long distance. No posters detract from the plain appearance of the house. The admission price is five cents and the programme is changed daily.

"THE SCRATCH" (Essanay).

Rarely have we seen Augustus Carney to better advantage than in this screamingly funny feature, entitled "The Scratch," booked for release Wednesday, March 26th.

John Walsh, a retired capitalist, invites several of his warmest friends to a week-end party at his magnificent mansion on the Potomac. After the first dinner, which was a memorial occasion in the minds of all who attended, the ladies retired to the balcony, to discuss other women. The gentlemen remained at the table where they enjoyed their cigars. An hour or so later Harry Scott, one of the fortunate or unfortunate guests, whichever you may choose to call him, excused himself, for the purpose of retiring. On his way to his room he met Mrs. Cooper and Miss Henry on the balcony, there they chatted for a while, until the ladies excused themselves, and went to their rooms. Endeavoring to get into his room in the dark, Scott made a terrible mistake by taking Miss Green's room for his own. Thinking Scott an intruder, Miss Green grappled with him, and finally scratched his face severely. The plan of escape which Scott worked with his fellow colleagues, the following morning before breakfast proved a huge success. Miss Green informed the ladies of the household, who had arrived at the breakfast table, some fifteen minutes earlier than the gentlemen, of what had happened the night previous. When Scott entered the dining room with a piece of court plaster on his face, Miss Green was sure she had discovered the guilty party. Her untimely conclusion, however, was cast to the four winds, when eight more gentlemen entered the dining room with court plaster on their faces. This confused Miss Green considerably, until Scott explained his terrible mistake and apologized.

Scene from "The Scratch" (Essanay).

Miss Lillian Drew as Miss Green, played the role admirably, while Augustus Carney, as the shrewd Harry Scott, keeps his audience in a continual uproar.

KINEMACOLOR OPENS OFFICE IN PROVIDENCE.

On account of the drastic laws of Massachusetts regulating film exchanges, the Kinemacolor Company of America has decided to establish its New England distributing plant in Providence, R. I., instead of in Boston, as originally intended. Heretofore the New England service has been handled through the New York offices direct from the Kinemacolor factory at Whitestone, L. I. Fine new offices are being fitted up in the new Steinert Building, 509 Westminster Street, Providence, and within two weeks the bulk of the New England business will be handled from that city.

"DEEDEE'S BLIND MASTER" (Pathe).

A drama in which the leading character is helplessly blind is sure to touch the heart, and a story that touches the hearts of an audience is certain to win unstinted applause. This fact established, the Pathe film entitled "Deedee's Blind Master," released March 20, is worthy of special notice. Aside from this feature, it will appeal to all lovers of animals, as Deedee is a little fox terrier, the faithful companion of the blind man, that will win a wealth of sympathy by frequent flashes of almost human intelligence.

Deedee is "general manager" of Blind Bill's newsstand, acting as cashier and rendering numerous little assistances. While groping his way about the street one day, Bill is struck by a motorcar. Although not mortally injured, Bill is taken to a hospital. The owner of the automobile, to make amends for the injury, gives the hospital surgeons instructions to do everything they can to restore Bill's sight. A renowned eye specialist is placed in charge of the case and performs a delicate operation. The operation is successful. Bill is the happiest man in the world, but Deedee does not share his happiness. The faithful dog finds that his services are no longer necessary and disappears. Bill's long search for Deedee is rewarded by finding him attending to the wants of a cripple—an unfortunate really in need of his services.

Scene from "Deedee's Blind Master" (Pathe).

A well-selected cast, enacting the story with unusual ability, coupled with perfect photography, make it advisable that every exhibitor book this film.

HANDLING GAUMONT FEATURES.

Gaumont state right features are being handled by the Prince Feature Film Company of Philadelphia, for Eastern Pennsylvania Southern New Jersey, Maryland, District of Columbia and Virginia. The American Feature Film Company, of St. Louis, has purchased the Gaumont "White Glove Band" and "The Race for the Millions." The M. & F. Feature Film, of Chicago, is preparing for extensive bookings on the Gaumont feature "By Design of Heaven." The Buckeye Film Company, of Ohio, has had considerable success with the Gaumont animal feature "In the Claws of the Leopard." The Gaumont sales department is making arrangements to place its feature productions in western Pennsylvania and Virginia.

A. H. WOODS GETS INJUNCTION.

In the case of the Miracle Film Company against the New York Film Company, Justice Lehman has granted an injunction against the defendant company, forbidding it from selling pictures representing "The Miracle," pending the determination of an action to decide who has the prior right to the title. The Miracle company owns the pictures purchased by A. H. Woods.

"TAMANDRA, THE GYPSY" (Lubin).

A very romantic Romany story with a vein of pathos all through The chief characters are impulsive and true to the types that make tales. Not vicious but rather pitiful. The picture is made in Florida and has a romantic setting. It is a two reel Lubin Special and doubtless will be one of the successes of the season.

Walter Clark, who is tacitly engaged to his cousin Beatrice Irving, visits a gypsy camp and falling in love with Tamandra, a beautiful gypsy, marries her. James Irving, the uncle turns Walter and his wife adrift and for a time they live in poverty. Tamandra then leaves her husband and joins her tribe. She has a child and to prevent her husband from following her she causes a notice to be published announcing her death. Walter's uncle sees the notice and invites the nephew to return and he and Beatrice renew their engagement. They are about to be married and Tamandra hearing of it sends a letter of congratulations, which is received at the wedding ceremony. The shock induces Walter to renounce the world and he enters a monastery. Beatrice takes up the world task and becomes a slum worker. One day she is attracted by a child who takes her to his mother, Tamandra, who is dying. Beatrice takes the child and finding the father agrees to bring the boy up as her own, while he continues faithful to his "monk" vow.

"THE NEW FILM ACTOR" (Great Northern).

In this clever little comedy subject the beholder is given an opportunity to view the inner workings of an up-to-date moving picture studio. The action takes place in one of the studios of the Great Northern Film Company, and the action is filled with wholesome fun. Fred is the hero and is anxious to become a film actor. But after being given a trial he makes so many blunders and spoils so many pictures that he is ordered out of the studio. He perseveres, however, and is told that if he fulfills the requirements of the company he will be engaged. Then we see him falling out of a balloon, being run over by a railroad train, drinking prussic acid and doing many other seemingly impossible feats. When he returns to the studio in a wheelbarrow the producer decides that Fred has in him the makings of a robust film actor, and consequently he is engaged. The Great Northern players are seen at their best in this comedy, and each member of the cast takes more than ordinary interest in the production because of the familiar surroundings of the studio and plant.

ERMETE NOVELLI IN PICTURES.

Mr. Edward Barry, American representative for the Ambrosio Company, is in receipt of a cable from the home office of his company to the effect that Ambrosio has made a long time contract with the famous Italian tragedian, Ermete Novelli, who will appear in a series of elaborate productions written especially for him and his company. It will be remembered that Signor Novelli paid a visit to America during the theatrical season of 1907, appearing in several of the larger cities with his company in repertoire. Signor Novelli's work was commented upon at that time as highly artistic, and it may be expected that a series of motion pictures with the distinguished player in the cast will be of the most entertaining character.

Mutual Film Corporation

Rental Offices Covering the Entire Country
Executive Offices at 60 Wall St., New York

The Mutual Program Is The Very Best Because:

1. It is founded exclusively on a basis of quality. It releases every week films which have never been equalled in the history of the film business.

2. Quality has never been sacrificed for quantity. A basic program of 21 reels is better than forty or forty-five reels of which the greater portion is below standard.

3. PROTECTION IS AFFORDED MUTUAL EXHIBITORS. The Mutual Film Corporation is content to do a measure of business merited by its commercial value. An exhibitor securing Mutual Service can feel safe that he will not wake up some morning and see his competitor running an earlier run of pictures than he.

4. The value of Mutual Films is attested by the fact that some of the largest theaters in the country have broken all their previous house records with them.

5. The multiple reel features are unequalled by any program on earth. An exhibitor need but compare the Mutual Features with others to be convinced. There are more two and three reel features released regularly than any competitive program. (See list below.)

6. The policy of the Mutual Film Corporation in purchasing its films places the world's markets at its feet. These films are bought on an exclusive basis.

7. The Mutual Film Corporation is the sole agent in the United States and Canada for such popular and leading brands of film as THANHOUSER, KAY-BEE, BRONCHO, KEYSTONE, RELIANCE, AMERICAN, MAJESTIC, EXCELSIOR, MUTUAL EDUCATIONAL, MUTUAL WEEKLY.

8. The Mutual Method of doing business is the only safe one for the exhibitor. He can advertise a coming feature as heavily as he wishes, and not fear that his thunder will be stolen by his competitor, who will book the same film a day or two in advance.

9. Customers are not taken on promiscuously. Before service is contracted for we assure ourselves that we can take care of you and protect you. If you are not a Mutual Exhibitor you should lose no time in ascertaining if your territory is open. DO IT NOW!

THE OLD CLERK (Mar. 24).—An old bookkeeper looses his life-long position through a change in management of the firm for which he has worked. The son of the owner is made manager. He is an up-to-date chap with little respect for old people. He proceeds to clean the establishment of all its "fossils." He starts with the ancient janitor and ends with old Woodcroft, the trusted clerk. Old Woodcroft has especially provoked the young manager by always referring to a note-book when working the combination on the vault door. Young Morton finally takes the note-book away from the clerk, and tears up the leaf on which is registered the combination, telling the old man that a business man of modern training can remember such trifles in his head after one glance at the numbers.

Woodcroft is terribly depressed by his discharge. He broods until he is obsessed with the idea that he will shoot himself at exactly one o'clock. In the meantime the elder Morton, while arranging the final details of turning the business over to his son, has gone into the vault with some papers. The new janitor, eager to show his prowess, polishes the vault door with a rag and during the process closes the door and accidentally throws the lock. The elder Morton is imprisoned. The son cannot remember the combination, despite his boast. He rushes to get old Woodcroft. The latter is interrupted just before the clock strikes his hour of doom, and the old man manages to remember the vault combination in time to save Morton.

THE SCALES OF JUSTICS (Mar. 25).—"Honest" John Kennedy is presented with a medal, for efficiency and bravery, by the board of police commissioners. He becomes engaged to Polly McGuire, and, by so doing incurs the revengeful enmity of "Slippery" Jim Quinn, the political boss of the ward in which Polly lives. Quinn, who has eyes for Polly, much to that young woman's displeasure, threatens to undo Kennedy before another week has passed. He plans a frame up on Kennedy, and with the aid of a marked fifty dollar bill, and the services of a well known crook manages to place Kennedy in such an embarrassing position that the policeman, although innocent, is discharged from the force for accepting a bribe. Now Polly turns against him, believing him to be dishonest. Through a strange chain of circumstances, Kennedy rescues the wife and child of the crook who implicated him and causes his discharge. Moved by the occasion the crook gives Kennedy the evidence necessary to convict Quinn, the man higher up, and reinstate himself in his old position on the force, after which Polly again returns her love and hand.

THE LIFE TIMER (Mar. 26).—Steve and Tom are rivals for the hand of Mona. She prefers Steve; they become engaged and are later married. On the night of the wedding Tom in a jealous rage, is about to kill Steve, but changes his mind when he sees how slim his chances are to make a get-a-way. He decides, however, to waylay Steve the next day. He ambushes himself in the rocks above the trail that Steve is traveling, and, at an opportune time, fires three shots at his enemy. His shots all miss the mark, and Steve, turning quickly, sees Tom and fires back. Steve's bullet is fatal and Tom in falling drops his gun which becomes lodged in a crevice a hundred feet or so below the body. When Tom's body is found and no weapon discovered, Steve is convicted of having deliberately killed his former rival. He is sentenced to life imprisonment and the shock nearly kills his wife. She becomes very ill, and in her delirium sees a vivid picture of the shooting. In a state of somnambulism she walks to the spot where Tom's gun is hidden, recovers it and returns to the house. With this new evidence she manages to secure Steve's freedom.

SHANGHAI, CHINA (Mar. 26).—Another interesting subject in the series of Selig travelogues.

THE FOOD CHOPPER WAR (Mar. 27).—Two old country merchants, proprietors of the only two general stores in an old fashioned village, have been lifelong business enemies each hating the other with a vengence. One has a son, the other a daughter. The young people help their fathers and are secretly in love with each other. Eventually the fathers learn of the secret love of their children, and each one raises a parental uproar, forbidding his child to even see his enemy's "brat." The young people make their plans regardless of their elder's wrath, and begin to save money, with which to marry and start up a store in opposition to those of their parents.

A traveling man comes to town and sells a supply of patent food choppers to each of the rival stores. A price cutting war results from the popularity of the chopper and, by the time that the young people have been united in marriage and have started a store of their own, the rivals are each selling the food choppers at a loss of from 20c to 25c. The young people secretly buy up all the choppers from each store at a price away below cost. When the old fellows awaken to the fact that they are both out of "choppers," and cannot secure additional ones from the factory inside of six months, they also awaken to the successful ruse of their children. A truce is declared, by-gones forgotten, and the enemies life-long battle happily ended.

SALLY IN OUR ALLEY (Mar. 28).—"Sally in Our Alley" is the simple love story of Billy, an apprentice, and Sally, the darling of his heart, who "lives in our alley" in a quaint old fashioned English village.

"Her father, he makes cabbage nets, her mother, she sells laces long," and the humble parents are more than delighted when rich old Mr. Bumbleton asks for Sally's hand. Against her protests, they insist on her marriage. But Sally has a will of her own, and she slyly arranges with Billy, her lover, to fool the old folks. One night she signals to Billy, with a candle, from her bedroom window, that old Bumbleton is down stairs making final arrangements for the marriage. Billy proves himself daring and resourceful. Right under Bumbleton's nose he takes Sally from the upper window, carries her off and marries her, and their life together is a happy one indeed.

ESSANAY.

THE SHERIFF'S HONEYMOON (Mar. 25).—Tom McCarthy, sheriff of Pine Ridge, Arizona, is ridiculed by the cowpunchers for doing his washing. Thoroughly disgusted with single life and all that goes with it, the sheriff determines to get married. In a newspaper the sheriff reads of a young lady who would like to marry a man of the west. It didn't take long for McCarthy to make a hit with Soffie Clutts which was proven by the sheriff leaving town the following day to marry the mysterious lady. During his absence Bad Pete, on a "semi-annual," shoots up the town, which was apropos in those days. Returning to Pine Ridge with his bride, McCarthy discovers the disturber and quickly locks him up. That night the ranchmen, cowpunchers, and in fact all of the sheriff's friends, give him a big reception. The sheriff informs the boys that "they may have the key to the town and go as far as they like"—and hilarity reigns supreme.

THE SCRATCH (Mar. 26).—John Walsh, a retired banker, invites several of his closest friends to a week-end party at his magnificent home on the Potomac. After the dinner, which was a memorial occasion in the minds of all who attended, the ladies retired to the balcony to discuss—other women. The gentlemen remained at the table where they enjoyed their cigars. An hour later Harry Scott, one of the fortunate or unfortunate guests, which ever you may choose to call him, excused himself for the purpose of retiring. On his way to his room he met Mrs. Cooper and Miss Henry, on the balcony. They chattered a while and then the ladies retired. Endeavoring to get into the right room in the dark, Scott made a serious mistake by getting into Miss Green's room. Thinking him an intruder Miss Green scratched his face severely. The plan of escape which Scott worked out with his fellow colleagues, proved a huge success at the breakfast table the next morning, where Miss Green was patiently awaiting the "brute" whom she had scratched. The gentlemen guests, ten in number, had stuck cort plaster on their faces, which confused Miss Green considerably.

THE TRAIL OF THE ITCHING PALM (Mar. 27).—The tipping evil squelched for the time being but later encouraged, proved John Brown's undoing. Jack Peabody, in love with Brown's daughter, Mary, was emphatically refused Mary's hand in marriage, until the former could control his money. Brown, called away on business to Chicago, takes his daughter with him. Previous to this trip Mary's father had had some fake bills made which he thought would stop the tipping evil. Peabody, determined to get Mary, follows her and her father to the Windy City. Mistaking his real money for the fake bills, Brown hands them out to bellboys, waiters and cabdrivers, promiscuously. Mr. Brown is reprimanded by the clerk of the hotel for tipping the servants. Thoroughly disgusted, Brown checks out. Discovering that he had given away all of his money, Mr. Brown is compelled to ask assistance from Peabody, who comes to the front, only too willing to pay the old gentleman's bill. For his kind and generous act, Peabody is rewarded by securing the consent of Mr. Brown to marry the latter's daughter.

THE HERO COWARD (Mar. 28).—Jack Wallace is discharged from the police force for his cowardice. He later secures a position as elevator operator in the De Luxe hotel. Bill Snell, a notorious crook and auto bandit, escapes the police just as they are about to lock him up. The fugitive from justice seeks refuge with friends of his who operate a card game on the fifteenth floor of the De Luxe. His friends give him an automobile coat, goggles and a revolver. He escapes through the window and rushes up the fire escape. The police break down the door just as Snell reaches the eighteenth floor. Wallace, having taken the car up to the top floor, is hailed by Snell, who commands the former to take him down in a hurry. The elevator bell rings and Wallace starts his car up again. A desperate fight ensues

The Finest Theatres of America, England, Scotland, Australia and Cuba use the Motiograph Machine. Is it not a well known fact that these large Companies operating several theatres in circuit, employ only such instruments (human and mechanical) as assure positive success?

They Take No Chances; They Know by Experience

And HERE ARE SOME FACTS—

The Motiograph Machine is built in one factory—its own. It is built only of the best material money will buy. It is built under the direct supervision of the officers of the Company. It is not an assembled product of many factories.

The Motiograph Machine leads always in improvements. No expense is spared in keeping far ahead of the times.

The Motor Drive Motiograph is ten years ahead of all others.

MAKE YOUR OWN COMPARISON—Don't take our word for it. We will send you proof. Also our latest catalog.

in which Wallace is severely injured. He finally overpowers Snell and the car descends to the main floor where the bandit is taken into custody by the waiting officers. Mrs. Wallace calls on Captain Walters a few days later, explains to him that her son had been scared in his youth by a runaway horse, that being the reason he was afraid to stop the runaway, for which he had been discharged. Captain Walters calls on Wallace at his home with a squad of police, and reinstates the latter for bravery. Further, he is promoted to sergeant.

BRONCHO BILLY'S GRATEFULNESS (Mar. 29).—Broncho Billy, suffering from a fever, collapses on the door-step of a ranchman's home. John Harding, returning from his work, carries Broncho Billy into the house and places him on the bed. A doctor is summoned. A few weeks later, Broncho Billy now fully recovered thanks Harding and his wife for their kind treatment and returns to town where he is greeted with a welcome hand by everyone. Two or three days later Fred Church, hiding behind a tree opposite to Harding's home, sees the latter leave. Church forces his attentions on Mrs. Harding. Returning to his home Harding is informed by his wife of what had happened during his absence. The husband, swearing revenge, shoots Church. He is later captured by the sheriff. Mrs. Harding then informs Broncho Billy. In a desperate spirit of gratefulness, Broncho Billy holds up the sheriff and his posse, which enables Harding to escape, meet his wife, and cross the border into Mexico.

EDISON.

KATHLEEN MAVOURNEEN (Mar. 17).—When the squire and his sister visited the peasantry, Fate ordained that the squire's admiring eyes should fall on the beautiful Kathleen Mavourneen. Straightway he told her of the big, glittering world outside and how she would adorn it, would she become his wife. Kathleen was amazed, but promised to give him her answer the next day.

Later arrives Terence O'Moore, Kathleen's lifelong sweetheart. He, too, proposed, but Kathleen remembered the squire's promised visit on the morrow and says she will give him her answer next day.

After his departure Kathleen falls asleep by the fireside and dreams that she has promised to be the bride of the Lord of Kavenagh. Look now upon the stately wedding. It passes. Now behold his lordship tiring of his peasant sweetheart and abusing her, deriding her for her lack of birth and at last plotting to get rid of her. See the meeting between the black-hearted murderer, Rody and the squire. Now it is arranged and for a hundred golden guineas Rody will rid the squire forever of the ill fated Kathleen. Witness now the supposed carriage accident, Kathleen going to her doom and the timely arrival of Terence, who, in a desperate fight, puts down her assailants and turns to settle with Kavanagh. Now see the fight that fills you with horror. Back and forth over the steep precipice until Terence in his frenzy hurls the luckless squire to his death. Imagine now the trial, the conviction and the death sentence of Terence, the long, heartbroken farewell to Kathleen and the solemn tolling bell. The fatal hour has come—the priest enters and Kathleen falls in a dead swoon.

Slowly now the scene fades out and Kathleen is again discovered by the fireside asleep. Now she seems to struggle and suddenly sitting up, awakens. She realizes where she is. Can it be possible? Yes, thank Heaven, it was only a dream. She is relieved beyond understanding and when Terence calls for his answer she is overcome with joy and throwing her arms around him, indicates her answer with a kiss of acceptance.

THE PORTRAIT (Mar. 18).—Not "as in a looking glass" but "as in his own portrait" in a dream does Paul Le Grand, the famous artist, see the lines of dissipation come, one by one, after each successive debauch. Youth and health are both his when he reaches the height of an artist's ambition and wins the "Grand Prize" for his painting.

Now for the new studio overlooking Paris, man servant and all his heart can desire save one, Jeanette, the girl. He gives an afternoon tea at his studio. When the friends have gone Paul begs Jeanette to marry him. She tells him to wait, saying his days of dissipation are not yet over, and leaves.

Paul falls asleep looking at the portrait of himself. Dreams carry him through the dissipations to which the girl had hinted, dancing and women, gambling and wine. Each time he returns to his studio he sees added lines in his portrait. After the last dissipation there is such a radical change in the painting that he is unable to stand it longer and in his dream he cuts the portrait into shreds.

Jeanette, the girl, returns for her gloves which she had forgotten, and arouses him. He then realizes it was only a dream, but the lesson was well taught and he promises to reform.

MOTHER'S LAZY BOY (Mar. 19).—Ben, mamma's spoiled child, grows up to be a lazy boy and poses as a great student to get out of doing hard work that might fall to his share. His hard working father often tries to correct his lazy habit, but mother will not allow her darling boy to be abused and invariably shields him until he becomes the personification of laziness.

One day a pretty girl and her widowed mother move into the neighborhood. Ben becomes smitten with the girl and waits on her and her mother hand and foot, but at home he refuses to raise a finger to help his mother and sister.

Being anxious to ascertain where Ben spends his afternoons his father follows him to the widow's house and is astonished to see how useful the boy can make himself, as well as agreeable. The young lady's sweetheart calls on her and thinking Ben a chore boy, tips him for a service. This is an affront to Ben who flies into a rage and gives a grand display of ungovernable temper. The widow and her daughter become thoroughly disgusted with him and forbid him the house.

Returning home his father refuses to be fooled any longer by the boy's pretended studying, lectures him severely and makes him realize his duty to his hard working parents. Ben having learned his little lesson, turns over a new leaf to prove himself worthy of becoming a useful citizen..

THE DEAN'S DAUGHTERS (Mar. 21).—Rev. William Wells, Dean of Cresswell, has two daughters, Bess and Louise. Bess wants to go to London to study art under a well known master. Her talent as a painter, if she has any at all, is only passable.

Louise, who really has the gift, sometimes gives two or three touches to Bessie's work that make them possible. One of these sketches decides the Dean to consent to Bessie's wishes and the sketch influences Harry Vane, the London artist, to accept Bessie as a pupil.

This artist is successful and has many pupils. He has a gentle caressing way of treating the girls and Bessie, who is very much taken with him from the start, being young and impressionable, mistakes his manner and thinks that he is in love with her. This not being the case and Vane, seeing how matters stand, tells her that she has no talent and that she is wasting her time at his school. This is such a shock to Bessie that she breaks down and returns home in a hurry.

When Louise hears her sister's story she believes that Vane has been trifling with her affections and she deliberately sets to work to avenge her. She goes to London and is admitted as a pupil to the school, under another name, and leads Vane on to fall in love with her. Her efforts meet with success. He shows her his masterpiece, tells her his hopes and ambitions and proposes. This is the chance she has been waiting for. She tells him who she is, accuses him of wronging her sister and cuts his masterpiece to shreds with the palette knife, leaving him dumb with horror for he really loves her.

Poor Louise is full of remorse and self-accusation when she returns home and finds that Bessie has quite recovered, in fact has forgotten all about the artist. Louise has to admit to herself that she loves Vane but now that she has treated him so badly it is hopeless. However, Bess, for once in her life, thinks seriously of others rather than herself and takes in the situation. She writes to Vane and asks him to come and see them. When Vane arrives, Louise and he are left alone to explain away all difficulties.

THE RISEN SOUL OF JIM GRANT (Mar. 22).—Jim Grant has pretty well gone to the bad. Letters from his mother in the country ask him to help her with a little money and the knowledge of her need almost makes him yield to the temptation to join one of his companions, Kid Burke, in a burglary but the same letter is the cause of a row between Jim and Burke and the latter is unceremoniously put out of Jim's rom.

Jim becomes acquainted with Esther Benton who lives with her blind mother in the next room in the tenement. She is in financial straits but through an unexpected stroke of good fortune she receives a sum of money, large enough to supply her present needs. She puts the money away to await the demand of the rent collector but Jim, who has another appeal from his mother, knows about Esther's money and on Easter eve, while the child is out, he tiptoes into the room, where is only the blind mother, and takes the money. Before he can leave Esther returns. She thinks he has come in for a neighborly call and sweetly insists on his staying to their simple supper and afterward remaining while the blind mother reads the story of Calvary and the Resurrection, using the raised-type Bible of the blind. Jim cannot refuse, though in agony. During the Scripture reading we see a vision of Christ on the cross and the two thieves. The effect of her reading and the association with the blind woman and her sweet daughter make Jim contrite and when the rent collector calls and Esther finds that the money is gone Jim restores it and makes a full confession to the child. Jim has completely reformed and all ends happily.

THE LONG AND SHORT OF IT (Mar. 24).—Theodore Bragg, Esq., enters an Italian fruit shop, sees the Misses Stell and Ethel Jenkins and tries to win by flirtation these two daughters of the East Side. As he leaves the shop with amorous eyes centered upon the girls he runs into Long Green and Tad. Tad gives Bragg a sound beating but he is finally rescued by Long Green.

Later he is seen in a corner saloon relating to his friends how, in an affair of honor, he rescued two young and lovely ladies from the insults of two brutal ruffians. The scene fades into the shop where he performed the "gallant rescue" and later owing to his eloquence at the bar of justice, the ruffians are sentenced to eighty-five years imprisonment. The tender, cooing young ladies receive him into their home and bestow upon him evidences of their warmest affections.

Again the scene fades into the saloon where Bragg concludes his tale. Abruptly Long Green and Tad enter. Tad makes a great effort to lick Bragg again but is prevented by Long Green. Bragg makes a dash for the door but is drawn back by his friends who make him buy drinks for all.

TEA AND TOAST (Mar. 24).—Artemas Winthrop suffers from dyspepsia, and he is ordered by the physician to the country to take a rest and live on a diet of tea and toast.

Believing himself more feeble than he really is he decides to go to the country to visit a farmer cousin and his wife taking his only friend, a dog, with him. Arriving at the farm he is considered a most unwelcome guest on account of his irritable disposition.

It so happens that the farmer and his wife are called away on account of the illness of a relative and he is left in the care of a neighbor. The neighbor is a good natured but domineering woman who does not believe in encouraging his whims. She therefore cooks for him a big meal of corned beef and cabbage. Unused to being opposed he insists on having his tea and toast but she treats him like a child and tries to persuade him that all he needs is good substantial food. He flatly refuses to eat the corned beef and cabbage and is informed he will take that or nothing.

He attempts to make his own but she puts him out of the kitchen. His opportunity comes when she goes down to the cellar. He locks her down and in triumph makes his own tea and toast and repairs to his room to enjoy it while the woman who finds herself a prisoner in the cellar is obliged to cut her way to freedom with an axe. Aroused to a high pitch of anger she goes to his room and gives him to understand in plain terms what she thinks of him. The dyspeptic's dog seeing him master abused springs at the woman who hastily makes her escape through the window making a bee line for home with the dog in pursuit. When he finally does get her he helps himself to a goodly portion of her dress and the master at last is able to enjoy his tea and toast.

BREAD ON THE WATERS (Mar. 25).—John Wilson, in a New England small sized city, lived and carried on a manufacturing business. His family consisted of his beloved wife, Mary, his daughter, and a rather dissipated son, Jack. Things seemed to be growing worse with the boy, so, after due consideration, Wilson decided if his dissipation continued he would send him away to try and make a man of himself. It did continue and the night finally arived when he was going to order him away. Mother and daughter had been told but their pleadings were useless. Jack came home under the influence of liquor and the father, unable to stand it longer, ordered him to leave and remain away until he amounted to something.

As Jack started to go the mother's love for the weak one quickly showed itself. She begs him to do better, to redeem himself, not by word but by slipping an envelope into his hands on which were written words to that effect. Jack mistakes it for a check and gladly takes it. The next day we see him about to go away. He remembers the envelope his mother gave him and opening it he finds the mother's appeal just as a "down and outer" appears and begs for something. The thought strikes Jack, as a good joke, to give him the slip of paper and after doing so he boards the outgoing train for new fields.

The "down and outer" reads the paper and it seems to give him a new lease on life. He obtains a position in Wilson's manufacturing plant, is well received and is greatly favored by Mary.

One night while calling on her he tells of his past and shows the slip of paper that helped him to do better things. She recognizes the writing as her mother's, questions him and by degrees it dawns on the two that Jack must be found. Varick, the once "down and outer" starts to find him and does eventually in an awful condition of intoxication. Finally he makes him come to his senses and takes him home. All is explained and the slip of paper, containing the mother's message finally did as she had hoped it would—reforms him.

THE UNPROFITABLE BOARDER (Mar. 26).—Jones, an unscrupulous young man of good appearance, does not believe in paying his bills and is constantly being dunned by his landlady for being in arrears for a considerable amount. His claims of having a rich uncle who will pay his debts is finaly disbelieved and he finds himself dispossessed. He now finds himself out in the world without baggage but not for long for he buys another suit case for sixty-nine cents and with it sallies forth to the outskirts of town where he finds a rural house with a shingle bearing the welcome words "Boarders Wanted.' Here the unsophisticated landlady believes the tale of his rich uncle. Taking advantage of these plain country folk he makes desperate love to Sally the daughter. She, thinking him to be a rich city chap, jilts Cy Perkins, a country bumpkin with whom Jones has some ludicrous clashes. Aside from this Jones feels secure as far as three meals a day and his lodgings are concerned until his former landlady, who happens to be a sister of his present landlady, pays her sister a visit. Then the whole scheme is laid bare and cowardly Cy Perkins, whom he has intimidated up to this time, becomes a lion and throws Jones bodily out of the house. The scuffle continues outside and develops into a surprising and ridiculously funny climax, which can hardly be described but is sure to provoke shouts of laughter.

A WAY TO THE UNDERWORLD—(Being the Ninth Story of "What Happened to Mary"—Mar. 28).—Mary, aided by John Willis, testifies in court against her uncle, Richard Craig, and his son, Henry. They are being tried for embezzling bank funds. They are found guilty and sentenced to twelve years' imprisonment; whereupon Richard turns to Mary and vows vengence upon her. Shortly afterwards in his cell he communicates with his son, a few cells away, by means of a thread.

Mary will be twenty-one in two weeks and if she does not appear then to claim her fortune the money goes to Henry. Hence the prisoners must find some way to get her out of the way. With this end in view Richard writes to Billy Peart. He at once comes to the prison and while the guard grows lax in his watchfulness he is instructed what to do. Peart goes at once to Mary's stenographic office but finds she has sold out the business. He learns her home address, however, and calls upon her. She is stunned to see him but is very affable. Without warning he feigns illness and has Mary help him down to the street but when he reaches the sidewalk he declares he cannot take another step.

An automobile stands at the curb and the intriguing chauffeur tells Mary he will take them to a doctor. She enters the car with the ostensibly sick man but instead of being taken to a physician, is driven to Peart's home. There she learns it was all scheme and finds herself a prisoner in a room far above the sidewalk. The door is locked and, driven almost frantic, she makes a rope of the bedclothes and lowers herself to the ground. On the street she sees that Peart is following her and breaks into a run only stopping when she comes to a Salvation Army meeting room. She rushes in and suddenly decides to become a "lassie" and by this means find a way to the underworld and learn the secret of her parentage.

When the heroine makes her escape from Peart's home she actually slides down two hundred feet on the side of an apartment building. It is almost unnecessary to say it is very thrilling.

BETWEEN ORTON JUNCTION AND FALLONVILLE (Mar. 29).—Edward Burke and Jim Mercer were suitors for the hand of Edna Merrill. She liked Edward because he was breezy and full of life and the night he proposed she accepted him on the spot. Jim, on the other hand, was slow, old-fashioned and pokey, just a station agent, the kind who would be at the same job all his life. Edward was an engineer on the same line, young and ambitious; the kind of a fellow who would appeal to Edna.

This story really begins when Ed. Burke starts from the round-house on his daily run with local fifty-one. He reaches the station where Jim is agent and passes through. Then Jim heard the ticker calling frantically. It was from Orton Junction. The agent there frantically appealed to him for help. He had allowed a special freight to pass, having forgotten the orders to hold her up and give number fifty-one the right of way. Jim was terror-stricken. He flashed back to Orton Junction that number fifty-one had left his station, Fallonville, just four minutes before and that he could do nothing. Back flashes the Orton Junction agent: "Freight and No. 51 will meet at Smith's Crossing. For God's sake do something." Jim could do nothing. It wasn't his fault if Burke was killed. He hadn't made the mistake. It would give him a chance to win the girl. Then he realized all that the girl had meant to Edward. He saw in his mind's eye the trains coming together, the frightful crash, the mutilated bodies and the accusing finger of Edna. Yes, he could and would do something. Rushing like a madman to a grocery store in the village he telephoned to Edna telling her of the impending collision and to ride her horse, Roxy, like the wind to Smith's Crossing and stop the first train she saw coming in either direction.

Now the great race for life is on. The trains are seen approaching. Edna is seen galloping, nearer and nearer. Will she be in time? Now she reaches the track and places her horse across it, waves her hand frantically to the on-rushing train. It stops within four feet of her and she turns and riding on, stops the other.

Burke's surprise when he runs forward and finds who has saved him is a thing to see in the picture. They all return to Fallonville and Jim, a real hero, is thanked by his rival. He takes Edna's hand and Edward's and tells them that he did it for her.

VITAGRAPH.

BROTHER BILL (Mar. 24).—Bill and Jim, brothers, live a lonely life in the mountains. Jim makes a trip to town. He becomes infatuated with Nan, the daughter of the general storekeeper. Pete, one of the rough-necks of the town, thinks she belongs to him. When he sees Jim paying attention to her, he shows his displeasure and declares his intention of putting a stop to his interference. Brother Bill becomes anxious when Jim does not return. Bill learns the situation of affairs and he asks Nan not to jolly Jim any further. In reply, he receives a slap in the face. There is a dance on at the Hall that night, and Jim has a date to take Nan. Pete is furious and follows them. Bill gets to the dance hall in time to shoot out the lights and prevent Pete from getting a bead with his gun on Jim. The dancers are thrown into confusion in the darkness. Bill makes up his mind to teach Nan a lesson for trifling with Jim. He seizes her around the waist and carries her outside. Jumping on his horse with Nan in his arms, he makes off to his cabin. He tells her she can go back home if she promises never to interfere with Jim again. She threatens to kill him. He tells her to help herself. His gun is at her disposal. She takes it, but when she sees the fearlessness of Bill, she hands him back his gun. Her heart is touched by his love for his brother and his general manliness, offers him her hand, and tells him that she could love a man like him. Bill places his arm around her waist, saying, "And I could love a girl like you."

Nan's father, after Bill has run away with Nan, forms a posse and goes in pursuit. Jim joins them and is in the lead. From a distance, he sees Nan and Bill at the door of the cabin, clasped in each other's arms. He surmises what it all means and returns to the pursuers and tells them that there is no use in going farther as their quarry has fled in another direction.

DICK, THE DEAD SHOT (Mar. 25).—Dick has an uncontrollable mania for reading dime novels. The new minister is expected to take dinner with the family. Dick's parents try to impress upon him that it will be necessary for him to act his prettiest and make a favorable impression. Dick is so deeply engrossed in his novel he pays no attention to them, and when the minister calls, he forgets all about him and keeps on reading. He brings his novel to the dinner table and he is banished to the kitchen, where he gathers together an ample supply of cakes and pies, takes his gun and wanders off into the country.

It is discovered that Dick has disappeared. His mother becomes greatly excited. Everybody goes on a still hunt for the lost one. They get information that Dick has been seen going in a certain direction. The boy sees them coming, and puts on extra speed, followed by the constable, his parents, the minister and everybody in town.

Dick manages to get far enough in advance to make for home in time to climb a ladder at the side of the house and get into bed before the arrival of his pursuers. As soon as the followers reach the house, they enter and find Dick in bed, hidden underneath the covers. He is unceremoniously pulled out and led to the barn by his mother, where his father, who has just caught up, with the procession, arrives and insists upon giving him a severe beating, with a club he hastily picks up. Dick's mother objects and declares her right to administer the necessary punishment. Taking off her shoe, she enters the barn and dusts the seat of her son's trousers good and plenty.

LOVE LAUGHS AT LOCKSMITH (Mar. 26).—Jack finds a way to see Bess after her father ships her off to boarding school. Jack follows her and manages to get in communication with her by climbing a tree outside the window of her classroom. Bess manages to escape from the Preceptress's vigilance long enough to tell Jack the girls are to have a sheet and pillow-case party that evening. If he will come, they will see that he is furnished with the pillow and sheet so that he may be with them without fear of detection. Jack agrees to this plan and is on hand at the appointed hour. The girls soon have him disguised in the regulation outfit, the same as everybody else. Everything is going along swimmingly, when Jack, forgetting himself, sticks his feet out beneath the sheet. The Preceptress comes in and detects Jack's presence. He is told to make himself scarce and the girls are sent to their rooms in disgrace. A short time afterwards, when all is quiet, and the Principal thinks she is alone, Professor Dinkey cautiously approaches and whispers words of love in her ear. They sit upon the stairs and he places his arm around her waist and is just about to kess her when the girls, who have been watching, rush down the stairs, with shouts of laughter, point reprovingly at them. The Principal and the Professor confused try to excuse themselves. The girls threaten to publish their little escapade, if they are not allowed to have gentlemen callers. Permission is given and immediately Jack is called back and told he can visit Bess at least once a week.

IN OLD QUEBEC (Mar. 26).—Scenes around about the city of Quebec, Canada, showing many of the points of interest, old buildings, and quaint streets associated with the early history and settlement of one of the oddest and oldest cities in America.

GETTING UP A PRACTICE (Mar. 27).—Becoming impatient waiting for patients, young Doctor Bob Lyons is about discouraged. To add to his misery, his sweetheart's father, Mr. Irving, distinctly objects to Emily, his daughter, marrying Bob until he has a practice. Bob is in a serious quandary how to get it, and at the same time, get Emily. Assistance comes most unexpectedly. Jack, Bill and Dick, three young college chums of Bob, stop off at Elmhurst to visit Bob, who tells them all about his troubles. Together, they hit upon a little scheme, which proves the proper caper. They decide to stay over two or three days. That evening, there is to be a lecture in the Town Hall, which Bob is to attend and during the delivery of the discourse, one of the boys is to enter the Hall very excitedly and ask for Doctor Lyons, to attend a patient, without delay.

The next day, two of the boys attend the Church Fair. They make themselves very popular, and being strangers in town, they are very much sought after by the girls. They spend their money on bon bons, pink lemonade, etc. Suddenly, one of the boys is taken with cramps, and falls helpless upon the floor. He knows he has been poisoned and calls for a doctor. His chum recommends that they call Dr. Lyons. Immediately he is sent for and hurriedly arrives, bustling through the crowd and going to the assistance of the suffering young man. These two incidents prove valuable advertising for the Doctor, and everybody in town is talking about Dr. Lyons and his wonderful skill. He is beseiged with patients, and has to work night and day. He now makes bold to write Emily's father and ask him for his daughter in marriage. Mr. Irving calls to see the Doctor. He is astonished to see his rooms crowded with ailing humanity, from far and near. He is convinced that Bob is a success, and withdraws his objections to him as a son-in-law. The next day Bob's chums leave town, with a hearty farewell from Bob, Emily and her father.

BUNNY BLARNEYED (Mar. 28).—John Bull is greatly annoyed to find that his daughter is receiving the attentions of a young man other than his choice. He forbids his daughter seeing the young man again. He takes her on a trip to Ireland, during which time he hopes she will forget George, the young man in question. Alice tells George when she and her father start, etc., and George takes the same train. They arrive at Blarney Castle and John shows extreme contempt for the idea of kissing the stone, until his daughter tells him he can't because he is too fat. Then he insists he will kiss it anyway. He sends the Jaunting Car Driver for a rope to let him down into the hole beneath the stone. George steps up and tells John that he intends keeping him hanging there in the hole until he gives him his consent to marry Alice. This John agrees to do. After he has really kissed the wonderful stone, he discovers that he is somehow very happy, is able to appreciate the joke on himself and gives Alice and George his blessing.

JEAN AND HER FAMILY (Mar. 28).—Jean, the Vitagraph Dog, is a celebrated player. Her many appearances in Vitagraph Life Portrayals have made her so well known, she has become a moving picture celebrity. A few weeks ago there was only one Vitagraph Dog, and Jean still bears that distinction, although no doubt, since she has given birth to four sons and two daughters, we can soon look for several Vitagraph Dogs with the inherited talent of their mother.

THE TWO BROTHERS (Mar. 29).—Pasquale and Romaine are twin brothers. Romaine joins the Mexican Army and proves himself very efficient and fearless in the service of his country. He is promoted to a commission and stands high in the estimation of his superiors. Pasquale is a worthless ne'er-do-well, an outcast and a wanderer. His father will not permit him to abide in his home. He comes back and his mother sees him. She is in fear that his father will catch him and again throw him out. His mother, in fear and trembling, feeds him and furnishes him with money and implores him to leave the house before his father's arrival. She sees his father coming and tells Pasquale to escape. He flees to the garret, but his father sees evidence of his having been there and abuses his wife for permitting their disreputable son to enter their abode. The mother tries to defend him, and the father, in anger, attempts to strike her. Romaine enters and throws his father aside; they draw daggers. The mother takes Romaine's dagger from his hand and drops it upon the floor. Romaine then departs to the barracks, his father watching him from the window. Pasquale, thinking his father has gone, descends from the attic and picks up Romaine's dagger. His father throws him outdoors. He wanders about and at nightfall meets his father, attacks him, and stabs him with Romaine's dagger, to death.

Anita, Romaine's sweetheart, happens along at this moment and sees Pasquale crouching over the form of the dead man. She notifies the officers at the barracks and they immediately go to investigate. In the meantime, Romaine discovers his father's dead body and is mournfully leaning over it when the officers come and arrest him. He is tried for murder, found guilty, and sentenced to be shot.

Pasquale, in the meantime, goes out into the open country, but his conscience will not rest and he returns on the day of the execution of Romaine. He makes his way to the barracks, and looks with horror upon the dead body of his brother. He kneels in prayer, asking forgiveness for his sin. Anita enters and at once recognizes him as the murderer of his father. She stealthily withdraws and awaits his coming. As he is leaving the barracks, she kills him, avenging the death of her lover.

LUBIN.

A MOONSHINER'S WIFE (Mar. 24).—Joshua Craig and his daughter, Meta, have never seen or been farther than the backwoods of a turpentine camp. One day they set out in their old wagon in search of a new place. Night overtakes them and they put up at John Vance's camp. Vance is impressed with the plain and unsophisticated Meta. A week passes and they are married. Craig is informed of the marriage and is little interested beyond asking money for his share of giving up

FILM EXCHANGE MEN

To Take Complete Charge of Exchanges About To Be Opened in New Territories!

The Universal Film Manufacturing Company is about to open film exchanges in several districts not at present getting the Universal program. This means a marvelous opportunity for the right men, a most profitable and assured future with the strongest film manufacturing concern in the world.

If you are thoroughly familiar with the exchange business; if you are qualified in every way to start a new exchange and develop a territory; if you are not afraid of real work and constant hustle; if you can show us a keen knowledge of the business of running and upholding a film exchange—then communicate with us this instant.

No matter in what capacity you are acting at present—whether as a film exchange manager or assistant manager or anything else—tell us your whole story and we will treat your communication with the utmost confidence.

If you feel in your heart that you are the right man for such a job, file your application immediately. If you are not a first-class man, please do not waste your time and ours with correspondence.

Recent events and the marvelous growth of this concern prove that no matter what may happen to other film corporations, the Universal is destined to maintain its present leadership. But we need all the good men we can get. Are you one of them?

IMPORTANT—Mark your envelope "Office of the President."

Do you want us to sell on the Open Market?

The Universal Film Manufacturing Company is seriously considering the plan of selling its releases on the open market in many sections of the United States and Canada, owing to the unsatisfactory manner in which its product is being handled in such territory. The object of this move would be to get Universal films into the hands of many hundreds of exhibitors who really want them but are unable to secure them under prevailing conditions.

This advertisement is for the purpose of ascertaining what men or companies or film buyers of any description would be interested in such a proposition; what their resources are; how much of our film they could buy and so on. We not only invite immediate telegrams from such persons, but we suggest the advisability of their coming to New York, if they are sufficiently interested, to discuss the matter thoroughly with a view to making definite arrangements at once.

If the open market is the coming thing in America, the Universal is desirous of establishing it, taking the lead in this matter just as it has always taken the lead in film affairs since the Universal Company was formed. If we receive assurance of enough support in establishing the open market, we are ready to take the initial step without further delay.

We also solicit communications from big theatre interests, giving their views on a tentative plan for furnishing Universal films direct to such theatres instead of through a middle man.

Don't wait to write—Telegraph immediately

UNIVERSAL FILM MANUFACTURING CO.

Universal Scores the Greatest Beat of Film History by Releasing the Only Genuine Mexican War Film. Exclusive Subject May Completely Change Attitude of United States Government Toward Mexican Government

Pictures that brought a whole roomful of New York newspaper reporters to their feet with excitement in the exhibition room of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company; pictures that brought flashes of fire and excitement to the eyes of Gen. Garibaldi (Madero's former Chief of Staff); pictures that bore the stamp of absolute genuineness—such are the Mexican war pictures the Universal has secured for YOU, MR. EXHIBITOR!

Pictures showing the results of the most remarkable war in the history of the world—a war fought up and down the streets of a modern city; pictures showing modern office buildings shot to pieces; residences destroyed by shot and shell; pictures showing the bullet-marked walls of the famous Arsenal where Diaz conducted his campaign, the torn and smashed walls of the penitentiary and of the National Palace where Madero fought his losing fight; pictures showing miles of torn-up railroad track; dynamited trains; blown-up bridges; burned railway stations; pictures showing Mexican rurales and regulars on their way to and from the scene of battle—such are the Mexican war pictures the Universal has secured for YOU, MR. EXHIBITOR!

Pictures proving that Madero was shot with his back to the penitentiary walls instead of in an automobile; pictures that have given the United States government its first authentic news of Mexican conditions; pictures that have caused the Universal's camera expert to be summoned to appear before the Committee on Foreign Relations; pictures that may decide the future course of two Nations—such are the Mexican war pictures the Universal has secured for YOU, MR. EXHIBITOR!

his daughter, which is doled out to him. He is then ordered to move on and Meta and Vance return to the shack where she becomes more a slave than a wife.

Two years elapse and Wilbur Stuart, an acrobat, is finishing his act at the town hall. Julia Swift, one of the town girls, is attracted by Stuart, and as he is leaving the place, attempts to speak to him, but is met with a snub by Stuart. Rushing to her gentleman friend, she tells him that Stuart has insulted her. A fight ensues in which the man is killed by Stuart by a hard blow on the jaw. The sheriff immediately goes on the hunt for the acrobat. Stuart, who has been running, is almost exhausted when he sees Meta at the well. Rushing in upon her he tells her of the affair. The Sheriff and a deputy are closely following. He pleads with Meta to hide him and having aroused the girl's sympathy, they rush off to the still, where Stuart also wins Meta's admiration. The sheriff and deputy come up in front of the shack and question Vance about the acrobat. He is ignorant of what Meta has done and calling her, the men question her, but she answers in the negative. The men call for torches and all go off in search of Stuart, but not until the sheriff has aroused the husband's jealousy through a little flirtation which he carried on with Meta. Remembering her new friend she gets food and clothing and, rushing off to the shack, brings them to Stuart. The men having failed in their search, return to the house. The sheriff decides that they will stay at Vance's for the night, much to the disgust of Vance. The sheriff has been drinking heavily and flirts with Meta, who noticing her husband watching from behind, encourages it. All turn in for the night. Meta, going to her room, is thinking about Stuart. Vance joins her and she feigns being asleep. Looking at her doubtfully he vows to watch, and lying alongside of Meta falls asleep. She rises slowly and passes out of the house, joining Stuart at the still. The sheriff wakes, and, finding the bucket empty, goes to the well. As he is drawing water he feels a shot whiz by him from Vance's bedroom window. Vance having discovered Meta's absence, feels that the sheriff is responsible and shoots. The sheriff is killed and Vance badly wounded. The sheriff's body is discovered by the deputy, who, giving the alarm, continues on the hunt for Stuart. He finally arrests Stuart and Meta as well. Stuart is found guilty, but at the critical moment Vance rushes on and confesses to the murder of the sheriff. And so Meta and Stuart find a soul.

SUCH AN APPETITE (Mar. 25).—Adolphus Haughton prepares for a masquerade at which he expects to get his answer from Leila Vancroft. The costumer sends Haughton a gorgeous cavalier make up, which he in a note describes to the young lady that she may recognize him. Just as Haughton is dressed he is taken with a fit of sickness and is forced to remain at home. He writes a note excusing himself to the lady and sends his valet to deliver it, also to carry back the costume.

On the way Caulkins, the valet, is held up by four hoboes, who bind him, throw him behind a fence and carry off the suit and letter which is addressed to the Bal Masque. They destroy the letter and hasten to the ball. Hobo No. 1 arrays himself in the lilac costume and being admitted, immediately goes to the supper room and attacks the table. Miss Vancroft recognizes the suit and sees her supposed lover shoveling in the elaborate menu. She is disgusted at the sight and retires. The Hobo having gourmandized to his content then escapes and changes the costume to another of his pals, who is admitted and repeats the gourmandizing act. Again the lady sees the awful sight. The suit is again transferred to the third and fourth of the quartette and each time the lady observes the horrible feed and believes it to be one man and her admirer. Next day Haughton writes her telling her that he has had an awful fit of indigestion; she is not surprised but so disgusted that she gathers up all of his presents and takes them to him. The incident is then explained and Leila nestles down in the arms of her fiance.

THE FIXER (Mar. 25).—Jim Gray is a hen-pecked old man who can't make his eyes behave. The only thing that saves him from being a gay libertine is that the girls only laugh at him. He gets caught by his wife chasing Tess Ne Moyer, at a time, when, according to his card on the office door, he is out on important business. Gay ducks, but when he turns up at the house that evening, he is loaded down with presents for his wife. When she gets them all she enters the house but Gay is given the sign to go away. He goes to his friend, Fixer, who promises to fix it. His scheme is to make love to Mrs. Gay, and let Gay burst in, but as Gay approaches the house, the noise warns him to keep on walking. Fixer is thrown out of the house and June Ne Moyer, his fiance, comes to his relief when she learns that he tried to kiss Mrs. Gay, she hands back the ring and Fixer fades away. In Fixer's bachelor apartment there is deep gloom. Fixer is sad because he isn't married and Gay is sadder because he is.

MEMORIES OF HIS YOUTH (Mar. 27).—Twenty years elapsed and Arthur James has become a famous painter. All these years he has honored the memory of Grace Hawkins, a married woman. He hears of the death of her husband and returns full of hope to the old manor. There he finds that the place had burned down and that Grace, too, has died. Happening into an art shop sometime later he comes across the portrait of Grace which he himself had painted, and he has it removed to his studio.

Philip Hawkins, Grace Hawkins' son, in the meantime has became a successful broker and is a member of a large brokerage firm. He goes to the studio of the famous painter, to arrange for a portrait of his senior partner and there, comes across the portrait of his mother. A strong friendship exists between the two men. On Philip's side a deep admiration for the older man, on Arthur's side love for the son of the woman he loved. Arthur soon becomes the confident of the younger man and learns about his love affair with Madeline, the daughter of his partner. The firm of Philip Hawkins & Co. is about to float some bonds for a Mining Company and Philip is sent to investigate the mine by a Trust Company which intends taking a large share of the bonds. On his return Arthur questions him about the mine and learns that although he is not satisfied with it he intends to float the bonds. Arthur tries to show him the dishonor of this, but Philip cannot see it. Finally in despair the artist leads Philip to the portrait of his mother and tells him the story of his own fight for honor. Philip is deeply affected, and when the time comes for action in regard to the mine he tells the truth. The result is the insolvency of the firm and a break with Madeline forced by her father. A letter from the president of the Trust Company congratulating Philip on his honorable action and offering him a position, reconciles the father to Philip and to his alliance with Madeline.

THE GIFT OF THE STORM (Mar. 28).—Rose Richmond, pretty, light-hearted and emotional, with the undeveloped nature of a child, is the leading lady of a theatrical troupe of which Herbert Delane is manager and leading man and with whom she thinks she is in love. Delane is superficially attractive, but at heart selfish and a brute. The troup is stranded in a Colorado town, and it sets out to walk to the railway station. Rose and Delane quarrel, and in his rage he leaves her to shift for herself, and not until the next day does he become alarmed concerning her.

Rose, losing her way, wanders into an unsettled region, eventually finding refuge in the cabin of Jim Reed, a young prospector. That night a blizzard keeps Rose and Jim stormbound in the cabin, and it also prevents Delane from searching for Rose. Jim has fallen in love with his mysterious little guest. To Rose, Jim is a hitherto unknown type of man, and new ideals are beginning to form in her heart. When the storm ends, Jim goes for a sleigh to take the girl to the railway, but before his return, Delane comes upon the cabin, bringing with him a telegram offering Rose an opportunity to appear in a Broadway production. In her excited delight, Rose does not leave a word of farewell for Jim.

In the cabin, Jim dreams longingly of the unknown girl, even as Rose in the midst of the success she attains, sometimes thinks of the kind, strong, and honorable man, contrasting so vividly with Delane. Nevertheless, with a cynical indifference, she allows her engagement to Delane to be renewed. Jim at last strikes it rich, and business takes him to the East, where he chances to see Rose in a passing automobile. He searches for her, knowing that she is in the city, and at length chances to meet her at a moment when she is filled with disgust at the drunken antics of Delane. Jim knocks Delane down and escorts Rose to her home, where he declares his love, without mentioning his new found wealth. The next day they are married and Jim takes her to the magnificant home he has purchased. It is of the cabin in the hills Rose has dreamed, and it is there that they spend their honeymoon.

IN THE LAND OF THE CACTUS (Mar. 29).—Estelle Royster induces by auto sugestions the thought that she has the white plague, and gradually but surely acts upon her own suggestion, until we find her an invalid. Her physician, not understanding the case, orders her to the land of cactus. Her father, who worships her, takes her to the Mexican border and there they establish themselves with one, Henry Arce, a very wealthy cattleman and ranch owner and incidentally an old friend of Royster's. Shortly after arriving, Arce's two favorite foremen meet Estelle and both fall in love with her in their own ways. Estelle favors Bob Armabile, the American vaquerro, but is fascinated by Ramon, a white Mexican. Bob's suit is favored by Estelle's father, but with love and everything that can be had for money, Estelle continues to sink as days go bye. Ramon's love gives him power to see that the girl's illness is purely mental. He decides to steal her and take her into the mountains and force her to regain her health. He does so, and after a month of roughing it among the cactus and the boulders of the big mountains on the border of Mexico, she wholly regains her strength, when Bob and Arce, the cattleman, come down upon them after days of weary searching. The girl explains. The two men stand with hands out and the girl does not know which one to take, but finally turns from the Mexican boy to the American, leaving the man who had worked the miracle alone in the mountains, she returning to her home, health and happiness.

HEROES ONE AND ALL (Special—2 reels—Mar. 29).—Jane Smiley has two sweethearts, Jim Dorsey, a husky young policeman, and Jack Barbour, a young fireman. Every day on the way to work she passes first Jim and then Jack. Both men think they stand first in her affections, but Jane is simply leading them on for amusement. She works at the main board in the central telephone office and one day has a row with a stenographer in a factory office of Fred Jackson. Fred, in exasperation, takes the phone from his stenographer to call down central, but changes his mind when he hears what a sweet voice Jane has. The conversation results in an introduction to Jane, the manager of the phone company being an old friend. Much to the chagrin of Jim and Jack, Fred gets ahead famously with Jane and finally asks her to marry him. She hesitates, not being sure of her love.

Fred works late one afternoon and lets his employees go home early. A crook has sized up the situation and takes that afternoon as his time to call on an errand of burglary. On the dark stairs he lights his lamp and the match is dropped into some waste. He enters and surprises Fred, after locking the door. In the struggle that follows the telephone is knocked over and Jane, who is just leaving, seeing his call goes back to the plugs and listens at his wire. She hears the struggle, and Fred's life threatened as he is tied and gagged. She frantically rings the police station wire. The officer in charge sends out a few men, one of whom is Jim, to go to Fred's assistance. Meanwhile the stairway is ablaze and smoke curls in under the office door. Jane listening at the other end hears the burglar's frightened cry of "fire,' as he opens the door and is forced back by the smoke and heat from the burning stairway. Crazed with fear she plugs the fire house and Jack with the engine starts out for the factory. The burglar loses his head and is starting for the other door when Fred gets his attention. He unties and ungags Fred and they try for the window. The policemen meanwhile have found it impossible to get into the building, the lower floor being a regular furnace, and seeing Fred at the window they shout not to jump as it would mean sure death. The fire is getting into the room so they dash for the next room and close the door after them. The firemen arrive and begin operations. The two men are forced from that room and have to "jimmy" the door of the room opposite. The office is now consumed in flames and the burning phone gives its message to Jane who is carried out fainting. The firemen get up into the office window but are forced back. The men are now in the hall but cannot make the rear stairway that also being in flames so they burst into the first door they come to which is a storage room with a heavily screened window. Upon this window the burglar commences work and finally cuts the screen through. Fred smashes the glass which is seen by Jim as he rounds the corner of the building. Jane arrives and is held back of the fire lines. Jim and Jack get to the window and Fred commands them to take out the burglar first. The burglar is taken fainting down the ladder. Fred falls exhausted back into the flames and is rescued by Jim and taken down by Jack. Upon his recovery Fred sends the burglar on the right path and finds that Jane has made up her mind in his favor. The night the engagement ring goes on her finger Jim and Jack call but seeing the situation from the window outside decide to "beat it" and leave the lovers to their own happiness.

CINES.

THE GIRL AND THE HORSESHOE (Mar. 15).—Pretty Rosetta finds a horseshoe upon the roadway and carries it home. When told that this will surely bring her good luck she hangs it up in her room and regards it as almost sacred. The horseshoe "starts things" at once. A rich banker calls the next day to ask for Rosetta's hand, but when she observes that he is old and ugly she rushes to her room in tears. Espying the horseshoe she angrily throws it out of the window. As fate would have it, the horseshoe lights upon the head of a young man riding by on a bicycle. Hearing his cry of pain, Rosetta hurries to the window and insists that he come into the house where she tenderly dresses the wound. He proves to be young and handsome and it is not long before the young people fall in love with each other. The horseshoe is lucky after all.

WINNING SMILES (Mar. 15).—Solitude is often the best society, but Bloomer decides that only a smile can cheer his aching heart. He immediately sets off to find what he desires. One pretty face after another allures him, but his attentions invariably meet with the most disastrous results. Finally Bloomer concludes that smiles are generally dangerous and whenever a lady approaches he immediately makes himself scarce.

WHO'S CHAMPION NOW? (Mar. 18).—Bloomer claims to be a great wrestler, and boasts to his friends in a cafe that he can throw any man in the world. At their sugestion, he so annoys a champion wrestler sitting at a nearby table, that to preserve his dignity, the huge fellow is forced to accept a challenge. Bloomer then goes into training and soon develops so much muscle that his trainer proves no match for him and he is therefore compelled to exhaust his surplus energy in pulling down buildings and other such strenuous pastimes. When the day for the match arrives, little Bloomer, followed by the huge champion, enters the ring amidst the excitement and applause of the crowd. After toying with his opponent for a while, Bloomer finally gets down to business and to the great astonishment of all assembled, succeeds in rolling the heavyweight upon his back. Bloomer is now acclaimed as the undisputed champion.

THEIR COUNTRY RELATIONS (Mar. 18).—At the invitation of their Uncle Henry, Arthur Martin and his wife, fresh from the farm, arrive in town for a visit, and for the first time get a taste of city life. Realizations are often quite different from anticipations. At a reception given in their honor, they are shocked at the stories that are told, and the card games prove a frightful bore. The climax is reached when Arthur observes a young stranger paying too close attention to Mrs. Martin. They soon take their leave and hasten back to the farm.

A MOTORCAR ROMANCE (Mar. 22).—While spending the summer at the Palace Hotel, Fred Lewis becomes very much taken with pretty Florence Reid, and the two soon become engaged. One day, however, the arrival of a dashing young widow puts a new complexion on matters. For a moment Fred forgets his sweetheart and invites the widow to go for a motor trip with him. The journey proves an exciting one. The chauffeur seems to be determined to keep the pair under the closest surveillance, for he turns around at the most inopportune moments. When the car suffers a breakdown. Fred and the widow attempt to take advantage of a nearby cozy nook, but the chauffeur soon breaks in upon them with the information that the car is ready.

They then proceed to a "wayside inn" but when Fred and his guest are comfortably seated tete-a-tete in the dining-room their driver again interrupts in a most impudent manner, which so shocks the widow that she departs in a huff. When Fred acuses the chauffeur, the latter pulls off a pair of false whiskers, disclosing the face of his fiancee. Fred realizes that there is nothing to do but beg forgiveness and promise never to repeat such an escapade.

LIFE IN SOMALILAND, EAST AFRICA, (Mar. 22).—An interesting glimpse into the life of Somaliland, showing the village of Audigle, the native soldiers, the market place, some thriling war-dances and many entrancing scenes along the Nebi river.

SPIRITS OF YOUTH (Mar. 29).—The impecunious Jenkins is speculating as to how he can liquidate the most pressing of his debts, when a telegram arrives announcing the serious illness of his uncle, from whom he has large expectations, and stating that the uncle wishes to see him before he dies. With all speed Jenkins hastens to his uncle's bedside, and there learns that the doctors entertain no hope of recovery. As a last resort, Maggie, the old housekeeper, determines to try a wonderful tonic which she has heard of, and despite the resistance of Jenkins and the doctors, she succeeds in having her own way. The tonic works like and electric shock, and soon the uncle becomes so vigorous that he begins to dance about the room like mad. The effect of the medicine is so remarkable that Jenkins decides to join his uncle in a scheme for enlivening their fellow-creatures, and the two promoters are soon hailed with enthusiasm by all those who have benefited from its use.

GLIMPSES OF NAPLES AND VICINITY (Mar. 29).—After spreading before us a magnificent panorama of the old quarter of the town with Mt. Vesuvius looming up in the distance, we are shown the Castle occupied by the American Consul, Ovo Castle, the Tomb of Virgil, and many other interesting sights, after which we are taken to see the motor boat races at Positano.

HE NEEDED THE MONEY (Mar. 25).—Financially embarrassed, George tries to make a "touch" on his wealthy Uncle Harry, but when rejected vows to get revenge. One day he learns that his uncle has invited a young lady of his acquaintance to a cosy little dinner at the Grand Hotel. George is not slow at taking advantage of an opportunity. He secures a position as waiter at the hotel and gets everything arranged for the event.

At the appointed hour, Uncle Harry, in company with the young lady, arrives at the hotel and is ushered to a table, but great is his consternation when he finds that the waiter is none other than his nephew. Nothing extraordinary happens until, the dinner over, uncle asks for the bill, and upon examining it, notices included at the bottom, a large tip for the waiter and a much larger sum for keeping the fact of the dinner a secret from auntie.

Although flushed with anger and about to make a loud protest, uncle decides to settle in full and get away as soon as possible to the great satisfaction of George and some of the others who then sit down to wine and dine on uncle's money.

ECLIPSE.

HE SAW THE POINT (Mar. 26).—Wishing to protect his fellow-creatures from injury, Charlie buys a hundred corks and proceeds to cap every projecting point, including women's hatpins, a boy's long nose, a soldier's sword and bayonet, and even climbs up to put a cork on the summit of the church steeple. This last adventure proves his undoing, however, for unfortunately he loses his balance and falls, impaling himself upon the churchyard railing. Seeing six sharp points projecting through his body, Charlie carefully puts a cork on each—game to the very end.

FJORDS AND WATERFALLS OF NORWAY (Mar. 26).—Taking us on a delightful journey through the wildest and most picturesque parts of Norway, views of Marok Fjord, The Defoe Fjord and Cascade, the entrancing water-fall, known as the Bridal Veil, together with some marvelous sunset scenes, are shown.

THE CRAB AND LOBSTER INDUSTRY (Mar. 26).—An instructive, as well as extremely interesting subject, showing how the crabs and lobsters are captured in the great nets, weighed, placed in large tanks to boil, and after a final washing are ready for the market.

AN INNOCENT OFFENDER (Mar. 19).—James, the faithful butler of Mr. Howard, is filing some valuable papers entrusted to his care, when he is suddenly called out of the room. Upon his return shortly afterwards, he discovers to his consternation that the papers have disappeared from the table and are nowhere to be found. Later Mr. Howard, when informed of the matter, accuses the butler, but agrees to employ a detective on the case. The latter immediately makes a thorough search of the house, but without results. About to give up in disgust, he suddenly discovers little George Howard's rocking-horse with its mouth filled with paper. He recalls that a short time ago while speaking with Mr. Howard he saw little George stuff papers into the mouth of the horse, and quickly the whole matter becomes clear to him. Seizing the toy, the detective carries it to his employer, and sure enough, inside they find the lost documents. To verify the clue, they leave the rocking-horse in the room and then hiding behind the curtain and sending for the little boy, they secretly watch him as he repeats the trick. It is perfectly evident now who the real culprit is, and it is not long before the faithful James is restored to his old position of trust in the household.

BIOGRAPH.

A WELCOME INTRUDER (Mar. 24).—A widower received aid from a kind-hearted neighbor, who not only helped the man with the light housework, but usually kept a watchful eye over the little boy. The father is a boss carpenter and is forced to leave the little one alone the whole day long. A discharged workman sees in the boy a chance for revenge, which opportunity he takes and while it nearly drives the father insane, it results as a great blessing for all concerned.

THE OLD GRAY MARE (Mar. 27).—Zeke drives to town behind his old gray mare, goes to the tavern and loads up on "Oh be joyful" water in opposition to the injunction of his wife, Matilda. But he learns a lesson that promises to do more than temperance lectures against the drink evil.

ALL HAIL TO THE KING (Mar. 27).—He was only a tramp but enjoyed the extreme felicity of reigning as a king for a short space of time. To tell how this condition was brought about would spoil the unction of a screaming farce.

THE SHERIFF'S BABY (Mar. 29).—After the death of his wife the baby was all the sheriff had left, the promise of hope in the future, and the reflection of all that was dear in the past. But a sheriff has no time to tread a cradle rocker, so the baby started off on the long journey to relatives across the desert. Then the sheriff was called away to hunt the "bad men" of the desert, and found there a deserted prairie schooner, the occupants dead and his baby gone. A "bad man" triumphed, but later forgot self in a baby, who found its own, while a sheriff solved a perplexing question.

MELIES.

HINEMOA (Mar. 27).—Hinemoa was a Maori maiden of high rank and rare beauty—the daughter of a chief. She dwelt on the borders of Lake Rotorua in all the splendor of her fathers camp. On the island of Mokoia, in the centre of the lake, dwelt chief Whakaue, his three sons, and Tutanekai, son of the chief's wife by another father. Thus Tutanekai, bearing the ban of illegitimacy, was scorned by his step-brothers, but treated as a son by the noble old chief.

The three brothers sought the hand of Hinemoa in marriage, but she bestowed her love on Tutanekai, much to the brothers' dismay and to that of Hinemoa's parents, who forbade her to marry Tutanekai because of the blight in his birth. She refused to choose another, so a great running match was decided upon to determine who should win her. Tutanekai was the victor, in spite of which, Hinemoa's people still refused to permit them to marry. And to prevent any possibility of the lovers joining, Tutanekai was sent back to the island of Mokoia and all boats were removed from the lake.

Every evening at dusk, Tutanekai, from his island three miles distant serenaded Hinemoa with his flute, and she, in her camp, was thrilled and encouraged by his notes of love, until at length she could bear the separation no longer. Shrouded by the night, she plunged into the frigid waters of the lake, and, guided by his flute, swam three miles to the island of Mokoia. Exhausted, she rested and hid in a natural warm bath and resorted to strategy to bring forth her lover, for to be found by any other man and taken into his sleeping hut, would have meant to become his wife, according to Maori law and custom. By a clever scheme she attracts Tutanekai to the bath and together they secretly entered Tutanekai's hut.

The three step-brothers were enraged, but the old chief protected and honored Tutanekai.

PATHE.

PATHE'S WEEKLY NO. 12, 1913 (Mar. 17).—Shamokin, Pa.—The Reverend Father Koch celebrates the fiftieth anniversary of his ordination.

Constantinople, Turkey.—With Mutt's assistance, Jeff flirts with the Queen of the Sultan's Harem.

THE RETREAT FROM MOSCOW (Mar. 8).—A review of this special subject was printed on page 869 of the issue dated March 1. Exhibitors are referred to that article for a story of the film.

THE GATE SHE LEFT OPEN (Mar. 26).—Betty, living with her Aunt Mayme, comes home with tear-stained eyes and tells of a quarrel with her lover. The gate at the entrance to Aunt Mayme's home is always chained open, much to Betty's mystification. Aunt Mayme's reply to Betty explains the reason. In her younger days, Aunt Mayme, deeply in love, made the same mistake that Betty has made, quarreling with her lover over a trifle. Aunt Mayme realized her hastiness too late, but she has ever since kept the gate open, as a mute sign of welcome to the man she still loves. While housecleaning at the postoffice a clerk finds a letter which has been long undelivered. The letter is addressed to Aunt Mayme. It is signed by her lover and explains the quarrel. Aunt Mayme tells Betty of the letter, which was written by George's uncle. Betty forgets her quarrel, tells George. George tells his uncle and from all appearances there will be a double wedding in the near future from the house with the open gate.

THE SHERIFF'S REWARD (Mar. 27).—Joe Allen, a worthless character, to avoid frequent quarrels with his good wife, Lillian, leaves a note bidding her farewell. Soon after, Lillian answers an advertisement asking for a school teacher in a country town and is appointed. The sheriff of the town has fallen in love with the schoolma'am and proposed. Lillian refuses, without telling him that she is married. Allen in the course of his wild career comes to this same town and breaks the law. He is pursued by the sheriff and captured on the pilot of a speeding locomotive. A bitter strugle ensues. It only ends when Allen is killed. The sheriff's posse, following him and acompanied by Lillian, arrive at this time. She recognizes her husband and the sheriff understands the reason for her refusal. He loves her the more for her faithfulness to Joe, and wins when he asks her to give her heart into his keeping.

THE CHATEAU OF CHAMBORD (Mar. 27).—A visit to the favorite residence of Francis I, King of France. The camera follows the balcony around the entire super-structure of the building, permitting close observation of the most remarkable single instance of the beauties of Renaissance architecture in existence.

THE HARDUP FAMILY'S BLUFF (Mar. 29).—Society life is killing, at least so Mr. Hardup found it. Being devoid of the necessary funds to take his family to Bermuda, Mr. Hardup decided to close the house and live indoors, thus giving the impression that he and his family were away spending their surplus income. Things would have been fine had not a burglar entered. When he learned the situation he refused to leave and there was Hardup between the devil and the deep sea. If he told the police the neighbors would know he was bluffing, if he didn't tell them the burglar would take everything he had. Things come alright in the end. But how? That's what makes the film

THE BABES IN THE WOODS (Mar. 25).—Everyone knows the story of The Babes in the Woods, a story which has stirred human sympathy as perhaps no other story ever has done. In this film the famous fairy tale is reenacted with a background of a beautiful woodland. The color photography brings out the contrast of colors which makes it so beautiful, as to be really remarkable. The wild, fantastic shapes, the creatures of the children's imagination, live again and are as gripping as they were in our younger days.

CRABS AND LOBSTERS (Mar. 28).—Crabs and lobsters are common articles of food, but few are the people who understand their different characteristics, their natural mode of living and the methods of catching them. To a vast majority of people, therefore, this film will prove enlightening entertainment. Although these two species of shell fish live together they are not on the best of terms and when a difficulty arises between the two families, as it does in several scenes herein, a pretty battle ensues. The method of catching these fish is clearly illustrated and titles, followed by stereoscopic foregrounds, explain their different organs.

TOBACCO CULTURE IN CUBA (Mar. 28).—An educational course in tobacco growing in the region wherein grows the finest of the popular weeds.

KALEM.

THE ATTACK AT ROCKY PASS (Mar. 24).—A Chinese servant at the army post sees a letter on the paymaster's desk, stating that $8,000 in gold is being sent through Rocky Pass and that the shipment will arrive on the following Tuesday. The Chinaman communicates with a renegade Indian, and together they form a plot to attack the wagon and secure the gold. The Indians who for some time have been on the verge of an outbreak, lend an ear to the renegade's proposal and leave to ambush the pay-wagon.

Daisy, the paymaster's daughter, is suspicious of the Chinaman and discovers the plot. She informs her sweetheart, Lieutenant Kellar, who sets forth alone to learn the Indians' plans. The young soldier is captured and tied to the ground with thongs—to die of thirst.

Fearing that Kellar has met with foul play, Daisy gives the alarm. She accompanies the troops and when no trace of the lieutenant is discovered she rides toward the Indian camp, while the soldiers proceed to the pass to protect the wagon. The Indians crawl from their place of concealment and are about to make away with the gold when the troops arrive and drive them back to camp.

Daisy discovers Kellar's plight and when she attempts to liberate him she is attacked by a squaw. A desperate struggle ensues, in which the hand of the squaw holding the knife is forced against the thongs and Keller gains his liberty. Infuriated at the Indians' treachery, Daisy and Keller set fire to the camp. The redskins rush in, pursued by the soldiers. All is confusion and after a terrific battle the captured Indians are led to the post.

THE FACE AT THE WINDOW (Mar. 26).—Edward Rollins, the foreman at the sawmill, is called to the bedside of his old friend, Millwarde. Millwarde, dying, entrusts his daughter, Ruth, to the care of Rollins. The father passes away and the daughter leaves to make her home with the foreman.

Rollins is a bachelor and finds that he is falling in love with his ward. He steadfastly keeps his secret and the girl soon learns that she is drawn to the foreman by a stronger tie than friendship.

One day Rollins' nephew, Harold, comes to the little village for a visit. He and Ruth become warm friends and with no thought of sentiment the young man paints a glowing picture of city life. The girl becomes preoccupied and Rollins concludes that she is in love with Harold.

Jenks, the roustabout at the mill, passes the Rollins cabin and sees the foreman counting the money for the payroll. He determines to secure it.

Next morning Harold starts for the city and Rollins leaves for the mill. Jenks appears at the cottage and informs Ruth that her guardian has been seriously injured. The girl hastens toward the mill but becomes suspicious and looking back sees Jenks crawling from the window. Ruth secures a revolver and follows in pursuit.

When Rollins returns and discovers that both ward and money are missing, he concludes that Harold has induced the girl to accompany him to the city. He rushes to the little railroad station and as the train is late, Harold is waiting on the platform. Rollins makes his accusation. Drawing out his watch, Harold displays a picture and says "This is my fiancee." The next moment Ruth appears on the scene, leading Jenks at the point of her revolver and the foreman realizes the error he has made.

THE "FIRED" COOK (Mar. 28).—The Adairs, a young married couple, discharge their cook and advertise for another. Meanwhile Tim, a crook, sizes up the Adair residence as a place worthy of investigation and when he sees the want ad. he conceives a bold scheme. Attiring himself as an Irish biddy he makes application and secures the position.

Unfortunately Tim tries to steal a quiet smoke and the untimely arrival of Mrs. Adair in the kitchen forces him to stow the pipe in his trousers pocket. Soon his wardrobe takes fire and he makes a hasty exit, only to fall into the arms of a policeman who has been endeavoring to cultivate the cook's acquaintance. The officer finds to his astonishment that his heart's desire is an old offender.

THE CAT AND THE BONNET (Mar. 28).—Mrs. Brown wishes a new hat but her husband cannot see it. He is further infuriated when his wife undertakes the care of her mother's pet cat. Brown hates cats.

Disappointed, Mrs. Brown attempts to trim an old hat and, disgusted, tosses the bonnet on the bed. Brown decides to make away with the cat and secretly goes about the house with a burlap bag. In the dim light of the bedroom he sees what he believes to be the obnoxious feline and making a dive with the bag, marches off with the supposed cat. A boy is bribed to toss the bag into the river but the coin given in payment happens to be bad and the accomplice returns to expose Brown's villainy. The result is a new hat for Mrs. Brown.

THE WARTIME SIREN (Mar. 29).—When the Civil War breaks out Eric Warren, a young physician, enlists and is commissioned captain. On the field of action his clever manoeuvers constantly harass the Confederates and Colonel Ashby, chafing under many defeats at the hands of the young officer, decides to capture him through a subterfuge. He calls upon his daughter, Rosalie, for assistance. The girl entices Warren to her home where he is set upon by several Confederate soldiers and made prisoner.

It is then that the young captain displays the unusual nobility and generosity of character which compels Rosalie's admiration and wins her heart. Mrs. Ashby has been seriously ill for months and her condition becomes alarming. No doctor can be found in the neighborhood and the nearest town is many miles away. Rosalie is in terrible distress and the house in excitement.

The news of the lady's suffering comes to Warren and he is told that no physician is available. Mrs. Ashby is lost unless the skilled hand of a doctor brings her relief. Forgetting the wrong which has been done him, Warren orders his saddle-bags brought in. Securing his case of medicines he is conducted to the bedside of Rosalie's mother.

The crisis passes and Mrs. Ashby steadily gains strength. Rosalie is consumed with remorse when she realizes that the mother's life has been saved by the man whom she, Rosalie, has betrayed. The girl assists the officer to escape and he reaches his troops in time to turn the tide of battle.

UNION FEATURES.

THE BRINK OF THE ABYSS. When Captain Doty sailed away to the Far East, Henri Borel, the former lover of Mrs. Doty, began to pay her attentions. The lonely woman was glad to have the attentions of her former friend, as a friend, and even was tempted to a little flirtation. But she was strong—very strong, and she fought against this mad desire to yield to the seductive tempter, who would lure her from her loving husband.

The thoughtfulness of the Captain helped him in holding his wife's love, since he sent many little remembrances from the Far East.

On the day when the dangerous flirtation of Borel and Mrs. Doty reached a climax, a beautiful set of furs arrived from Irkutsk, Siberia, from Captain Doty. Mrs. Doty and Borel were admiring them when they were horrified to learn of a terrible plague in the Siberian town.

But it was too late! The fatal disease had been communicated to them and both were stricken.

Captain Doty arrived almost as soon as his last gift, and when he found a man in his home—murder came to mind. It was only the interference of the physician, who found a letter from Mrs. Doty to Borel saying she could never be more than a friend, that averted the tragedy.

THE HUNCHBACK. Lagardere's skill with the rapier was always embroiling him in quarrels, and one night he was to fight a duel with the Duke de Nevers. The Duke had married the daughter of the Duke de Caylus, which had earned him the undying hatred of Gonzague, who had also been a suitor for that lady's hand.

Lagardere discovered that a band of ruffians had been hired by Gonzague to set upon and kill the Duke. Immediately the spirit of fair play overcame Lagardere's enmity against Nevers, and he allied himself with him against the gang of cut-throats.

In the fight which followed, Nevers was slain by a masked assassin. Lagardere succeeded in running his sword through the hand of the cowardly murderer, but single-handed he could not cope with superior numbers and was forced to fly for his life. After this, Lagardere left France for Spain, taking with him the infant daughter of the dead Duke. Years later, Lagardere, accompanied by the daughter of Nevers, returned to France to avenge the murder of the Duke. The widow of Nevers had been forced by her father to marry Gonzague, but she had never ceased to mourn the loss of her daughter, whom she believed to be dead.

Lagardere, in the disguise of a hunchback, by his funny antics, gained the favor of Gonzague, and seeing the scarred hand of the man, his suspicions that he was the slayer of Nevers were confirmed.

On the night of the Regent's ball, Lagardere denounced Gonzague as the murderer of the Duke, but Gonzague vigorously denied the accusation and stated that Largardere himself killed Nevers. But Lagardere had a letter from the King making it impossible for them to arrest him and so he left the ball free but in disgrace.

The next night "The Hunchback" appeared at an entertainment at Gonzague's, where he amused the guests. Suddenly Gonzague, thinking to humiliate his newly found step-daughter, announced that she was to be married to the "Hunchback." The beautiful girl was horrified until Lagardere reveals himself to her secretly and then the wedding proceeded. When Lagardere removed his disguise, he was served with notice of trial for the murder of Nevers.

As the trial begins Lagardere gives a package to the Regent telling him that it contains the name of Never's slayer, written by the duke's own hand. The possibility of the presentation of such damaging evidence so disconcerts Gonzague, that he betrays himself by his guilty actions.

Later in an encounter between Gonzague and Lagardere, the murderer of Nevers fell by the hands of his avenger.

TEARS OF BLOOD.—The mad whirl of the garish cafes, the intoxicating strains of subdued music, the subtle influence of the bright lights were wrecking Dr. Carlton's life. Home, wife and child were forgotten in his insane rush for pleasure.

One night, the little girl became ill very suddenly. The mother, in despair, went to the cafe after her husband and pleaded with him to return and treat the baby, but he, in his drunken brutality, drove her away.

The next day the doctor left home forever. That was the last straw. The wife's endurance was gone, the last shred of patience and love had fled. She drooped like a flower denied rain, and soon passed into the Great Beyond.

Ten years later Doctor Carlton began to realize where his life would eventually lead him and he checked his rapid pace. He saw that his brutality had killed his wife, and made frantic efforts to locate his daughter.

All his efforts, however, were in vain, so he turned again to the old life. He was invited to a garden party given by Baron Melidoff. The attraction of the evening was to be the celebrated artist Maude Iris. The fitting climax of the night of debauchery was to be a reckless lottery of this woman of the world. Carlton was the winner, but such things were now repulsive. He refused the envied advantage and returned to his private hospital, which he had established.

The following day he had information which gladdened his heart, but at the same time made him suffer untold agony. Maude Iris, who had sold her soul for pretty baubles, and who had given her kisses for coins, was none other than his only daughter.

He hastened to her, but she refused to acknowledge his parenthood and bitterly rebuked him for the death of her mother. She taunted him with being the cause of the depth to which she had sunk.

Years passed. The glory of Maude Iris vanished, age dimmed her beauty. She frequented the shadows and paid the ruthless wage of sin. She became the mistress of the motley, the queen of the worthless. One day she was carried by chance to her father's hospital with a fractured skull which had been received in a saloon brawl.

Bravely the father fought his battle with death. At last, it seemed as though the victory was won. She opened her eyes and recognized him. Immediately the old hatred dominated her and she began to hurl forth her bitter reproaches. Something snapped in the father's heart and the hot tears welled from his eyes. Kneeling by her side, his body heaving with sobs, he begged forgiveness for the wrong he had done. Somewhere from within the callous heart of the hardened Iris the little human germ of womanhood came to the surface, and she also wept. The tears washed away her sins. In a sudden, overwhelming impulse, she threw her arms around her father's neck in a paroxysm of grief, her eyes looked into his and there, through the mist of tears, he read the victory over sin. Her face lighted by a new and wondrous radiance, and her trembling lips breathed words of forgiveness and endearment. But their happiness was short lived. The penalty must be paid. The new-found daughter died in the doctor's arms.

The Battle of Bloody Ford

KALEM—TWO REELS

Released Saturday, March 22nd

A sensational drama of the Civil War which furnishes the background for a most realistic bayonet charge, the rout of the enemy by the Federals, the explosion of a burning powder wagon, the fording of a swollen stream under a rain of bullets by a Southern girl with Northern sympathies, a thrilling rescue of a drowning soldier at Bloody Ford and many other war scenes.

There's a love story, too, running all through. A young clergyman, who answers his country's call, a captain in the Federal army, and two loyal daughters of the North and South are the characters that eventually participate in a double wedding.

Pauline Cushman, the Federal Spy

SELIG—TWO REELS

Released Monday, March 24th

Among heroes of the Civil War a figure that stands out prominently is Pauline Cushman, an actress before the beginning of the struggle and later one of the most clever and daring spies fighting for the cause of the North. A toast to Jeff Davis and the Confederacy from the stage of a theater at Louisville made her appear a supporter of the South. Not long afterward, she boldly appeared within the rebel lines and gave valuable information to the Union Army. Although captured many times and frequently wounded, she miraculously escaped death and was given the rank and title of Major by Gen. Garfield.

Her career as filmed by Selig is a series of amazing and thrilling adventures. Among war pictures, this one will take a place well up toward the head.

In addition to these four surpassing multiple-reel features for the week of March 22nd to March 28th inclusive, General Film Service offers the strongest line of single and split-reel films that it is possible for the ten largest manufacturers to produce. Discriminating patrons expect General Film Service.

The Moonshiner's Last Stand

PATHE—TWO REELS

Released Wednesday, March 26th

A strong story of the mountains, involving a moonshiner who sells illicit liquor to Indians on a nearby reservation, his son "Bud," his pretty daughter Ann, the government Indian agent, and a revenue officer.

Of course, the revenue officer meets and falls in love with Ann and, of course, there comes a time when he must decide between love and duty. A tribe of drunken Indians demanding more whiskey puts in an appearance at the crucial moment and a fight for life ensues. The besieged take refuge in the "still" and although it is burned to the ground, the Indians are driven off. Then comes the ending—the kind that audiences like.

The Modern Prodigal

VITAGRAPH—TWO REELS

Released Friday, March 28th

A film story that touches the heart and brings throbs of joy to the hearts of its auditors.

After passing through the crucial tests of youthful folly, an only son redeems himself from the fetters of vice and in true prodigal fashion returns to his home and rescues his aged mother from poverty and want. Her faith and love, so characteristic of mothers the world over, are the influences that guide him back to manhood and happiness.

A Vitagraph drama of surpassing merit.

THE LIGHT IN THE WINDOW (2 parts—Mar. 25).—Mr. and Mrs. Haley are old fashioned Southerners, who believe in whipping their slaves when they disobey. Their little son, Richard, does not believe in the constant chastisement. He is particularly hurt when his pal, old Mose, is beaten. A crisis arrives when Mose is terribly whipped by his mother and also by his father, and is turned over to an overseer who brutally punishes the darkey. Just previously to this Richard had been ordered by his father to whip the slave himself, and was punished for not doing so. The unjustness of the punishment and the brutality of the whole proceedings determine Richard to run away from home, and he does this, telling Mose that he is going North where he will not have to beat slaves.

His mother's grief is terrible and it increases her enmity towards the North to an insane degree. She constantly looks for the coming of her beloved boy and each night she lights the lamp and places it in the window, and ever watches and waits.

Fort Sumter is fired upon. Haley enlists in the Confederate army and is assigned to the duties of a spy. He works Northward. Richard joins the Union army and is appointed to a lieutenancy. He is sent South.

One day when he has obtained some valuable information by spying from the vantage point of a tree. Haley crosses the road in time to hide from some fast approaching cavalrymen. One of the mounted men notes the new tracks, and Lieutenant Haley, resorting to a clever ruse, succeeds in capturing Haley and marches him to camp. Haley recognizes his son, Richard, the likeness being accentuated by a scar on his forehead, the same scar caused by the scythe and his own carelessness which was charged up against poor Mose.

Haley's papers are taken and rather than have his son responsible for his death (who is ignorant of his father's identity) he suddenly knocks a man down and mounting a horse endeavors to make good his escape. He does not get far, for a bullet stops his career and mercifully ends his troubles for all time. Richard, going over the papers found in Haley's person recognizes the address on an envelope. An officer hands him a letter which is from his mother to Haley and which tells him to look out for their dear son and to tell him the light is in the window for him every night and—! Richard is informed that the escaped man is dead: he staggers to his father's body and grief takes hold of him.

That night while sitting over the camp fire in an agony of grief, Richard determines to go to his mother. He obtains a furlough and succeeds in getting near to his old home, when he sees a party of Confederates go to the house. He watches, not daring to show himself. One of the Confederates gives Mrs. Haley the message that tells her of the death of her husband, and one passion remains with her—the desire to see the Northerners exterminated.

The Confederates all leave the house and Richard stealthily crawls towards his home, his heart filled with a desire to comfort this poor woman—his mother. Mrs. Haley sees the Unionist creeping nearer. Her face lights with a fierce triumph. She gets her gun. Old Mose tries to stop her, but too late, for she shoots and Richard falls. Old Mose runs out and discovers the dead man to be his young master but does not disclose his identity to the mother.

Mrs. Haley waits till dusk. She lights the lamp and places it in the window, and sits and waits and waits for her son who will never answer the beacon's call this side of Paradise.

NESTOR.

THE MINING EXPERT'S ORDEAL (Mar. 28).—Mr. Cary, the owner of a once rich mine, is worried for the mine is running down. Cary loves his family, but has been an improvident man, having spent all he made, confident that the mine would never fail him. His son, Dick, divines the truth. Indeed, he, and the assayer have been aware of the conditions for some time. Seeing his father despairing, he begs him to send for an old time friend of Dick's, an expert engineer. Mr. Cary agrees and John arrives to take charge of a very thorough examination. He is welcomed by the father and son and by Mrs. Cary and her daughter, Ellen. The serious young man soon falls in love with her.

After two weeks of labor, John regretfully tells Mr. Cary that the ore is too low and that the expenses are far too high. He hates the job, for Cary is crushed at the news. John feels for the whole family and especially for Ellen.

A telegram arrives telling Cary that his broker is bringing two capitalists from Boston to view the mine. They are buyers and price is no object. Cary puts the wire before John, who sympathizes with him. Cary loses his self-possession and begs John to make a good report. The young man refuses sadly, but he promises to keep silent, if possible, although he would rather go and be out of it. Dick overhears the conversation and his great love for his father and the others makes him reckless. He hurries to the Assay Office and alters the figures on the assay sheets.

The capitalists arrive and view the mine and see the reports. They are well pleased and when night arrives they are ready to buy. The men are gathered around the table, being well entertained and the broker sums up the facts. When the assay figures are mentioned, John pricks up his ears. He quietly gets the sheets and goes out with them. He encounters Dick on the porch with his mother and Ellen. John accuses Dick, who breaks down. He says he did it for his family's sake. John is distressed, but looks at Ellen and she understands. He goes to the room and announces that a clerk has altered the figures and that the mine is not paying its way. The men are astonished and depart awkwardly, not understanding matters.

The day before all this occurs, John has set two miners to work out his theory of the presence of the better values. The following morning he goes in to take a last view of the workings as Cary and Dick are paying off the men for the last time. The last shots have uncovered the values and John and the miners hurry out in time to recall the men and the assays prove the new life for the mine. As John departs the next morning, he makes a promise to return for Ellen.

THEIR COMBINATION SUIT (Mar. 24).—In their third floor back, Eddie and Lee are wondering how they can raise the wind. They see an advertisement in the paper: "Wanted: A private secretary, also a gardner." The "ad" bears the name of the wealthy Mrs. Van Cortlandt. The boys count their spare change. They go to a clothing store and purchase one suit. It is all they can afford. They toss for possession. The suit goes to Eddie. It is clear that Eddie will wield the pen and Lee the back-breaking lawn mowers.

They land the jobs, and Eddie and "our daughter" Louise make eyes at each other over the tea table while Lee and the maid strike up a little flirtation. Both boys make good progress with their love affairs if not with their duties.

The time arrives when Lee insists upon his share of the suit, and gets it. He goes out and is seen by Louise talking to the maid. Louise thinks it is Eddie and is outraged at his duplicity. The following morning Eddie turns up for his duties with the one good suit on again. He is surprised at the scornful look Louise flashes at him. He is miserable and decides to quit.

Lee and the maid decide to tell Louise the truth, and the difficulties being smoothed out, love resumes its normal course and all is joy and serenity.

CHEATING (Mar. 26).—Little Fern believes in fair play. She is engaged to Jack and avoids the boys. One day she is out walking and sees Jack flirting with a female person. Fern tells him that she will have no more to do with him. The girls have a weekly outing. Fern relates her experiences and the girls agree that men are fickle things at best, and that they will never, never even look at a man on their weekly outings. They start off as usual and have a good time. A man person comes along. He is experienced and manages gradually to get a word with each girl alone—all except Fern. Naturally he wants to talk to Fern because he can't. He has a flirtation, in secret, with each girl in turn and makes an appointment with each one at a given hour at a given spot. He wants to let them all know what he thinks of them and he wants to get the attention of Fern.

As each girl arrives he hides her in some spot where she can see all that is going on. The girls get furious. Fern turns up at the proper time and sees that the girls have been cheating. To pay them out she strikes up an acquaintanceship with the man, and it soon progresses to the point where she takes her outings each week with one person instead of a number. She still thinks all men fickle—barring one.

THE CALLING OF LOUIS MONA (2 reels) (Mar. 28).—Louis Mona is left to the care of the monks of the monastary of San Luis, who have brought him up with love and care. Louis, who is devoted to his surroundings, and who knows nothing of the great outside world, and who has no great desire to learn about it in person, desires to join the order, but there is a rule that cannot be overlooked. He must do as others have done and travel for a year in the world in order to determine whether he really wants to become a monk. At the end of the twelve months he can be received into the walls of the monastary by applying at the gate at a given hour.

In the chapel Louis kneels to receive the blessing of the good old prior, and the monks present him with gifts of food, money and clothes and bid him farewell. Louis, nervous of the venture, changes his garb and finds himself without the walls of his refuge, free to do his own will. He wanders on until he comes to a place where the roads cross. Which way to take? He decides the question by casting a leaf in the air and seeing which road it blows to. He is satisfied, but before proceeding he sits and rests and eats frugally.

A handsome automobile comes to a stop nearby. There is trouble which has to be remedied. A beautiful young woman, wise in the ways of the world, gets out, and seeing the good looking boy, sits by him and talks to him. She learns his history and finally persuades him to accompany her. He goes to the great city with her. She gives him an introduction to her brother, who gives him a position in his banking establishment.

The ways of the world appeal to Louis. He succumbs easily to the pleasures which surround him. He visits the girl often and a great intimacy springs up between them. One day he finds her smoking. He begs her not to offend that way and gives her a little cross, which he hangs round her neck. She is much affected by his counsel and commences to forsake her former ways and to lead a life of usefulness. He goes steadily down and down despite her efforts and the callings of his better nature. Finally comes drink and gambling and ruin—a stage where he cannot borrow. He shuns society and his fellows, but the desire to see the girl is ever present.

One day he passes a hospital for contagious diseases and sees the girl going in, bent on charity. He sees her do this several times. One day he learns that she has caught the dread disease. He manages to see her for the last time—she dies with the little cross clasped to her breast, and Louis goes away and fights his battle out. He duly returns to the old home of refuge and applies for entrance to the monastery. He is received within to lead a life of holiness and to forget the world and his one big sorrow.

THE DRUMMER'S NOTE BOOK (Mar 30).—Chester is visiting his sweetheart Pearl. While he was on his way to her house he picked up in the street a note-book, evidently dropped by some passerby. As he was putting on his overcoat, preparatory to leaving, the book fell out of his pocket. He leaves and Pearl finds the book. She opens it and sees on one side of the pages certain entries detailing expenditures incurred in taking out some girl. Pearl becomes insanely jealous. Her friend Violet visits her and Pearl tells her of her discovery of Chester's perfidy. Violet advises Pearl to flirt with some fellow, and thus bring Chester to his senses. Pearl goes out to the street and flirts with a young fellow. She walks with him and they meet Chester. He tries to speak to her but she ignores him and he cannot understand her actions. She takes her new-found beau home and becomes quite friendly with him. Violet again visits Pearl and finds the two together. She immediately starts a fight with Pearl, as the young man visiting her is no other than Violet's steady fellow. She accuses Pearl of treachery and leaves in anger taking the man with her by the ear. Chester then calls to demand an explanation of Pearl's queer actions. She shows him the note book and he explains that he found it. They turn to the flyleaf and see the name of some salesman inscribed and all ends happily.

IT'S A BEAR (Mar. 30).—Joe is in love with Geraldine. Her father objects to him, claiming that Joe is not the brave man and that the man who marries his daughter must be a hero. Joe leaves the house in disgust. He reads in a newspaper that a bear has escaped from the zoo. He hits upon a novel scheme. He gets his friend John to go to a costumer with him and there he gets him a bear's skin and head, which he makes him wear. Joe next goes to Geraldine's father, and tells him about the escape of the bear. Her father, who is always boasting what a great hunter he is, agrees to take Joe with him and they go out to hunt the bear. Joe has John stationed in the Meanwhile, "Si" Hopkins, a farmer, has also heard of the escape of the bear and also goes hunting him. He spies John and opens fire on the supposed bear. John is just about to meet his death when Joe explains that the bear is human and saves his skin. Joe tells John to lie down as if dead and then goes for father. He brings him back and shows him how he killed the bear. John moves a leg and father again runs away. At last they go home and father agrees to Joe's marrying his daughter providing he doesn't tell of his cowardice.

THAT BOY FROM MISSOURI (Mar. 28).—Harvey Hamilton was not satisfied to remain in Missouri on the farm, but wanted to "see" New York. So his father sent him to visit his uncle, explaining in a letter that Harvey was meek and modest and very unsophisticated. With his carpet-bag containing his few belongings, Harvey started on his journey, reaching the house of his uncle when a party was in progress in honor of the visit of Dorothy Deane, a friend of his cousin, May. Now Percy, his cousin, liked Dorothy, but she was not a silly girl and just had a good time while visiting her friend.

Upon reaching the house, Harvey did not wait to be admitted, but pranced into the room where all the guests were assembled. His uncle was overcome to see him walk deliberately into the room and was rather cool when he greeted him. May and her brother, Claude, were also a little cool, but Dorothy was kind and very cordial in her greeting. This appealed to Harvey and he immediately classed her as his friend.

The Hamiltons planned to play tricks on Harvey. First they tried him at poker, but much to their surprise the boy from Missouri had played it before, and Claude and his father were glad to make an excuse to get away when all the chips were piled up in front of Harvey. Next they planned to get him drunk, but Claude fell under the influence and Harvey had to bring him home. His folks were furious with Harvey for getting Claude in such a condition. Dorothy had many a laugh at Claude and she admired Harvey more and more. At last Harvey got up his nerve and made love to her just as Claude was coming in the door. Claude reprimanded Harvey for stealing his girl, but Harvey promptly put him out of the door, and took Dorothy along with him into the hall and to the minister's where, after the ceremony was over, the Hamiltons found them—but too late.

THE GREAT GANTON MYSTERY (2 parts—Mar. 27).—Henry Ganton is a bacteriologist whose researches have brought him considerable fame. Most of his work is carried on in the laboratory of his magnificent home and about the grounds, where he is at present engaged in vivisectional experiments with guinea pigs. An advertisement for a French maid is placed in the newspapers by Mrs. Ganton. A comely young woman applies for the position and is engaged forthwith. As soon as her eyes fall upon Ganton and his upon her there is instant recognition. The wild, youthful days of Ganton while a student in Paris are focused upon his vision. The maid, too, is plainly affected, and all the bitterness and anger of her nature seem to possess her.

The maid goes about her work. All the while, however, she is burning within for revenge. An idea comes with the reading of an article on scientific experimentation, which she chances to observe. So, when preparing an orange for Ganton in the morning, she designingly inserts some of the poisonous germs with which he has inoculated one of the guinea pigs and which she has cleverly drawn from the little animal.

Ganton dies suddenly, and the whole affair becomes a perplexing mystery. The case is diagnosed as one of ptomaine poisoning, when Professor Felix Westerly, a well-known scientist and expert on bacteriology, is called in. Westerly, being of an intuitive turn of mind, begins work instantly. Finding some of the orange peels he examines them closely. Then going to the maid's room, he discovers the clipping from the scientific paper. Quickly scribbling a note on the back of an envelope, asking the maid to call at his home that evening, he leaves.

The maid finds the note shortly afterwards, and after some hesitancy decides to go to the Westerly home. Hardly has she become seated, when Westerly works her into an hypnotic spell and draws the whole story of her early life from her—the meeting in Paris with Westerly, when she was a nurse, their intimate relations, the birth of her child, her desertion by Ganton, and finally the death of the baby.

It is all revealed to Westerly. He dismisses the maid, and, after turning the facts over and over in his mind, pens a report in which he states he is unable to find any positive proof of foul play, at the same time expressing the opinion that the case will ever remain a mystery.

HER NEW CHAUFFEUR (Mar. 30).—John returns from a long European trip, and is warmly welcomed by his family and particularly by his sister, Grace. Grace writes to her girl friend, Betty, telling her that she must meet her brother, John, at the ball tomorrow evening. The ball comes off, and Grace goes in her big red auto, but she is unable to persuade John to accompany her. He promises to fetch her after the dance.

John has a quiet siesta and, looking at his watch, finds that the time for the finish of the ball is close at hand. He rushes off and finds that he is in good time. Seeing the red car standing there it strikes him it would be good fun if he took the place of the chauffeur. He therefore persuades him to change hats and coats with him, and takes his seat on the car. He discovers he has no cigars, jumps off and runs to get them. In the meantime the cars are moved up, and it so happens that Betty has also gone to the dance in her big red auto. As John reaches the entrance he sees the big red car and jumps into it. The number is called and he recognizes it has the number which the chauffeur had in his pocket. A lady is put into the automobile, and John proceeds to give her the joy ride of her life.

An officious motorcycle cop speeds after him and stops him. This is partly due to the screams of the lady whom John supposes to be his sister, Grace. There is something unfamiliar about the scream, however. He turns around and discovers that he had been running away with a very pretty young lady whom he has never seen. She promptly gives him in charge for abducting her.

At the station the young lady (it is Betty, of course) notes his fine appearance, and senses that he is a gentleman. She withdraws her charge, and pays his fine, leaving him in a flabbergasted condition.

John is glad to get home, and resolves to keep his escapade a secret. Reading the paper the following morning he notices an advertisement giving a description of himself who ran away with the young lady in the red auto car and that if he will call he will obtain a position as chauffeur. John, always on the hunt for excitement, goes, sees Betty, and is duly engaged.

John stays there for some time, and of course, falls head over heels in love with Betty, and she finds herself strangely attracted to her chauffeur. During his stay he is able to note the presence of a gambler, and is conscious of the fact that this gambler has obtained a hold over Betty's father. He watches him closely and finally sees that he has the old gentleman entirely in his power. The crisis arrives when the butler gets sick, and John is ordered to take his place. He is puzzled what to do for a moment, but with the situation in mind he resolves to see it out.

One fateful day the gambler arrives and John overhears him threaten Betty's father with ruin. Being in love with Betty, he hands the gambler his own check just as his sister, Grace, comes into the room. Grace has already seen her brother, and when the question arises as to the genuineness of the check, she steps forward and acquaints the assembled company of the fact that John is her brother. The gambler has to take the check and John's little romance ends happily.

DAMAGES IN FULL (Mar. 24).—Morton is employed in the mill of Ashton. He meets with an accident while working in the mill and is made a cripple for life. Mrs. Morton appeals to Ashton to reimburse the family for the loss of the services of the husband and father. He gruffly tells her it was Morton's own fault. A lawyer takes the case for Mrs. Morton and Ashton is sued for damages. He wins the case, owing to his influence.

Little Stella meets Margaret and the little girls become friends. Margaret tells Stella that her father was hurt in the mill of a rich man who will not pay. Stella secretly goes to the home of the Morton's and sees they are destitute. She asks her father for "a big lot of money" and he puts her aside. Stella is obsessed with an idea to assist the Morton family. She goes out on the street and sees a beggar on the curb bearing a sign. She sees kindhearted people drop coins in his battered hat and she has an inspiration. She returns home to the nursery, procures a piece of card board and, with crayon, prepares a sign reading: "Please help the papa and mamma of a poor little girl whose papa got hurt bad in the mill of a rich man who won't pay." She dons soiled clothing and goes out on the street and, seated on the curb, she lays her old hat beside her and holds up the placard. She attracts the attention of passers by who marvel at the strange tableau.

Her father drives up to the spot in his machine and he is trying to force a way through the crowd when he recognizes his child. He reads the strange placard and divines the meaning. Snatching up the child he places her in the machine where she tells him the whole story. Going to the home of Morton he gives him a check for more than the amount sued for and the story closes in the poor home of Morton with the arms of Stella around the neck of Margaret, the daughter of the poor cripple.

TO RENO AND BACK (Mar. 27).—Just returned from their honeymoon Jane and King are preparing for a box party at the opera. King unable to restrain himself at the sight of Jane beautifully dressed for the occasion takes her in his arms and completely disarranges her carefully prepared coiffure. He is sent down stairs to wait "a minute" while Jane and her maid prepare to remedy the damage done.

King fretfully smokes himself near to death finding out that a woman's "minute" is an hour and angrily leaves for the opera, giving Jane her ticket and telling her to follow.

She, incensed, sends her maid in her place and the ludicrous apearance of the maid at the fashionable box party humiliates King to such an extent that later a quarrel ensues and he leaves home to live in a hotel. Jane equally high spirited sends him a note that she is leaving for Reno to get a divorce.

By a quick move King makes the same train. He has secured the upper birth over her but is driven to the smoker by Jane who refuses to let him come near her. He follows her to the hotel in Reno, but cannot effect a reconciliation.

However, a drunken janitor, a smoky furnace, a fire escape to which the only egress is through King's room, a cynical hotel clerk and the feminine instinct to rush to the man she loves when in danger, enable King and Jane to come together after a trying experience.

A NIGHT OF ANGUISH (2 parts—Mar. 26).—When Lawrence Lindsay's mother received his letter she read trouble between the lines. Her boy was trying to make his way in the oil fields and had put up his last $500 on an option on some oil lands. Lawrence told of how his chum Latham was going to put up the balance needed on the land the day before the option expired.

Now two circumstances had combined to make Latham the enemy of young Lindsay—the two boys were in love with the same girl and the oil land which they held options on was really of great value, a fact which Latham knew and Lindsay did not.

Latham hired a gang of roughs to set fire to the well, which was producing and on the day previous to the one when the option was to expire, he refused to advance to Lindsay the necessary money. When Mrs. Lindsay received the word of this crisis, she packed a grip and started for the scene. She felt from the tone of the message that her darling boy was discouraged to the point that there was a possibility of his taking his life.

In her grip she placed some securities and sent word that she wanted the night train to pick her up at the little station nearby. Being a stockholder in the company she was able to have this message handled promptly by the dispatcher and all looked well.

It was only for a few minutes that the smile remained on that sweet motherly face, however, because en route to the station, there was an accident to her auto and she was so delayed that the conductor refused to hold the express train at the station beyond the time he had been originally ordered. She arrived just in time to see the flyer pull out, having walked on after her accident.

Consoled by the old station-master with the information that she can get a freight train at 5 o'clock in the morning which will place her in the oil field at 10 a. m., she agrees eo accept his kind hospitality and remains in his little shack for the night.

The station-master's wife starts to make things comfortable for Mrs. Lindsay and the old man offers to carry her small grip but she snatches it up and carries it in herself. This arouses the curiosity of the old man and as he sits on the outside of the house he decides to investigate. He knows that the guest is sleeping in the bed nearest the window and he raises it carefully but the cold air awakens her and she arouses the wife and they change beds, Mrs. Lindsay meanwhile placing the valise in a place of safety.

The old man sits down outside the window and dreams that he enters the house and attacks the woman in the bed near the window, and then carries her out, bound and gagged, and ties her to the railroad track, to be mutilated by a passing train so that the body will be unrecognizable.

With the roar of a passing train, which, in his dream the old man thinks will destroy the body he has placed on the track, the dreamer is awakened to find at his side the woman who he had thought tied to the tracks. Immediately the thought came to him that the two women had changed beds the evening before and then he believed it to be his wife who had been killed.

Rushing to the imagined scene of his crime he was accusing himself of the murder of his wife when he heard a voice behind him. Here was the supposed victim, his wife, tapping him on the shoulder. "What's the matter, old man? You have had a bad dream." When he realizes that after all no harm has been done and his night of anguish is over.

Mrs. Lindsay leaves a substantial fee with her hosts, catches the freight and arrives in the oil fields in time to save her boy from his difficulties and all ends hapily.

Mabel took her aged father to walk in the park and at the same time Mrs. Ralston went out for a stroll under the espionage of her big son. They met, and while the young couple spooned, the old could fall asleep with heads together.

A day came when the young pair were married, leaving aching hearts behind them. And then, one day, old Ben Johnson buttoned up his coat and set forth for the widow's home. It took him five minutes to make her understand just how lonesome he was—then another marriage was performed and a great surprise awaited the honeymooning young couple.

LONESOME JOE (Mar. 27).—An old sailor sat on the beach and basked in the sun. His young acquaintance, Bob Raleigh, came and sat beside him. The old man ruminated, fell into a retrospective mood and told Bob the tragedy of his life.

As a young fisherman, a party of city folks came to visit him at his cabin one day. He fell in love with Mabel but of course, her parents refused to consider such a match. They took her away and two hearts grieved in silence. And then Mabel, growing thinner each day, took to her bed. In delirium she called for him. The parents, roused to the hope of saving her, sent for him. He came, in a daze, too late, and she died in his arms calling his name.

Back to the shore went the young man, going through life with the hope of meeting her again, basking in the sun dreaming of the day when he should be called to her side in the greater hereafter.

CALAMITY ANNE'S BEAUTY (Mar. 29).—When Dr. Stickum, with a professional beauty, came to town, he stopped his traveling wagon in the main street, lit his torch and proceeded to expound the merits of his beautifier.

Calamity joined the crowd about the wagon, examined the living testimonial in the form of the professional beauty, and longed for beauty herself. So she bought several bottles and sojourned to her hay mow to drink, sleep, and awake to the wondrous change. Alas! Morning brought only a horrible stomach ache. She went again to Dr. Stickum, bought more nostrums, including bandages for head, nose and chin and again went to sleep. Her sleep was rudely awakened by a vagrant tramp, who, at the horrible sight of the bandaged Calamity, fled. Stunned that she should make such an impression, Calamity, hauling her gun and firing at random, swept down on the miserable doctor and his professional beauty. They at once took to the woods and Calamity, firing frantically with one hand, while she destroyed the cargoes with the other, soon made devastation of Dr. Stickum's property. Then she gave chase, soundly kicked and beat Dr. Stickum and his beauty and finally, exhausted, retired to her hay mow for a real beauty sleep.

HER DREAMS OF YESTERDAY (Mar. 17).—An old lady, surrounded by her pretty granddaughters, tells them of the yesterdays of her life when she, too, stood on the threshold of youth. She lived down South and her sweetheart was a young engineer, Bob Grey. His rival, Arthur Deacon, a rich planter, hated the favored suitor and tried in many ways to win the girl himself. Finding this of no avail, he planned with the help of his brutal overseer, to get rid of Bob.

As the young man was coming across the fields, all unconscious of any foul play, Deacon and the overseer jumped out and knocked him senseless. This was overseen by a little colored boy who rushed to the girl's cottage and told her. Deacon had Bob carried to a saw mill and tied to a log which, within a second, would be drawn under the great sharp whirring wheel. But the girl and her father arrived in time to save Bob who denounces Deacon and his acomplice and they are arrested. Later Bob and his sweetheart are married. But within a few years the young father dies, leaving the widow to care for her fatherless little ones. This brings grandmother's recollections to a close.

FRAU VAN VINKLE'S CRULLERS (Mar. 16).—Kathrina and her brother, Jan, bother their mother when she is in the midst of making her New Year's crullers. Each is given a penny and sent out. They buy cakes at the baker's. Kathrina gives hers to a beggar who eats it ravenously. That night the children ask their mother for some crullers but are told they are for New Year. That night after going to bed, the temptation to go down stairs and steal a cruller is too much for Kathrina. She goes to the dining room. She sees a thief enter. He is taking away all the family silver. She stops and recognizes the beggar. She is sorry for him when he tells her of his hungry family. But finally she persuades him not to steal the silver. She empties all the crullers into his hat—finally adding to them one that had been laid aside. This one had a little New Year's ring in it for herself of which she knows nothing. Next day the crullers are missed and all say they know nothing of it except Kathrina. She is blamed and sent to solitary confinement. Her brother, Jan, steals off to the pond and goes skating. The ice breaks and he is saved by the beggar. The begar recognizes him and takes the gold ring from his pocket and puts it in a piece of paper with a note to Kathrina. It says she can tell about the crullers as he is safe on his way. Kathrina tells her parents and they praise her for her bravery in saving the family silver.

THE CITY FELLER (Mar. 18).—Henry Allen, a hustling New Yorker, goes to the timber region of Tennessee to make some big purchases of land for a rich syndicate. He goes to see old Ezekiel Burrows, the biggest land-holder of the neighborhood, whose pretty daughter, Betty, makes a conquest at sight. Betsy is beloved by a rough, handsome and unscrupulous mountain fellow named Clay Nash, who intends to gain the girl for a wife and the old man's timber lands for himself. The arrival of the stranger enrages Clay who determines to show up the city fellow by frightening him and driving him back to the city in disgrace. Henry Allen puts up such a resistance, never lacking his sense of humor, that Clay is driven to desperation and with some of his mountaineer clansmen he tries to murder the visitor. They are told that Allen is a Deputy for Uncle Sam, searching for illicit stills, and it turns out that Allen actually discovers one in the back of Clay's place when he escapes from the gang's clutches. Betsy has learned of their trickery toward Allen and comes to the house of Clay to beg for his release. Allen hears her talking with Clay, as he slips away, and believes she is really in love with the mountaineer. Struggling against his own feelings he returns to the house of Betsy's father with whom he has been stopping, signs the agreement to purchase the old man's holding, orders out his horse and is starting away on his long ride to the railway with her father to guide him. They are overtaken by Betsy who tells that the gangsters are after them. Then Betsy admits her love for Allen, her father consents, and the three of them ride break-neck to the train in time to catch it and leave the country safe and sound. At the depot they find the sheriff and some of his men and a trap is laid for Clay and his fellow moonshiners. The men ride into the trap, are arrested and handcuffed, to be put in safe-keeping, while Allen, Betsy and her father take the train for New York. There the deal is finished between the old Tennesseean and the syndicate, whose members announce that their money can hire enough soldiers and deputies to clean up the bad country in the timber lands while Henry Allen and Betsy Burrows are married with a handsome fortune to start them in life.

RELIANCE.

THE VENGEANCE OF HEAVEN (2 reels—Mar. 19).—Carl Dian, engaged to pretty Anne Halliday, deserts her almost on the eve of their wedding to run away with Grace, the village belle. This blow breaks the girl's heart and she dies, leaving her aged father vowing that before he, too, is taken, he wil avenge his daughter's death. He takes his revolver and follows Carl into the woods. He fires at the young man and the bullet whizzes by just over Carl's head. It lodges in a tree hardly five feet away. The exertion is too much for the old man and he dies.

Sometime later, Carl, as landlord of some poor cottages, is about to eject a tenant who is unable to pay. This man has an ailing wife and for her sake pleads with Carl. Carl refuses—angry words follow—which are overheard by the servants and the tenant is ejected from Carl's home.

Carl, while walking through his woods, axe in hand, decides to cut down an old tree; but the bark is touch and does not yield to his axe. He places a stick of dynamite in the trunk and the explosion fires the bullet in the tree straight to Carl's heart.

Carl's body is found and the poor tenant arrested on suspicion. But a lawyer from New York, working on the ground of the supposed crime discovers what really happened. He arranges a demonstration and before judge and jury and townspeople he enacts again the tragedy of the exploded tree with its hidden bullet, showing how the vengeance of Heaven was satisfied at last.

This, of course, clears the poor man, who is given a chance in life and his wife started on the road to recovery.

THE GRAFTERS (Mar. 22).—John Hascom, contractor, shows worry and dejection over the condition of his business. A checking of the yearly reports prepared by his attractive bookkeeper, shows an alarming condition of affairs and Hascom sees no prospect of his dearest wish being consummated. Alva Bennet, the bookkeeper, occupies a closer place in her employer's mind than that of mere business aid. John Hascom has hoped that a good business year will place his finances in a position where he may change his office assistant to his life partner.

Alva shows him an advertisement in the daily paper for a large contract for street work and asks him why he does not bid. John tells her that only political friends of the administration will be considered. Alva, not convinced, persuades him to file a bid anyway and she succeeds in getting him to figure on the work and prepare his bid which must be filed before three o'clock that day.

John leaves the office to attend to outside business and Alva rushes to complete her hastily prepared bid. She sends it by the office boy who arrives at the City Hall with Alva's sealed document. The clock points to 2:30 o'clock and the boy is refused the filing of his bid. He is told by the clerk that all bids have been received and opened and the contract awarded.

The boy goes back and tells Alva that she is too late. The loyal girl sees the advertised time is not yet up and determines to fight for a fair chance. She rushes to City Hall, capturing a reporter of a progressive paper, and drags the surprised man to the clerk's desk, where she demands a chance to file her bid. Pointing to the clock which points to three minutes of three, she shows the ad in the paper which holds the filing time open till three o'clock. She tells the political friends of the contractor that she will have a fair deal and the reporter stands by ready to get a graft story for his paper. Alva is sneered at by the clerk and told that the bids have gone before the Board of Supervisors in the next room. She, dragging the reporter with her, braves the Supervisors and demands reading of her bid. They try to set her aside but an elderly man, noted for his adherence to clean politics, listens to the girl and sees time is not up. He demands a square deal and reading of the girl's bid. The great discrepancy in the price of her bid starts a crusade for cleaner government by an article of the reporter's in the paper, enabling men like John Hascom's type to share in the city's work. The large contract enables Alva's employer to tell her the long-cherished secret and at last John Hascom and Alva Bennet speak the words that make them man and wife.

THANHOUSER.

BABIES PROHIBITED (Mar. 16).—The young couple had always lived in the country, and were very well satisfied with their little home until their baby came. They were thoroughly convinced that he was the most remarkable child in the world, and determined that the city was the proper place to bring up such a wonderful child.

But when they arrived in the metropolis they found the general public not only indifferent to their darling, but, in some cases positively hostile. The passengers in the street car objected when the baby cried. The couple were refused admission to places of amusement because of their child, and the various pretty apartments they admired were not for them, because babies were prohibited.

The wife, desperate, left her baby with her husband, and went alone to inspect a very desirable apartment. It was just what she wanted, but the sign on the door said, "Babies Prohibited," and the stern faced janitor declared that the edict would be enforced.

The poor woman was tired after a day of wanderings about a great city. Can anyone blame her if she prevaricated to the sour old janitor? Well, anyway that's what she did. She told him that she and her husband were alone in the world, and thus artfully secured possession of the rooms. The baby was to arrive later, the wife having arranged to have it secretly delivered with her groceries. And it seemed as if the family had at last found a hapy home. The janitor was on the alert, however, frustrated the plot to introduce a child into the apartments and with righteous indignation disposed of the infant as he was accustomed to do with other rubbish. He then evicted the family, not in a spirit of anger, but as one who is inflicting judicial punishment, permitted the guilty couple to remove their offspring from the ash barrel and uttered no protests when they slunk off down the street apparently thoroughly ashamed of themselves. The couple returned to their old home in the country, joyfully and thankfully.

THE HEART OF A CHILD (Mar. 18).—He was eight years old, and had been a cripple from birth. His mother, a wealthy widow, loved him fondly, and he had all the comforts and luxuries that money could buy. He was an affectionate little fellow, grateful for all the kindnesses bestowed upon him, but deep down in his heart he feared he was an incumbrance.

No one ever knew how he felt, but he brooded constantly in his childish way. One day while out motoring with his mother the auto stopped and they both noticed a tiny youngster who ran rapidly by them. Mother and son exchanged laughing comments and then the woman said: "I wish my little boy could run like that," and sighed. Any grown person would have understood what she meant, but to the heart of the child, her words conveyed a cruel meaning. He was convinced that she would gladly be rid of him for an active healthy youngster, one who would cause her no heart aches or annoyance.

The mother stopped to attend a reception, sending her son home alone in the machine. On the way he again saw the boy who had aroused his mother's admiration and yielding to a hasty impulse halted the car and induced the boy to go home with him. The other chap was a little bit of a fellow, and gleefully consented to change his station in life, when he understood that toys and candy would have an active part in it. The crippled boy brought the other child to his home, installing him in his nursery, leaving a note for his mother, explaining that he did what he did to make her happy. It was a pathetic little note, and it was not surprising that the mother wept bitterly when she read it.

When the youngster left his home he had some vague idea of supporting himself. He found, however, that it was an unfriendly world, and he was not fit to cope with it. Finally all his illusions shattered, he was ingloriously brought home to be fondly embraced by his mother, who asked him reproachfully, "Did you think, dear, that any one could take your place?" WON AT THE RODEO (Mar. 21).—The proprietor of a hotel in a little California town sent his motherless daughter to a boarding school, being determined that she should have every advantage he could afford. He did not regret it, for when she returned she had no foolish notions, but settled down and aided him in his work. When he had difficulty in securing help, the girl insisted upon taking charge of the dining room, and the old man confided to his chums she was the best head waitress he ever had.

The girl was fond of horseback riding and enjoyed dashes along the country roads. On one occasion, however, she nearly came to grief, for her nag ran away. A gallant cowboy came to her rescue, overtook the frightened animal, and prevented any harm coming to the young woman. Naturally a friendship sprang up between the two, for each saw much in the other to respect and admire.

In that section of the country there is annually held what is called a "Rodeo," a contest of horsemanship, with all sorts of Wild West features. The cowboy was a dashing rider, and on the day of the entertainment told the girl he was absolutely sure to win the prize.

Their conversation took place in the dining room of the hotel, and as he passed out she noticed two incoming guests, who seemed to take much furtive interest in the young man. She watched them narrowly, learned enough to arouse her suspicions, and obeying a sudden impulse, followed them when they left the hotel. From a place of hiding she learned that they were gamblers, who had bet heavily against her cowboy, and to insure winning their wagers had planned to cripple his horse just before the race started. The girl determined to warn the young man, rode all alone to the arena, and was in time to foil the plotters. Her cowboy won the prize, but on the way home he won something he valued far more, the hand and heart of the girl who had proven her quick wit in the hour of need.

MUTUAL EDUCATIONAL.

WILLIE AND THE OLD SUITOR (Mar. 27).—Willie loved his mother. Yes, and he was selfish about it, too. He didn't want a new father and when the old Baron Anatole called to pay attention to Mrs. Darfeuil, Willie made it most interesting for him.

The cute little fellow was original in his methods and the thorough manner in which he demonstrated his dislike for the Baron is certainly amusing.

The youngster who plays Willie, is a very clever little performer and the comedy situations are handled in such a laughable manner that the subject is indeed an enjoyable one.

ON THE ROADS OF CEYLON (Mar. 27).—On the same reel with this "Willie" comedy is a most interesting and instructive series of views taken in beautiful Ceylon. The luxurious vegetation and the wondrous trees of this gorgeous island make possible some magnificent backgrounds which have been admirably selected.

The promenade through the cocoanut palms would enchant the most prosaic of travelers. There are many other exceptionally beautiful, natural settings.

The means of transportation in this far away country are many and varied. Coolies, buffaloes, horses, elephants and zebras are used.

THE PRIDE OF THE SOUTH (3 reels—Mar. 19).—Capt. Wendell, sojourning in Fairfax, Va., falls in love with Diana Mosby, the daughter of Col. William Mosby, and after a romantic courtship proposes and is accepted. As the lovers go to get Mosby's consent the old man receives a letter from General Robt. E. Lee, telling him that war with the north is inevitable, and asking him to prepare to recruit a regiment. Mosby offers Capt. Wendell a commission, but Jack remains loyal to his uniform, and old Mosby becomes enraged and orders him away, telling him no union sympathizer can marry his daughter. Jack receives orders from the department of war, and reports to his regiment. Col. Mosby leaves for the front, cheered by the people who line the streets. Some time later Jack's regiment captures Fairfax, Va., after a thrilling battle, in which many lives are lost, and the cannon and bombs create much destruction. News of the capture of his home town reaches Mosby, and he determines to penetrate the union lines and assure himself of his daughter's safety. Wendell rushes to the home of Diana, and she is so overjoyed in seeing him again that he has little difficulty in persuading her to marry him. Mosby has some daring adventures with union soldiers, but finally reaches home. He attacks Capt. Wendell with drawn pistol, but Diana throws herself in front of Jack, crying: "Don't shoot, dad, he's my husband!" The old man is furious, but is forced to depart by the arrival of a squad of soldiers who are on his trail. Wendell saves him by denying having seen him, thus throwing the soldiers off the track. Two weeks later Col. Mosby with a strong force attacks Fairfax, and recaptures the city. The fight is terrific, thrilling cavalry and infantry charges being shown. The bridge across the river is blown up by the union soldiers to check the advance of the confederates, but the cavalry plunges into the water and fights its way across the stream. Capt. Wendell is killed and Col. Mosby is shot through the arm. Covered with blood, and his mangled arm dangling at his side, Mosby dashes into his own home. Diana attempts an affectionate greeting, but the maddened Colonel drives her from the house. Diana goes to the battle-field and finds the body of her husband, and a most affecting scene is shown as she sorrows over the corpse of the dead hero. She is compelled to live with the negroes, as the embittered Colonel, who has had his arm amputated, has sworn never to look upon her face again, and threatened to kill the first nigger who mentions her name. Diana gives birth to a beautiful child, who ten years later, is a wild, beautiful girl, whose only playmates are the pickaninnies. One day she wanders on forbidden ground with two little colored children, and makes mud pies on the doorstep of the colonel's home. When the Colonel tries to chase the children away she throws a handful of mud at him, and runs away. The Colonel is furious, and his old servant, who has been amused by the incident, forgets himself and says: "She sho' does hab the Mosby temperament. Massa William, it's yo' own gran'chile!"

The Colonel is thunderstruck, and he starts out after the little girl, picking up her shoes, which she has left on his doorstep. He meets her sitting in the road, nursing her injured little foot, and tenderly picks her up and takes her to his home. Thereafter she makes daily visits to him, and he becomes greatly attached to her, buying her beautiful clothes.

Mrs. Wendell is taken sick, and, dying, calls for her father. None of the servants dare to ask the Colonel to come to his daughter, but the little girl, in childish innocence, undertakes the mission. She is heartbroken at the anger of the old man when she mentions her mother's name, and with tears streaming down her face she upbraids him and runs out of the rom. The old negro servant, deeply affected by the scene points to the picture of Mosby's dead wife and says: "Old Missus wouldn't have done that, Colonel. I'se ashamed to belong to yo', sah!"

Left to his reflections, the Colonel's pride breaks down. He has paid dearly for his temper, and paternal love wins in the conflict of emotions, and he goes to his daughter. The face of the dying woman lights up with pleasure as he kneels at her side and kisses her, and her arms are clasped around his neck as the picture is dissolved out.

THE ICONOCLAST (3 reels—Mar. 26).—Don Jose is a rich land owner, having in his employ a large number of peons. His beautiful daughter, Sylvia, is in love with Rafael, a sculptor, and she meets him clandestinely, despite the violent opposition of her father. Don Jose is an arrogant, surly man and a heretic, whose power is feared by the peons, and who shrink from him in superstitious dread.

Working at starvation wages, the peons muster up courage to ask for more pay, and Pedro is selected as spokesman. His demand throws Don Jose in a rage, and he strikes Pedro a heavy blow across the face with his quirt. As the peons depart, vowing vengence upon their brutal employer, the bell in the church belfry is seen ringing the Angelus, and the people drop to their knees in reverent devotion.

Father Marquette, the good priest of the parish, is much beloved by his people, and makes an appeal to the land owner on behalf of the peons, but is curtly ordered to mind his own business. A dramatic scene takes place between them.

Mike Flanagan, in charge of the construction gang of a railroad arrives and begins to lay tracks, the right of way extending through Don Jose's property. His orders to the men are disregarded, and he commands his people to attack the gang. A thrilling encounter takes place, which is stopped by Father Marquette, who rushes into the melee holding aloft the crucifix, and exhorting his people to desist. They obey him, and Don Jose, raging, leaves the scene. The next day when the peons come to work they are discharged by Don Jose. It does not take long for the poor people to feel the pangs of hunger, living as they are from hand to mouth, after their small incomes are cut off. The priest shares his food with them and solicits alms to relieve the starving.

Rafael has been making a statute of the Madonna, and Sylvia is posing for the subject. As it nears completion they exhibit it to the priest, who gives his blessing to the young lovers. Pedro's child is very sick, and is frequently visited by the priest. It finally succumbs and passes away, the priest ministering the last rites of the church. During his absence Rafael calles the people, and they carry the completed statue to the priest's garden. He is most agreeably surprised, and is beaming upon the assembled parishioners when Don Jose apears. When he learns that his daughter has posed for the statue he becomes mad with rage, and seizing an iron bar he breaks the statue to pieces. The people are thunderstruck at the sacrilege, and stare in horrified amazement, as Don Jose grabs his daughter's arm and drags her home. The sculptor is overwhelmed with grief and rage, and is with difficulty restrained, and it requires considerable effort on the part of the priest to quiet his flock.

Don Jose secretly makes a trip to the Indian village, and explains to the chief that the railroad is the forerunner of an influx of white people who will destroy his hunting grounds. It does not take much persuasion to make the Indians believe they are being wronged, and when Don Jose tells them that the solution of the difficulty is to drive the railroad gang out of the country, they decide to follow his advice.

Flanagan has wired the superintendent of the road regarding the attack by Jose's men, and has received instructions to go ahead with his work, and if interfered with to telegraph the commander of the fort, who had been instructed to assist him.

The Indians come to the outskirts of the village, where they are met by Jose, who gives them final instructions for the attack. He is accidentally seen by Pedro, who hides in the bushes.

With wild shouts the Indians charge into the railroad gang. The men grab their rifles and retreat to the village, where they take refuge in the huts. Flushed with their victory, the Indians attack the village, and the priest opens the doors of the church to the women and children, who join him in prayer while all about them the battle is going on.

Flanagan manages to get a message to the fort, although the Indians shoot the operator. The troops are soon galloping toward the scene of battle, which rages with indescribable fury. The horses are not spared, and over the top of a hill the soldiers hurl themselves onto the redskins, who put up a stubborn resistance but are soon killed or captured.

Pedro tells of Jose's responsibility in the matter, and the maddened populace goes to his home. Rafael, out of pity for Sylvia, runs ahead to warn Don Jose, but he is not there. Terror-stricken with the results of his work, Don Jose has taken to the woods, where he is found. His piteous cries for mercy fall upon deaf ears, for a hundred hands reach for him at once, and he is dragged away by the heels to suffer well merited punishment.

KAY-BEE.

A FRONTIER WIFE (Mar. 1).—Dr. Coles loses all his money at the gambling table, and in a spirit of despondency contemplates suicide. Ford, the gamekeeper, stops him, and gives him back his money, making him promise never to gamble again. In a spirit of gratitude, Coles invites Ford to his home, where he meets Coles' wife. Mrs. Coles is attracted by the gambler, and he is evidently infatuated. Some days later the doctor is called to the bedside of a very sick child, and Mrs. Coles waits for him at the gate. Ford coming from his gaming house sees her and walks to her home. The inevitable happens, for he suddenly clasps her in his arms and kisses her. Intoxicated for the moment she does not resist, and the doctor coming home at that moment sees through the window the tableau of his wife nestling in the arms of Ford. Coles storms into the house and orders the gambler away. Crestfallen, Ford leaves. Coles then tells his wife to follow Ford, and she attempts to take the baby, Dollie, with her, but Coles stops her. Outside Ford is waiting for her, and he finally persuades her to go with him.

Six years later Mrs. Coles has paid the penalty. Ford has become a drunkard, and has slid down the ladder of life. She remonstrates with him one day, and he attempts to strike her but is prevented by one of his friends, but he tells her that he is tired of her and turns her out. Penniless, homeless and friendless, she wanders out in the street. Passing a saloon she is struck by a bullet fired from inside, where a terrific fight is taking place. She is carried to a house and laid on a bed, while a cowboy runs for Doctor Coles.

Little Dolly has been taken very ill, and Dr. Coles is anxiously watching at her bedside when the call comes, and it is with grave misgivings that he permits himself to be led away by duty's demands. When he reaches the injured woman and recognizes her he starts back in amazement, and picks up his hat to depart without atending to her, but a cowboy forces him back at the point of a gun. With skilful hands he extracts the bullet and binds the wound, and the pathetic plight of his wife touches his heart. Impulsively he kisses her, and at the touch of her lips a wave of tenderness sweeps over him.

When he reaches home he finds that his little girl has passed away, and he is broken-hearted. He breaks the news to his wife, and their mutual grief bridges the chasm which has yawned between them.

TEXAS KELLY AT BAY (Mar. 28).—Texas Kelly and his pal secure employment on a ranch, and Kelly meets Gertrude, the daughter of the rancher who is home on a vacation. The two become fast friends, and one day while Kelly is rounding up some cattle he falls over a cliff and is rescued by Gertrude, who lassoes him and pulls him out of danger. In the danger to the man she forgets herself for a moment and kisses him, and Kelly confesses his love for her. They become engaged and Kelly is very happy.

Vacation days are over and Gertrude goes back to college. Here she meets a dashing youth who makes ardent love to her and turns her head. She writes to Kelly that she does not love him and cannot marry him. Kelly is plunged in grief.

Six months later Gertrude is returning home in the stage coach when it is attacked by bandits. Kelly and his pal see the attack in the distance and quickly evolve a plan of action. Riding quickly to a bend in the road Kelly dismounts and takes a position behind a huge rock. The stage coach driver has been shot and his limp body is hanging over the seat. As the horses dash by Kelly's pal gallops along and swings himself onto the driver's seat, and drives the coach to the ranch. Kelly holds the bandits back, and a furious battle results. Kelly's pal calls the cowboys, and they ride to the rescue, Gertrude accompanying them in a buckboard. Enraged at being thwarted, the bandits are making every endeavor to shoot Kelly, who dodges behind rocks and hills, determined to sell his life as dearly as possible. His ammunition has become exhausted, and he is engaged in a desperate hand to hand fight when the cowboys arrive. The tremendous bravery of Kelly has reawakened Gertrude's love, and it is a very penitent girl who asks the big cowpuncher to please give her back the engagement ring.

LOVE AND PAIN (Mar. 17).—Jones is engaged to a jealous girl, Ethel. His stenographer has a fainting spell in his office and Jones attempts to revive her. Ethel walks into the office and sees the girl in Jones' arms and bounces out. She sends Jones a note breaking her engagement, and in despair he attempts to commit suicide. He prepares a large glass of poison, while his partner vainly tries to prevent him from carrying out his plan. The partner resorts to a clever ruse, putting the telephone receiver down and calling Jones, telling him Ethel wants to speak to him. While Jones is at the phone the partner empties the glass of poison and replaces the liquid with water. Jones swallows the water, and just then a letter comes from Ethel asking forgiveness for her peevishness. Now Jones wants to live, and he imagines he is going to dies. He sends for a doctor, and his imagination plays him queer pranks. Already he can feel the poison working in his stomach. The partner says nothing, thinking to teach Jones a good lesson, and assists the doctor when the stomach pump is applied and other drastic means are resorted to to save Jones from the supposed deadly poison. After considerable work Jones is pronounced out of danger, and is turned over to Ethel, who is anxiously awaiting the result of the doctor's work.

THE MAN NEXT DOOR (Mar. 17).—Myers lives next door to the Smiths. He sits in the window reading a book and glances over at Mrs. Smith with admiration. She resents this and calls her husband's attention to the man next door. Smith is greatly angered and threatens to shoot Myers. Mrs. Smith sends Myers a note telling him to stop flirting as her husband is a sharpshooter. Myers becomes indignant and goes to Mrs. Smith for an explanation. Smith comes in and chases Myers through the house, acelerating Myers' movements with a fusilade of shots. Myers finally makes his escape, and goes back to his window. A tramp comes sneaking around the Smith home just as the wind blows Myers' book from his hands through the open window into the Smith house. Myers goes after the book, entering by the window. Mrs. Smith sees the tramp and is frightened. Smith sees Myers and attempts to lay a trap for his wife by hiding in a large cedar chest. Mrs. Smith sees her husband as he pulls down the cover, and thinks it is the tramp. She rushes to the room where Myers is about to depart with his book and begs for help. The two jump on the lid of the chest and try to hold it down while Smith struggles frantically to get out. Mrs. Smith runs for the police, who have many ludicrous accidents before they finally reach the Smith home. In the meantime Myers has had the job of his life holding in the furious Smith, who manages to get his hand out of the box, but Myers bites it till he is glad to pull it in again. Finally the police surround the chest and Smith is pulled out, and is with difficulty restrained by the cops from attacking Myers, who loses no time in making his exit.

A WIFE WANTED (Mar. 20).—Hale, a western rancher, advertises for a wife. Ruben, married to a shrew, becomes tired of being henpecked and goes west, where he secures a job as a cowboy. Dot Raymond, a pretty young girl, sees the ad. and decides to apply in person. Mrs. Ruben starts on the trail of her husband.

When Dot arrives at the railroad station she is met by Ruben, who monopolizes her. At the ranch Hale tries to butt in and tell the girl Ruben is not the man she wants to see, but Ruben, invigorated by his free life, makes bold to attack Hale and drive him away. Hale gets the cowboys to help him, but Ruben pulls his gun and puts the whole crowd to rout. He feels so tough that he bites pieces out of his gun and eats them. Dot is filled with admiration for Ruben. Mrs. Ruben appears at the ranch and inquires for her husband, describing him. Hale leads her to Ruben and Dot, and in the presence of his wife the erstwhile beau and badly collapses and is led away by the ear.

THE RUBE AND THE BARON (Mar. 20).—Mabel is in love with John, the country boy, but her father wants her to marry a Baron. She is locked up in a room, and her father watches her. John takes a bundle of cloth and makes a big firebrand which he throws into the window, at the same time yelling "Fire!" Dad runs for his life and Mabel jumps through the window into the arms of John, who hurries her to the minister's house. The ceremony is about to take place when Dad and the Baron rush in, and Mabel is led home again. Preparations are made for the wedding to the Baron, and Mabel is attired in her bridal gown, when John hangs a dummy over a cliff and sends a messenger to the scene of the wedding. The Baron, Dad and the guests all rush off to save the man reported to be hanging, and by the time they have discovered that it is a dummy Mabel and John have wrapped the bridal veil about the head of a young farmer accomplice, who demurely awaits the return of the bridegroom. John and Mabel rush off to get married. The ceremony between the Baron and the fake bride proceeds to the placing of the ring on the finger of the bride, and the nervous Baron drops the gold band. Stooping to pick it up he sees that his "bride" is wearing heavy cowhide boots, and tearing the veil from the face of the farmer he sees the trick that has been played upon him. After beating the farmer boy a rush is made to the minister's house where John and Mabel have just been married, but they arrive as the happy couple have been made one.

THE CHIEF'S PREDICAMENT (Mar. 24).—Black Handers have been creating much trouble in the town and the newspapers attack the chief of police for his failure to capture them. He is spurred to vigorous action, and disguised as a tough Italian he seeks the Black Handers. He meets them, and after some conversation is invited to join the organization. Amid solemn and blood curdling rites, he becomes a member of the band, and to test his sincerity he is ordered to blow up the home of a wealthy man, who has been vigorously denouncing the chief and the band. A bomb is placed in his hand, and he is compelled at the points of revolvers to enter the house. The man comes in, and the chief hides in the chimney. The man builds a fire, and the fuse of the bomb catches fire and the chief is being roasted. The Black Handers have been watching the proceedings from the window, and try to save the chief by rushing to the roof and dumping pails of water down the chimney. The man of the house hears the commotion in the chimney and hears the men on the roof and phones for the police. They arrive and drag the chief from the chimney where he has been dancing a terrified jig to keep from being burned alive, dodging the volumnes of water, and keeping the fuse of the bomb from burning.

JENNY'S PEARLS (Mar. 24).—Mrs. Brown loses a string of pearls and advertises for them. Hamlin and his wife, actors out of work, see the ad, and try to make a few meals out of it. Hamlin disguises himself as a detective, and calls at the Brown home, claiming to have knowledge of the pears. He manages to secure some money but loses it before he can buy food. He is finally cornered and forced to reveal the hiding place of the thief. ' He leads them to his room, after having instructed his wife to shoot a pistol and lie still on the bed. She follows his instructions, and the party think she has committed suicide. After many amusing incidents Mrs. Brown discovers that the pearls have not been lost, but that the string has broken and they have fallen in her corsage, and the fake detective is driven away.

MISS SIMPTON'S JEWELS (Mar. 21).—Miss Simpton, the daughter of a wealthy London banker, goes on a visit to Paris. A gang of jewel thieves learn that she is carrying her valuable jewelry with her. Immediately on the arrival of the steamer on which she crosses the Channel, they follow her into the train. A female accomplice makes friendly advances in a railway carriage, and at luncheon contrives to place a drug in her wine. The scheme is successful up to that moment, but the thieves are not aware that Gerald, a smart young detective, has kept a watchful eye upon them. The detective skillfully turns their plots so that they turn against the plotters, and when the train arrives in Paris, he has the birds nicely trapped. They are handed over to the police, whilst Miss Simpton proceeds to her hotel to rest after her eventful journey.

PAT WISHES TO ECONOMIZE (Mar. 21).—Pat has just completed the removal of his goods and chattels from one house to another. He decides that it is more economical to do the picture hanging himself than to employ a man. His experience leads to much fun.

THE MAN EATER (Mar. 28).—A party of surveyors are sent into the wilds of Africa to survey the country for a proposed railway. They experience much difficulty as the natives are unfriendly and the country is infested with savage beasts.

They establish a night watch in the ruins of an old house in order that they may guard their work from the malicious attempts upon the part of the natives to destroy it, but each night the watchman disappears mysteriously. Only traces of his blood are to be found. This goes on for two nights, and two watchmen disappear in a mysterious manner. At last the chief sends his last man to fetch help and goes himself to keep the night watch.

The lions have done the work which the natives feared to do, and two of the white men have already been devoured by these savage brutes. The natives dig a deep pit right across the road along which all help must come to the Chief, left all alone with the wife of one of his men. They cover the pit with twigs and leaves so cleverly that the lion, whilst making the usual evening visit to the deserted house, falls into it. Thus the natives kill their ally, and save the white men for whom they really prepared the pit. Help arrives in due course, and the natives are subjugated, while the man eater meets his death within the pit.

RYNO.

MEMORIES OF LONG AGO (Mar. 17).—Jesse Williams, an old clam digger, finds in the sand while digging clams, an old ring. He takes it back with him to his lonely cabin, sits by the fire and holding the ring in his hand falls asleep.

His youth comes back to him as he sees himself waiting outside Mary Randall's cabin to take her to church. Mary and her father come out, the young people exchange tender glances, the girl goes with her father and the boy follows.

After church he meets the girl with a rival; the girl shows preference for him and playfully steals her mother's ring before going out for a row with Jesse. Unfortunately Mary loses the ring overboard. Jesse comforts her and promises to see if he can find the ring later at low tide. In the meantime Mary's father has found that some miscreant is robbing his eel and lobster pots at night and goes with the rival to the seashore to discover the rascal. They see in the dim distance the robbers. Jesse comes ashore after a fruitless search for the ring and is promptly accused by the fisherman of robbing the pots. This he strenuously denies, but is warned never to come near the house again.

He meets his girl clandestinely and they go for a walk over the rocks. She falls over a cliff; he rushes down only to find her unconscious and perhaps dead. He tells her father and rival who carry Mary home. They find that she is dead. James is warned away and is not even allowed to mourn over the grave. He returns to the fatal rocks and is bowed in grief.

The lonely old man slowly awakens from his dream of the past and takes the little ring to his breast as the picture fades.

THE SEA WAIF (Mar. 24).—Before going to the fishing grounds, grandaddy builds baby Grace a boat. They sail away leaving her in charge of her mother. The little girl asks her mother if she can go to the shore and sail her new toy. "Yes, but be careful, dear," so off the child goes with her boat in her arms and her chum Whiskers, the dog, reluctantly pulling on his lead. She gets her toy in the water, the boat becomes unmoored and drifts away. Missing her baby by meal time, the mother looks out of the window out on the bay and discovers to her horror that the boat is almost out of sight, and the baby standing up waving her little arms for help. The mother frantically runs out to seek assistance; she dispatches a boy to the distant life saving station, and in the meantime with the assistance of the priest and neighbors, builds a signal fire on a high rock, with the hope of summoning her husband and father.

The fishermen see the distant fire and row back to shore; the frantic mother tells of the accident so they stumble back into their boats and row off to seek the child. In the meantime the boy has given the alarm to the lifesavers who launch their boat in record time and row with mighty strokes to the rescue. They save the child and dog and transfer them to the fishermen; the baby is taken home. On returning to consciousness she asks plaintively "Where is my doggie?" The dog is returned to her arms and happiness reigns.

GREAT NORTHERN.

THE NEW FILM ACTOR (Mar. 22).—Fred is anxious to become a film actor and after screwing up his courage he makes application to one of the producers of the Great Northern Film Co. After being told to return on the following day, Fred decides to perfect himself in his chosen art and demonstrates to his sweetheart that he possesses all the necessary requirements to become famous on the screen. When he returns to the studio he is assigned to a small part, but he manages to make such a muddle of everything he undertakes that he is ordered to leave the plant. The producer is in high rage because Fred has spoiled the filming of three pictures, but this does not worry the would-be actor. He finds his way into several dressing rooms and donning a soldier's uniform fights a duel with a marble bust. Finally being unable to get rid of the ambitious young man, the producer agrees to engage him providing he lives up to the requirements of the company. These "requirements" include a fall from a balloon, drinking a pint of prussic acid and allowing himself to be run over by a railroad train. An hour later, the ambitious young amateur, almost unrecognizable, wanders into the studio. He has fulfilled the "requirements" and is promptly engaged by the astonished and delighted producer.

PILOT.

TILL DEATH US DO PART (Mar. 20).—Jack Mason, a representative in Congress, has achieved great political fame, and the nomination of a senatorship is offered him by a political ring. This ring, however, takes exception to Jack Mason's wife, whom they consider unfit to be the wife of so prominent a man in political and social affairs. They suggest that he divorce his wife, and in return promise that the nomination shall be his.

His wife reads this letter and although she is devoted to her husband, she determines that she will not stand between him and his political and social ambitions. She makes up her mind to pass out of his life. At this moment the political committee are ushered into Jack Mason's library. They have come for an answer. Before giving this, however, Jack Mason tells the committee about his early struggling days, when he first passed his examinations to be admitted to the bar; how his wife, then a pretty country girl, sacrificed her little inheritance in order to furnish him with an office; how she toiled and slaved in order that he might be fitly clothed in order to mingle with people in the higher sphere; how her every thought had been for his future. Night and day she had sacrificed the better part of her life in order that he should be pushed forward on the path to success. Now she had grown old, plain, and he had expanded and progressed.

It was a story of self-sacrifice, humiliation and abnegation on the part of a woman whose life was wrapped up in that of the man she loved. The committee recognized the man's nobility of character in standing by the woman who had made him the man that he was. They saw their error, and shamefacedly took their leave. The wife is about to leave her husband's roof, when he discovers that she is cognizant of the whole affair. Taking her in his arms he shows her their old marriage certificate, and as he enfolds her to his heart, he points to the words "Till death us do part."

SOLAX.

BURSTUP HOMES MURDER CASE (Mar. 26).—Mrs. Reggie Jellybone has her husband completely under control. She places a reflector on her sewing table in such a position that every movement and expression and manifest desire of her husband become known to her. She is, therefore, able to anticipate his movements and interfere in his plans. He seldom gets a chance to go to the club on the pretense of sitting up with a sick member.

One night the boys at the club need a fifth hand very badly, and when they call up Jellybone, Mrs. Jellybone answers the phone, but they are not daunted. Mr. Resourceful is sent to get Jellybone in spite of his wife. A scheme is concocted and Jellybone goes to the club leaving a dummy on his side of the bed.

When Mrs. Jellybone comes up to the room to retire, she finds blood-stains on the bed-clothes and grows excited. She shakes the dummy and the head is severed from the body and rolls under the bed. She excitedly concludes that her husband had been murdered, and immediately she calls for Burstup Homes, the renowned private detective. Burstup Homes arrives puffed up with importance, makes a very ceremonious investigation and deduces that the man is really dead. Furthermore, he deduces that a man wearing a ten size shoe is the criminal. In the examination Burstum Homes forgets essentials and takes up his time with details. He follows the blood-stain clue and a foot print clue. The visible stains on the improvised bed-sheet ladder which Jellybone used as a means to effect his escape also attracts the detective's attention and gives him strong evidence of an entrance and an exit from the house through the window. In fact, there are clues galore and Burstup Homes feverishly goes to work. Everyone he meets is a suspect. Deacon Stronghead, whom he meets on the way from the knife-grinder where he had a knife sharpened for his wife, offers the strongest causes for suspicion, because he carries a concealed weapon, and the story is more complicated when Mrs. Jellybones plays a trick on her husband. Off she goes to the club—and here comes the big surprise—she does not pounce on her husband, as one would expect, but is so delighted that he is alive that she embraces him most rapturously. Jellybone begins to think that his wife fill soon be stricken with an attack from over-indulgence and suffer untold agony. The farce ends up in the police station where Burstup Homes' failure is provocative of much laughter, but he is not at all dismayed and retorts that the police are jealous of him.

THE CLIMAX (Mar. 28).—George Preston, a playwright, unable to write the proper climaxes to his plays, has them continually returned, and when he and his wife Amy, receive an invitation from Bob to the opera, is unable to pay for the gown ordered by his wife. Bob secretly loving Amy, and seeing her predicament, pays for the clothes. She, after some reluctance accepts, and gives him her I. O. U. Preston, however, in spite of his wife, Amy's denial, guesses the truth about the matter, denounces his wife, and forbids her to go to the opera. Bob, however, persuades her to show her independence and she, purely out of defiance, accompanies him. He, however, under the pretense that he has forgotten the tickets, lures her to his rooms, and there makes love to her. Shocked, and indignant, she spurns him, but he points to her clothes. She horrified, plucks the hat off, and tearing it to shreds, flings the remnants in his face.

Preston, learning where Amy has gone, hurries thither and bursts in the door just in time to save his wife from Bob's forced attentions. Amy, humble and contrite, begs forgiveness and Preston, after a bitter struggle, takes her in his arms, and leads her home. There the thought occurs to him that he has found a proper climax for his play. He writes what has happened; and to his delight, the manager accepts the play and pays at once in advance. Bob, hoping yet to embarass Amy and advance. Bob, hoping yet to embarrass Amy and Preston immediately pays him and sends him unheroically about his business while the couple embrace at the happy termination of a near tragedy.

WATCH YOUR WATCH (Feb. 27).—Mr. Timmid, taking his evening stroll, reads a newspaper article telling of the audacity of footpads. Many citizens, the story continues, fearing attacks, are carrying arms. Timmid, thoroughly alarmed, gazes round apprehensively.

A short distance away is approaching a mild-looking person. He is reading a page of a guide. The guide reads: "Deserted streets should be avoided, as upon them dangerous persons may lurk. Distrust suspicious looking persons and run away." This startling information alarms the person.

The stranger, equally afraid of Timmid, passes by. Noting Timmid's scowl he concludes that Timmid is a dangerous man. He decides to run. Timmid puts his hand in his pocket. His watch is not there. Timmid pursues the fleeing stranger and at the point of a pistol takes a time-piece from the man's pocket and puts it into his own.

Timmid, feeling brave, goes home and tells his wife all about his hand-to-hand struggle with a gigantic footpad and how he recovered his watch, whereupon Mrs. Timmid goes to a desk and picks up the real watch which Timmid had left home by mistake that morning. The mistake was apparent and Timmid takes the watch to the police station. He tells the police inspector that he had found it on the roadway.

A year passes. Timmid is not quite recovered from the shock which accompanied the discovery that he was an accidental thief. One evening he is requested by a policeman asking him to call on the superintendent of police regarding the watch. Timmid and his wife can now see no other prospect than that of a long term in jail. The police superintendent looks at Timmid. Timmid is about to plead guilty when he is handed the watch and his attention is called to the printed rule in the police laws, which says, that anything found on the public highway and not claimed within a year and a day belongs to the finder.

IT'S DELIGHTFUL TO BE MARRIED (Mar. 4).—Mr. and Mrs. Ellebrecht have been wedded. They board a train for their honeymoon. They enter one of the compartments in the train and are happy in expectation of a joyous honeymoon. They are all alone when a dashing officer of the French army enters and ends all billing and cooing. The newly made wife is a comely creature and the officer, who believes that married men make the best husbands, is not averse to looking at her with flirtatious eyes. However, wee wifey will have none of it.

At the first stop the husband alights from the train to look for an empty compartment. The train starts without him. The officer tries to stop the tears of the young wife. The young husband meanwhile has telephoned to the next station, where he knows his wife will be expecting a telephone message. He tells her that he will meet her in the nearest large city at the Wienersnitz Hotel. To this hotel the army officer, takes the young wife. He then obtains a room for the young wife next to his own.

It is the foreign custom to put one's shoes outside of the door to be polished by the valet. This the army officer and the wife have done, each from their respective rooms. The young wife anxiously awaits the arrival of her husband. He arrives in time to see four feet of scandal; this is due to an error on the part of the valet, who, after he had polished the shoes, accidentally puts those of the young wife alongside of those of the officer, and both pairs in front of the officer's door.

Mr. Husband sees the shoes and at once hastens out. "Officer, call a policeman," he calls to the patrolman on the corner.

A subordinate of the army officer has heard of the husband's arrival and the fuss he has made because of the position of the shoes. He sends this note: "A. C. T. Post 23, 3rd Division. Leave immediately for the frontier." The young wife receives this note and believes it to be a message from her husband. Immediately she packs her belongings. The officer's subordinate, seeking to ascertain whether his note has reached in good time, enters the officer's room and quickly hides behind a curtain. The officer is bidding good-bye to the wife. As she goes down one flight of stairs the husband and his young army of assistants mount another flight. They pound loudly upon the officer's door and demand entrance. The officer, when they enter, in all innocence, declares that the woman is not with him. However, they do not believe him and search the room. They see the curtain move, in back of which the subordinate is hiding. They drag him forth, thinking it to be the wife. The husband goes to the next room and finds on the table the note which had been sent to the officer and which she had received in mistake and which caused her hasty departure.

The picture closes with the young husband shaking his fist at the officer and making a wild run for the stairs, hoping to overtake his wife before she could have had time to board the train going to the Italian frontier.

THE BOND OF BROTHERHOOD (Mar. 11).—Hubert Barry, a painter, is engaged to marry Mrs. Walters, a divorcee. He is with her when he receives a letter from his brother. The brother asks that Hubert find him a job, to once more give him help. The brother, Maurice, arrives, and Hubert installs a laboratory for his brother, a chemist, near Hubert's studio.

Mrs. Walters is an incorrigible flirt and shows marked favor to Maurice. This flirtation grows daily in danger. Scandal threatens. Hubert is unaware of the duplicity. He learns the truth at a reception given by her when he finds her in the arms of Maurice. In rage, that his kindness be so illy rewarded, grieved that his love for his brother and Mrs. Walters should be so flouted, Hubert orders Maurice from the house and tells him that never again he wishes to see his face.

Maurice goes to his rooms and packs his belongings. He then enters his laboratory and experiments with new explosives. There is a confusion of chemical elements—an explosion. Maurice, stunned and scorched by the flames, staggers out of the room and falls unconscious.

Hubert, soul wounded, has gone to his mother's house. Although in mental torture, he will not worry her by telling of the deception of Maurice. With his mother he goes to his home. As he enters, there he finds Maurice senseless on the floor. At his side is a note written preparatory to his going away. It is addressed to Hubert and asks his forgiveness for the folly and deception of the brother for whom Hubert had done so much.

His anger partly dissolved, Hubert, with the aid of his mother, revives him. As Maurice slowly returns to consciousness, Mrs. Walters enters. It is a trying moment. Here is he whom she had injured almost irreparably in the heart of his brother and who may now be injured for the length of his life. Mrs. Walters, seeking her own interest, advances to the side of Hubert and tries to retrieve his flown affections. There is one to intervene, one to stop in time the alliance of Hubert with such a worthless woman. It is the mother. She steps between her sons, brings them together in body, soul and spirit. She then denounces the woman who had threatened the bond of brotherhood, waves her out of the door, out of their lives.

SWEET FAMILIAR FACES (Mar. 13).—Joe's wife and her mother do their best to spoil him, although he is an incorrigible flirt. At the home of a friend, Mrs. Brown, Joe makes ardent love when her husband and brother are not looking, much to the dismay of worthy little Mrs. Brown, who is so faithful to her husband that it hurts. Joe hands her this note: "Sweet Cruelty, Your charm unmans me. Meet you I must, for my heart is overflowing. Adoringly yours, Joe."

Mrs. Brown hands the note to her husband. He is a pretty good sport and decides that although Joe is naughty in spots, he is a good soul after all. He, Mrs. Brown and Mrs. Brown's brother call on Joe's wife and his mother-in-law to tell them of Joe's doings. They decide to teach him a lesson. Accordingly Mrs. Brown writes to Joe and tells him that he is irresistible and that she will meet him on the following day.

Joe, in order to carry out the deceit at home, puts on his shooting clothes, takes his gun and goes forth to meet Mrs. Brown. There she is. Hiding around the corner is Joe's wife and his mother-in-law and kin of Mrs. Brown.

Joe's wife takes a fast train to the place where

Mrs. Brown intended to take Joe, a quiet little cafe in the country. When Joe gets there, happy to the eyes, he receives an awful shock. Who comes out to greet him at the cafe but a waitress who startlingly resembles his wife. Joe almost has nervous prostration.

When he gets in a corner with Mrs. Brown he tells her sweet nothings and sweet somethings and his consternation abates. Who then should wait on him, however, but the same woman Joe almost loses his eyesight looking at her. He is gasping for breath when in comes a woman and a man who sit at the next table. "Good night!" says Joe. "My mother-in-law with your brother!"

Mrs. Brown all the time keeps a straight face and seems entirely innocent. She utterly fails to recognize these people as any she had ever seen before.

Unable to stand it longer, Joe addresses the people and asks them what they mean by following him In pretended astonishment they ask him what he is talking about. They declare that they don't know him and never saw him before. When Joe has been almost scared to death by these apprehensions, his mother-in-law, wife and Mrs. Brown all stand up and confront him with his naughtiness, whereupon Joe swears off and promises that he won't do it again—that day.

KINEMACOLOR

A MOTHER'S SPIRIT (2 reels).—The joyous spirit of Christmas pervades the house where Mr. and Mrs. Ormsby have collected toys for their two little children. A week before Christmas the mother sickens and dies. The Father, wrapped in his grief, forgets the children and wraps himself up in his sorrow. The night before Christmas the neglected children slip from bed and hang up their stockings as usual, sure that if papa has forgotten them Santa Claus has not.

During the night the spirit of the mother returns; she sees her babies asleep and noiselessly gets the toys from their hiding-place and fills the stockings, gliding about unseen. Upon the book her husband has left on the table she leaves a red rose, her favorite flower, with which in life he always kept her supplied. Her mission accomplished, she vanishes.

On Christmas morning the children rush for their stockings; the astonished father questions the servants, but they deny having filled the stockings. Then he sees the rose, and knows the spirit of his beloved wife has come back to teach him a lesson. He throws aside his selfish grief and makes the Christmas a happy one for his babies, knowing full well the joy of his conduct will cause the "Christmas Spirit."

RAMBLES IN PARIS.—The film opens with views of the Jardin d'Acclimatation, where swans and other water fowl, antelopes and springboks are to be seen. A visit to Lunar Park, the great fun-city, follows. Here some excellent views are obtained of the popular amusements, such as the "Witching Waves" and the "Air Blast." A number of the great parks are next visited, including the Parc Monceau and the Parc St. Cloud. Here are beautiful flower-beds, wide gravel walks and ornamental trees. Another notable and truly continental feature is the large number of statues which are to be seen on every hand. The goldfish in the lake make a pretty picture.

The picture concludes with views of the park at Versailles.

RISE OF DOCTOR MABLEY (2 reels).—A young physician opens richly furnished offices in a fashionable vicinity. Months pass without a "call." Discouraged, the young doctor decides to leave town. At this moment a telephone call summons him to a "call," which he finds to be to prescribe for a sick dog. Infuriated at the request, the young physician nevertheless prescribes for the dog. Several days later the beautiful debutante solicits from the young doctor a contribution for a "Dog Hospital." Unable to refuse the young girl, the doctor returns his "fee." Recognizing the bill, and thus discovering the doctor's poverty, the girl, using hypnotic influence, convinces her father that he is ill and immediately sends him to the young physician. Friends agree with the young girl that they are ill, and take her advice to consult the new doctor. Assured that her protege is on the road to success, the young woman falls ill from over-exertion. The old family physician fails to relieve his young patient, who insists that her father call in the younger doctor. Early in the story Cupid has wisely aimed his bow and arrow. Through the magic influence of Kinemacolor photography we can almost breathe the fragrance of the beautifully colo"ed roses in the quiet garden where the happy couple pledge the inevitable vows of love.

WINTER SPORTS AT ARE, SWEDEN.—This charming subject opens with a panorama of Are, a little place prettily situated at the foot of Mount Areskutan. As the panorama continues, the whole of the mountain comes into view, its slopes are covered with snow. The next scene shows the railway station, Are, and some people waiting for a train. We next see the funicular railway on which tourists ascend Mount Areskutan.

We are now introduced to the winter sports at this favorite resort. Men clear away the snow from an extensive track over which sleighing will take place. Horse sleighing and ski-ing come first. In the former sport ponies draw men along. The animals are fairly speedy, though their appearance is not much to boast of. In these scenes the Swedish flag wil be noticed.

Juvenile tourists, not at all skilled, now engage in a race on skis. Views of skiing follow; men cross a snowclad hillside, and the pines in this section, with snow on the leaves, make an artistic picture. Bob-sleighing, in which toboggans are used, is full of movement and interest. The last section illustrates ice yachting at the base of Areskutan. A sleigh is fitted with a sail and it is surprising how great a speed is obtained in a fair breeze. The last picture includes a magnificent sky-photograph, making a scene of surprising beauty and realism.

Simplex

The Bioscope, England's leading motion picture trade paper, of October 24th, 1912, in an account of the opening of the new Shaftesbury Ave. Picture Theatre, of London, says:

> "The Picture itself is worthy of special mention; rarely have we seen clearer, steadier projection, or a picture so well defined. Two Simplex Projectors are installed, and we can say no more than that they give a picture which certainly could not be beaten. This is high testimony, and well deserved."

It is not always true that "A prophet is not known in his own country," for the Simplex is popular throughout the United States and Canada and is admitted by those who have used it to be

From the Yale Moving Picture Co.

New Haven, Conn., March 9, 1913.

The J. H. Genter Co.,
Newburgh, N. Y.

Gentlemen:

We wish to state that we have tried all kinds of Screens, but can truthfully say that the Best Results were Obtained by Mirroroide. Very truly yours,

YALE MOVING PICTURE CO.,
B. Williams.

After 1 Year's Use (Big)

Gentlemen:

We Purchased a Mirroroide Screen from you last Summer and it is giving excellent Satisfaction. Its surface is as white as the day installed. Yours very truly,

KELLEY AND DEMMEY,
White Hall, Ill.

Dated March 8, 1913.

After 2 Years

Gentlemen:

We are still using your screen which we installed two years ago and have only words of highest praise for same. It is even more than you claim for it. Yours very truly,

P. J. TOOKEY,
Jewel Theater,
Sioux Falls, S. D.

March 6, 1913.

Mr. Exhibitor, we back up every MIRROROIDE screen sold with a five-year guarantee that it won't turn black, crack, peel or in any way tarnish. It produces pictures without haze, glare or eye strain. It is waterproof.

The original MIRROROIDE is the only rough or matte surfaced screen before the public. (See that testimonial in last week's Moving Picture World.)

Get our large free samples. Test any way you desire. Seeing is believing. Deposit cost amount with your bank; test 30 days; if it meets your approval, instruct your banker to forward the amount. Is this not a fair offer? Manufactured under pending patents.

Gundlach Projection Lenses

The Only Lenses Which Guarantee You The Best Pictures
The Only Lenses Giving The Greatest Possible Illumination
The Only Lenses Exact in Focal Length To Within 1-100 of an Inch

There were no high grade Lenses on the market until GUNDLACH LENSES were made and none now that equal them in optical quality and illuminating power.

The GUNDLACH NO. 2 PROJECTION LENSES made the long throw possible and already hundreds of theater owners have taken advantage of this opportunity to increase their theaters in length and seating capacity adding to their profits at the same time.

The superior qualitv of GUNDLACH PROJECTION LENSES is recognized by the leading makers of machines and they will be supplied to order in place of the ordinary lens equipment at very little increase in price.

No matter how well satisfied you are with your picture we invite you to order a GUNDLACH PROJECTION LENS for trial to see the difference. Nearly all our lenses are sold to exhibitors who have ordinary lenses, but are looking for something better. In many cases a customer orders one lens for trial and then re-equips all his machines, sometimes the machines of several theaters.

GUNDLACH PROJECTION LENSES are used by the Kinemacolor Company of America because they must have the best.

IT'S ALL IN THE LENS

YOUR PIANIST CAN PLAY SEVEN INSTRUMENTS WITHOUT LEAVING THEIR SEAT

Read the above statement again—get every word—think of it, ONE PIANIST ABLE TO PLAY SEVEN MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS WITHOUT LEAVING THEIR SEAT. Glance over your Orchestra payroll and figure what a saving this would mean to you. Look at it from a dollar-and-cents points of view. Consider the originality and attractiveness of it —consider every advantage—imagine the effect of having a complete orchestra playing and only one musician. Here's some ready money for you—here's a chance to save money and still have as fine an Orchestra as anybody could wish for. With the

BARTON PIANO ATTACHMENT

it is possible for your Pianist to play any of the following instruments without moving from their seat: The Piano, Musical Bells, Marimba, Xylophone, Orchestra Bells, Pipe Organ, Drums (Snare and Bass), Tom Tom, Storm Effects, Cymbal, Triangle and Autohorn. All in one or separate. Operated by the Pianist's right hand alone. We furnish a complete Orchestra, including all musical effects above enumerated, in such a handy finished arrangement that only the Pianist is necessary, thus eliminating the additional expense of extra musicians. It is not necessary to buy a complete outfit—we would be glad to suggest which portions of this outfit would pay you best and which are best for a Theatre the size of yours. Write today for complete terms and information. A Postal will do.

that made the great Indian Passion Play, "Hiawatha." I also made the first negative and the first positive and I have this certified by the owner, Mr. Moore, 1212 Times Building.

The "Junior" is the camera if you want one. I fully guarantee it to you, absolutely professional, light, simple, convenient, never kicks, no loosing loop, no static, no scratches, genuine Zeiss lens, mechanism made of steel aluminum, bronze bearings, stable shutter, 200 feet capacity. Since the patent situation was cleaned up, scores of cream lifters, tree hiders, trade destroyers and nonmechanics went into the manufacture of cameras—Beware of these trade parasites who only want your money, but will never make good.

Write for the "Junior" professional camera and film-making outfit. It's the best on earth.

Hallberg A. C. to D. C. and D. C. Economizer

This is HALLBERG'S A. C. to D. C. ECONOMIZER.

Many of the most prominent theatres in the country have installed the Hallberg, and I have received hundreds of inquiries regarding this much talked of device during the past few weeks. The splendid light and beautiful pictures it helps project either forces competitors out of business or compels them to also install this Hallberg A. C. to D. C. Economizer. After all, the pictures are what you are selling, if you are operating on alternating current and wish to get the best results, I offer you the logical solution of your problem. Write stating your voltage, cycles, phase of your current and length of throw. Will quote price then on outfit to meet your requirements.

WHY

Power's Cameragraph

No. 6A?

BECAUSE

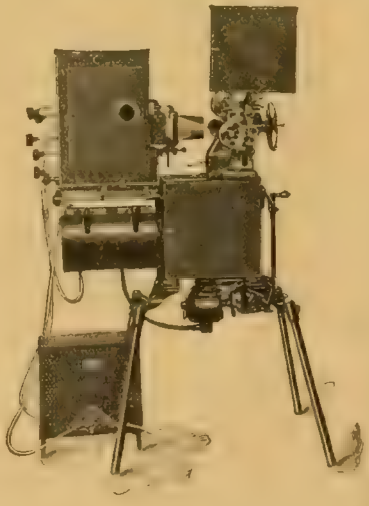
1. The Perfection of its adjustment produces the greatest possible ease of operation—and practically noiseless.
2. All parts are made by THE MAKERS OF THE MACHINE—and bearing their name as guarantee.
3. The entire construction of the machine is supervised by the maker, MR. NICHOLAS POWER.
4. The stand is absolutely rigid, which accomplishes perfect projection.
5. The patented loop setter device resets the lower loop automatically, without stopping the machine—a distinctive feature which puts POWERS in a class by itself
6. Our faith in it enables us to offer the strongest guarantee of any machine on the market.
7. Our intermittent movement is sixteen times stronger, and is faster than that of any other machine. Star and Cam movement no longer used.



These reasons show WHY POWER'S CAMERAGRAPH has had the public confidence for fifteen years, and WHY it does over 65 per cent of the entire moving picture machine business.

"THE RENEGADE'S HEART"

Release Monday, March 31, 1913

A strong Western. A renegade, hunted by posse and saved by a girl, promises to return the kindness. He does so with his life. Photography clear, stereoscopic—acting convincing and interesting. A splendid offering.

"MATCHES"

Release Thursday, April 3, 1913

A screamingly funny farce-drama concerning the unhappy situation of a match-making mother. A genuinely funny picture, featuring Kerrigan and Van Trump. You will like it.

"THE MUTE WITNESS"

Release Saturday, April 5, 1913

A bully Western story, replete with adventure and splendid situations. How a wild game photographer brought a crime to light and saved a woman's honor. 1 and 3 sheets with this subject.

"With Lee in Virginia"

Two Reels, April 4

A Stupendous War Drama Wonderfully Staged
Scenes of Destruction and Conflict
Scenes of Melting Tenderness
Scenes of Heroism and Bravery

Through a cleverly laid plot the sweetheart of the southern girl—a confederate spy—is captured. In wonderful scenes bringing forth emotional acting of the highest type the girl, herself a prisoner, secures his freedom through the noble self-sacrifice of her negro servant who faces the firing squad and meets his death with lips sealed by his devotion to his mistress. The story is brought to a high pitch, coming to a climax in the spectacular and sensational attack by General Lee, who captures the city in a thrilling charge following a cannonading which razes buildings to the ground. The battle in the streets between the burning structures presents amazing pictures, wholly indescribable.

FEATURE FACTS

"It is good," is what we tell you regarding "The Impostor" our latest 3 reel state right feature. If you apply stronger terms of praise you will be saying what we personally think about it.

Every manufacturer in describing his product has worn his vocabulary of superlatives to a frazzle. We took all our "word enthusiasm" and vitalized it into "act enthusiasm"; then crammed it, every bit, into the film. Results? You bet! The shouting has been left for you exchange men and exhibitors to do. Can you shout—on a telegram or a letter head? He who shouts first for this film will be heard first. # UNCOMMON SENSE

That is the trait which is the parent of success. COMMON sense means just what it is—the mediocre logic possessed by the majority of mankind. It's the minority with the UNCOMMON SENSE that builds bridges, discovers, creates and invents. When the man with uncommon sense succeeds, the world calls him "lucky"; but he isn't. He's LUCKY only because he possesses uncommon sense! Common sense tells you that

Dick Whittington and His Cat

Three Reels

This adoption emphasizes all that is poetic, dainty and picturesque in the old English legend. The elaborate settings and spectacular scenes are authoritative in every detail. The charm of Dick's dreamy and mystic character permeates the production and holds the interest while the spectacular and sensational climax of the burning boat and struggling crew adds an element of genuine thrill. The dignity of the performance, combined with its original and artistic light effects, characterizes the work as one of the big achievements of the year and a step further in the progress of the cinematographic art.

Billboard—The production makes an ideal one for exhibition before children, and will prove a winner for matinee performances and in schools and churches, besides being a big drawing card in large theatres.

New York Evening Sun—And as we looked at the massive English masonry used in many of the "sets," the old English kitchen, complete in every detail, the costumes of the actors and actresses, the wonderful light effects that had much to do with the "life" of the picture and the entire excellence of the photography, we realized that here was the work of an artist.

Facts and Comments

MORE than ever before in the history of the motion picture the exhibitor realizes that he must have variety in order to please and hold his patrons. If we had an ideal state of affairs exchange men would co-operate with the exhibitor and aid him in achieving variety. Too many exchange men and manufacturers are inclined to believe that all the variety an exhibitor has a right to expect begins and ends in the exchange or in the studio. Alas, this is not so. The exhibitor is and ought to be the sole judge of what variety means to him and his audience. He should have the utmost liberty of choice. The absolute right of selection is his. If in his judgment he wants to depart from an old routine of programs with a subject that appeals to him he ought to be permitted to dispense for a night or two with his regular service without being compelled to pay for the regular service at the same time.

THE censorship microbe is still running wild. The disease probably will have to run its course and the patients must get worse before they can expect to get better. Notwithstanding the lucid views expressed by such jurists as ex-President Taft and Mayor Gaynor the advocates of censorship show no abatement of their delirium. A typical "censorship bill" has been introduced in the legislature of Iowa, the birth place of much crazy populistic legislation in years gone by. Here is the first sentence in the first section of the proposed draft: "The office of state censor is hereby established." How like the irresponsible fiat laws of old. With all due respect to the mover of this bill we want to tell him that the "office of state censor" is not and cannot be established either in Iowa or in any other American commonwealth because it is contrary to the organic law of the land. As ex-President Taft has pointed out in vetoing the censorship measure proposed for the District of Columbia, the proper method of dealing with objectionable pictures is their prohibition under a penalty "without the requirement of prior investigation and approval by the commissioners before exhibition." The proposed Iowa censorship imposes on the censor the duty of disapproving the film "if in his judgment it shocks the sensibilities of those observing the same."

We are highly gratified to observe that the organized exhibitors of Iowa oppose this censorship bill on the ground that all censorship is contrary to the fundamental law of the state. The secretary of the League has sent out a splendid campaign document in which the veto messages of Mayor Gaynor and ex-President Taft are set forth word for word. The rest is a symposium of praises for the motion pictures from various sources, including ministers, editors and educators of national repute. We do not know what chance there is of this bill becoming a law, but we have no doubt whatever that the first test case under such a law will result in the definition and vindication of the freedom of the screen. The fact that the Iowa bill attempts to extend the censorship to stereopticon slides will make its defeat in the courts all the easier.

THE value of the motion picture as a medium of attracting trade has been recognized by the merchants of Weeping Water, Neb. Weeping Water is typical of thousands of small towns in the midst of large agricultural communities. The farmers of such districts come into town at the end of the week to supply their needs and to be amused. The business men of the Nebraska town have now clubbed together to furnish free amusement for the farmers on Saturday afternoons. Free tickets to the local motion picture theater may be had by any of the farmers for the asking. There is little doubt that other towns will imitate this example, for the motion picture has no more appreciative patron than the farmer, whose chances for legitimate amusement are so few and far between.

THERE is a headline from a newspaper in Massachusetts telling of the fight for a liberal Sunday in Fitchburg: "Fitchburg Ministers Believe Six Days A Week Plenty For Providing Entertainment." Our clerical friends miss one important point in this statement. The motion picture is not an amusement pure and simple. It has a distinct educative value, which is now recognized by educators the world over. The number of films in which the purely educational element predominates is constantly increasing, because the demand for them is growing. Such pictures are eminently fitted for exhibition on Sundays. They reach millions where the sermons reach but thousands. They are more interesting than most sermons and whatever lesson they convey is instilled into the mind by the aid of pleasure to the eye. It is an easy and most effective way of influencing the will. We believe that even the most enthusiastic advocate of the Puritan Sabbath would rather see a man and his family go to a motion picture theater than read the frightful yellow junk that is inflicted on the public by the Sunday variations of sensational journalism.

WE are glad to note that the attempt to amend the New Jersey law governing admission of minors into motion pictures has been defeated. The present law allows the admission of minors into the theater, provided they are accompanied by parent, guardian or "adult friend." The bill in the assembly wanted to strike out the words "or adult friend." THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD is not in favor of the indiscriminate admission of minors under any circumstances, but we can see no reason, why boy or a girl cannot be taken into the motion picture by an adult friend as well as by a guardian. The defeat of the amendment was due to the timely and concerted action of the organized exhibitors.

"Punches and Thrills."

BY W. STEPHEN BUSH

IT is well to take a survey from time to time of the releases of films here and abroad. There is no better way of getting your bearings. It is like watching the pulse of the industry at proper regular intervals. A general review of conditions at this time reveals, we are sorry to say, too many "punches" of the cheap melodramatic order and too many "thrills" of the circus variety. "Punches" and "thrills" will always be with us, but at present they are sadly overworked, much to the detriment of the serious drama and, indeed, in hindrance of all the higher purposes of kinematography. As between the drama and the circus the motion picture too often favors the circus. We are deluged with "ferocious lions," "man-killing tigers," and a lot of other more or less savage beasts fresh from the press agent's menagerie. We are constantly invited to feast on horrors of the most hair-raising variety in which the wild animals play the leading parts. We have no objection whatsoever against the wild animal on the screen; on the contrary we believe in zoology taught by motion pictures. We are even willing to go further and recognize the fact that a piece of realism with living beasts may often form the best part of even a legitimate and serious drama. We do not believe that wild animals were created for having scenarios written around them. The theory of some of our friends in the zoological drama seems to be: "First catch your animal and then get your scenario writer to write a thriller for his benefit." The implication seems to be that it is much easier to get the dramatist than to catch the wild beast. If things progress much further along these lines we will have the scenario writers waiting like a lot of literary longshoremen at the dock whenever a load of wild beasts arrives. We have recently seen posters on which "kings of the jungle" and "Bengal tigers" were preparing to lunch on heroes and heroines. The wording on these posters was scarcely less ferocious than the open gaping jaws of the lion or tiger. "See," we are urged, "how the most vicious of brutes tears the sinews and muscles of the planter's daughter." On another poster we are invited to witness the "struggle between an unarmed man and the wickedest lion in captivity." I understand that we owe a debt to the censorship board for drawing the line on snakes. It has not barred snakes altogether, but no daring feats are permitted and every snake has to be on its good behavior.

The fierce hunt for just "punches and thrills" leads too many directors into melodrama of the slaughterhouse variety. The spectator gets a most unpleasant feeling of being in the midst of a lot of raw and bleeding things. We greatly fear that the increased production and importation of many foreign features is luring the American director from the path of kinematographic righteousness. Europe, which has given us our best features, has likewise given us some of our worst. Of late the excess of the latter over the former has been marked. A veritable avalanche of trash has descended upon us. No attempt is made in these reels to point a moral. Perhaps that alone would not be fatal to the productions. Their fatal defect lies in the facts that give us distorted views of life, favoring to an absurd and sensational degree whatever is morbid and abhorrent in our lives. The sexual problem does not at all lend itself to discussion on the screen. Many of these recent European features depict the sexual problem with a candor and crudeness which are intolerable outside of a clinic or a hospital. The European police are extremely tolerant, not to say lax, in the censoring of morals and the reason for it lies on the surface. The admission of children into the European theater is much better regulated than here. There is a two-fold censorship, one for pictures to be exhibited before children, and another for pictures to be shown before adults. No such distinction is made here. The result is that the picture which cannot be shown to children in the country of its origin may be shown here to children and grown-up people alike. The advertising matter that goes with some of these questionable features, especially the pictorial end of it, is as a rule quite in keeping with the subject and highly objectionable.

Let us not forget that to quite a considerable extent the taste of the public is influenced by the producer of motion pictures. If a taste for an excess of "punches and thrills" is stimulated the grosser appetites in the audience will demand more and more. The producer thus will spoil his own market. He will want to hold his public and a point is soon reached where "punch" and "thrill" will have to be secured at the expense of decency and probability. Nothing is harder to feed than a chronic taste for the morbid. The antics of the yellow newspapers are instances to the point.

The motion picture is a new medium of expression particularly adapted for the drama. Upon the recognition of this fact by the producers will depend the prosperity of the motion picture as a means of amusement. The moment we seek to degrade it into a purveyor of "punches and thrills" we imperil its permanence as a means of amusement. We cannot make the motion picture an heir of the traditions of the dime museum, the skating rink, the shooting gallery and the chamber of horrors without dooming it to defeat. Its existence as a means of education is as certain as the existence of the alphabet. As an educational influence it will endure, no matter what may happen to it in the field of amusement. There are to-day a dozen or more producers in our own country who are headed in the right direction and whose aims in the dramatic field are high. We record our opposition to the cheap "punches and thrills" for their sake as well as for the sake of the entire industry.

An extraordinary scene was enacted the other day in a picture theater at Pontefract, a village in Yorkshire. The attraction was the Kalem picture, "From Manger to Cross," and practically every inhabitant of the little township saw it. On the last night, just before the picture was about to be projected, the vicar of the parish, the Rev. W. Gell, left his seat in the stalls and mounted the elevation in front of the screen. He asked for silence, which was most reverently accorded by the crowded house, and then conducted a short prayer service. The effect on the audience was most profound, for after the exhibition the audience sang most impressively the well known hymn, "Sun of My Soul."

Advertising, Boosting and Criticism

By Louis Reeves Harrison

A NICE Young Man once wrote an article for publication in these columns and protested with all his might against the way advertisers were trying to deceive the Dear Public by praising their own product regardless of its intrinsic merit. In assuming that he knew more than the Dear Public the writer of that article showed that he was a Young Man. The Dear Public is more than seven.

Like many others of that Dear Public, I enjoy reading the advertisements, sometimes more than I do the body of the paper, and I come in contact with producers often enough to realize that most of them take an honest pride in what they are doing. They pay for space in this paper to state what they think of their own work, and the Dear Public is old enough to be aware that such opinion is not wholly without bias. I do not mind the self-assertion exhibited in an advertisement because it is generally honest; it is to be expected, and a man must have faith in himself to accomplish anything worthy of public acclaim.

It is simply in the nature of things for a man who believes in himself and his product to praise it in strong terms wherever he can find an audience and especially in the space he has hired for that express purpose. Far less sincere, and therefore less convincing and of inferior value to all concerned is the flattering boost given to individuals and concerns. It is an obsequious attention at the best and an obvious play upon vanity with a view to gain some individual advantage.

The same Young Man who protested against strenuous advertising previously wrote to the publishers of this paper asking them to send over a reporter and give his concern a "write-up," not exhibiting so much solicitude about the Dear Public where mention of his own firm was in question.

Flattery of any kind can not be regarded as other than fawning and syncophantic by intelligent readers; it is interesting only to booster and boosted, and it is apt to make both objects of derision and destroy faith instead of enlisting it. There is a loss of confidence resulting from its use that heavily overbalances any advantage that may be claimed for it. It is of no service to those who have a right to demand of an authoritative publication careful judgement rather than servile prejudice.

There lies in honest and intelligent criticism an opportunity to create taste for what is best in moving pictures. Reviewing the picture plays has for its prime object the bettering of them, not only for the public and the exhibitor, but for the producers themselves. It should act as a help to judgment for the exhibitor and as a tonic stimulant to the producer, with high consideration for the public and for good taste always in view.

We are all critics, are proverbially generous in giving our opinions on all matters within and without our range of knowledge, but opinions worth printing must have some substantial reason for their publication aside from honesty of motive and a laudable ambition to creditable work. Beyond these considerations is the instinctive and prompt impulse to pronounce correct judgement. This may be the result of training or may spring from an inborn desire and ability to inspire progression and improvement.

Mathew Arnold has very clearly defined the ideal object and purpose of judicial criticism, now becoming a creative art of itself, hence I will take the liberty of quoting what he says of its function. "To know the best that is known and thought in the world, and, by in turn making this known, to create a current of new and fresh ideas." Here is something for those who assail both criticism and critics to think over.

It is not the purpose of criticism to wholly replace or seriously interfere with private conjecture, and when it becomes essential in an art the inquiry naturally rises as to the authority on which decisions are made. Unconsciously or consciously, the intelligent critic is guided by the best that has been done with a conciliatory tendency towards ideals future as well as towards those of the past. Nearly every sincere critic has ideals and convictions that have risen out of the best that has been produced, and I have never met one who has worked long and earnestly at reviewing who did not instinctively sense humankind's deep love of beauty and truth.

This may sound like high praise, but I can go further and state that I never met a critic who was qualified by natural sensibility and reasonable experience who was not broadened by his work until he was more eager to do justice and give encouragement than he was to disparage what was obviously inferior. It must be kept in mind that his training in eliminating the unfit is one of the best in the world for a man aiming at creative work of his own. Nearly all the great playwrights of to-day were critics in other days. They gained information of the drama in giving it.

On account of hasty methods of modern productions, and because an enormous number of amateurs submit scenarios, the selective systems of many studios are so faulty that directors do not always lay hands on the finest plays submitted. They do the best they can with poor raw material, and a vast amount of labor is expended in every department before the filmed story is ready to be thrown on the screen. Very naturally the man who comes in to possibly find fault with it excites a certain amount of sensitive resentment. Why should he be an overlord in an oligarchy of superior taste and good judgment?

The producer may be a big advertiser and regard a boost as what is rightfully coming to him. He may be a beginner in sore need of encouragement. The sincere critic can not give the position of either a moment's consideration. Strength of motive, suitable tension to enslave interest, fidelity of presentation and clearness of communication completely absorb his attention. He is concerned alone in determining if the story is worth telling, if there is anything new to communicate, if the manner of narration on the screen will prove interesting, if there is the same sincerity back of the play that there will be behind what he says of it.

I count it no sin to overlook minor offences—they are almost unavoidable in the haste of preparation—and it is not a bad idea to consider that this art is in process of evolution and therefore go at it with open-mindedness in the hope that there may be good in it that might be overlooked, whereas it requires no great amount of acumen to discover imperfections, but it is hard to excuse what is low in motive and obviously intended to appeal to what is weak or vulgar in human nature. Appreciation is not boosting, and tolerance of what is below present standards is not just criticism, not just to those who are searching for information and placing reliance upon recognized authority, and critics have it thrust upon them daily that talent is as rare as vanity is credulous.

Theatrical Men in Pictures

Strong Producing Organization Formed by Klaw & Erlanger, Al. Woods and Pat Casey—To Build Big Studio.

WHILE the past year has been especially productive of new motion picture manufacturing companies, nothing has been launched, up to the present writing, that is quite as pretentious or that has given such good promise for the performance of its undertakings as the new combination of theatrical men under the title of the Protective Amusement Company, which is now being widely advertised by its promotors. From the first official notices offered by the press department of the new company it was learned that the theatrical firms of Klaw & Erlanger, better known in the theatrical world as the "syndicate," and A. H. Woods, for years the chief producer of melodrama in America, had joined with Pat Casey, the greatest vaudeville agent, and would produce pictures from the several successful plays controlled by them. It was announced that a big studio would be built and that two plays a week would be released beginning September 1, 1913.

Rumor has been connecting K. & E. and other theatrical companies with picture making projects for sometime past, so that part of the notice did not excite much interest. But when the last paragraph announced that Pat Casey would be general manager of the project, the immediate conclusion was that there was really something back of it and a representative of the World proceeded to call on Mr. Casey to get the real news of the proposition. Pat has been flirting with the picture business for some time and, as the result of much questioning and figuring with experts and close observation is the Protective Amusement Company, the initials of which, you will observe, spell P. A. Casey. Having assembled all his facts and organized his company, Mr. Casey has been busy figuring out his business program. When the writer dropped into his office in the Long Acre Building he was hot for an argument.

Mr. Pat Casey.

"To begin with," he said, "I am going to tell you all about this plan of mine because you are in position to know if I am right or wrong, but everything that I tell you is not for publication just yet."

Following that announcement Mr. Casey exhibited one of the most practical and equally simple plans for the manufacture and distribution of motion pictures that we have yet seen. We do not say that others might not have thought of a similar plan before if they had been in touch with the same kind of an organization with which Mr. Casey is allied. More than likely it was Mr. Casey's alliances in the theatrical world that led him to work out his plan and made it possible on the lines he proposes.

"Now," he continued in his forceful, decisive way; "I don't care what anyone else is doing or how much they are making in the picture business. I am not going to try to keep the other fellow's books in this game; my plan is there and it will not make a particle of difference what the present organizations—licensed or independent—are doing or may do. I have an outlet for all the pictures I want to make, good houses to show them in with a good profit to me at a rental that is just half what experienced picture men tell me I ought to get. Can you beat it?"

Dodging one of those lightning glances that frequently shoot from Pat's steel-blue eyes, we were obliged to admit that his argument was the best we had yet seen on paper and that it had a splendid chance of working out in practice. Already land has been purchased in Fort Lee, N. J., for the studio, and plans and specifications for a large structure of the most advanced type are now being worked out by the architects. While this work is going on Mr. T. Hayes Hunter is working out the problems of manufacture. The best talent obtainable for all departments is being engaged. Big things are to be done and the best men are needed to do them right.

"We have no end of material to begin with," declared Mr. Casey. "There is 'The Roundup' and 'Ben Hur'—what splendid spectacular features they will make. Look at this list of Al. Woods' melodramas. All of them big successes in their day and most all of them suitable for motion picture adaptation. We will spare no expense in putting these plays on right and there is good money for the men who can do them right.

"The big plays will give us our features, continued Mr. Casey; "but I understand that we shall need single reel pictures to fill out a program. For them we want good stories from the best writers of scenarios. We will also go into the market for the best European material, so that the houses we serve may have the best pictures obtainable.

"There is one thing about the way pictures are handled that I do not quite understand," Mr. Casey said with a show of impatience. "Selig, for instance, makes a big feature and it appears but one night in any house. That looks like a waste of material to me. I believe that half the earning capacity of such a picture is lost under that plan of distribution. My plan calls for two features a week, and I believe that it will prove to be right if given a real trial. We are going to give it that trial.

"An extensive advertising campaign will commence right away. We propose to let every theater manager know what we are going to do and give the best houses a chance to come in with us. I believe that list of plays I showed you will have some drawing power and that the alliance we have with such men as Mr. Klaw, Mr. Erlanger and Mr. Woods will be a satisfactory guarantee that we will deliver the goods. There is little more to be said now. Watch developments and drop in to see us once in a while."

With that we said good morning to the dynamic Mr. Casey. It was well that we did, for he had given us more than an hour and the assemblage of vaudeville artists waiting in the corridors to see him had assumed alarming proportions.

PICTURES IN PANAMA.

On March 1st occurred the opening of the new $150,000 "Variedades Theater" as a motion picture and refined vaudeville house. No expense has been spared to make the undertaking a decided success by the management, which is composed of old theatrical men from the States. A strong American dramatic company opened the same night, at the "Theatro National"; but, notwithstanding that fact, the "Variedades" were compelled to run three shows during the evening, instead of two as was intended, and even then they were unable to accommodate the large audiences which assembled.

The management was fortunate enough to secure the services of Mr. Wells Hall, the oldest and best known motion picture man on the Isthmus, whose splendid work in building up the moving picture business there has easily made him the leader in that line. Mr. Hall has the complete charge of the motion picture end of the theater, and has just returned from the States, after closing contracts for first-run films and feature reels. The opening of this, the fifth and largest motion picture theater in Panama, put this city among the leaders of Central America.

Independent Exchange Pool

Independent Exchange Company Opens Purchasing Office Under Management of P. A. Powers.

By Hugh Hoffman.

"YOU can't keep a squirrel on the ground." It seems that every St. Patrick's Day finds Pat Powers at the top of the heap. No matter how many bumps he may have received during the year, the music and the marching on the 17th of March seem to fit in with his general frame of mind at that particular time.

His latest coup d'etat is an alliance with the Independent Exchange Company, which once more makes Mr. Powers an important factor on the Independent side of the business. The Independent Exchange Company is the formation of thirty-two buying exchanges in various parts of the country which intend to pool their combined purchasing power for the purpose of obtaining the quality of pictures which they choose to buy. Mr. Patrick A. Powers, until recently identified with the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, from which he retired and was considered by some to be safely laid away on the shelf, so far as the film business is concerned, has been appointed purchasing agent for this combination.

To get the real essence and flavor of this latest move of Mr. Powers, one should know the past history of the business, or at least some of the principal facts touching on and appertaining to. A few years back when the Independent manufacturers were floundering about in the midst of unsatisfactory market conditions, Powers was just breaking into the manufacturing business. He had previously been an exchange owner and knew that line thoroughly. He retained his exchanges and was in the manufacture of pictures when the Motion Picture Distributing & Sales Company was formed. The Sales Company was the formation of two contending factions, with Powers as the deciding unit. It is probable that Pat's antecedents resided in the Emerald Isle near the City of Cork, because he has all the characteristics of a cork; that is to say, he always comes to the top, no matter how deep they try to sink him.

The Sales Company was cleft in twain. Cleft in twain is correct. Parted in the middle, as it were. Everybody wanted to be a captain and no one wanted to be a private. There were one or two who aspired to be generals and Pat was one of them. The effect was like a wedge; something like a log jam, and when it busted the fragments flew in both directions. The fragments came together again, like a stop motion trick picture, in two halves on either side of an impassable gulf. One half became known as the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, and the other as the Film Supply Company. On the other side of the gulf, Patrick Aloysius Powers was to be seen against the horizon mounted upon his war horse as general of the Universal Film Company's army. Riding immediately behind him was Carl Laemmle as first assistant general. It appears from later developments that Laemmle also had aspirations to be a general and could never be content as first assistant to Pat Powers or anybody else. Therefore, there were two generals in that army; one who admitted it and the other who had mental reservations. At last there was mutiny among the rank and file composed of captains and then they decided that they did not want Pat for a general any more and would rather have Carl. So Pat was unhorsed and red-lighted and left stranded behind—a general without an army alone in the cruil world. He sold his war horse and his armor to the Universal Company and retired to private life about a month ago.

Those in the film business who know Patrick Aloysius Powers fairly well have been expecting something to happen every day. They did not have to wait long, for in the silent watches of the night, the self-rising son of Erin went forth into the wilderness and raised an army. He knew that the props of the film manufacturing industry are the exchanges. He also knew the exchange business fair to middling. With this knowledge and those facts he marshaled around his banner thirty-two exchanges who at his word promptly canceled the Universal output and signed a declaration of independence. At the head of this army your Uncle Pat rode across the Hudson River drawbridge, with a flag of truce in one hand and on olive branch in the other.

Quoth he to the watchman at the gate, "I come not to cut up any didoes in the film game; our errand is an errand of peace. This is the army of quality—we demand it as our right and we are going to get it. As exchange men we have declared an emancipation proclamation from the state of mediocrity. For many a year we have been obliged to buy in a closed market, films of every description, regardless of their merit. But no more. Instead of weapons we have sacks of gold. We are going to spend this gold for good films only. We have no axe to grind, and we are going to buy good films from any who are willing to sell to us, provided they have something good to sell. We make no distinction between individual manufacturers or trade factions. Each will have a chance. The striving producer with talent, and the moneyed producer with facilities will be given equal consideration. All we ask is a peek at the goods instead of buying them in a sealed can as we have done so long. Each week we will spend 55,000 iron rubles in the purchase of films. These films will be personally selected by five members of our worthy band.

The general having so declared himself, the gate keeper bowed low while Aloysius slapped his horse on the flank with a sap of solid gold and the army marched to the citadel of the city where he made the same speech all over again.

All during this time there were mounted A. D. T. messengers with long flowing whiskers bolting like centaurs with great haste from the stronghold of the Universal army, bearing urgent messages somewhere into the woods beyond.

"Where are we going to sleep tonight?" roared Patrick Aloysius. "Are there none who will welcome us to their fireside?"

A pause ensued and then old Harry Raver stepped forward from the multitude and spake as follows:

"Hon. St. Patrick, I have an abode, although it is but a humble place, and I bid you and your soldiers welcome to our city and our fireside—at the Film Supply Company offices at 33 West 44th Street."

Quoth Pat, "Just for that I will make you a Knight of the B. V. D.'s. Rise up, Sir Harry Raver, and we will follow."

Thus did the army of peace invade Manhattan and march to the Film Supply Company's barracks where Pat called the roll as follows:

ROCHESTER EXHIBITORS' BALL.

The first annual entertainment and ball of the Motion Picture Exhibitors of Rochester will be given at the Convention Hall, Thursday evening, April 3, 1913. A number of photoplayers representing both the independent and licensed companies will be present and a prominent member of each will lead the grand march.

In addition talent from local theaters will be there to display their abilities and quite a number of civic and political bodies have promised to grace this occasion with their presence. Moll's augmented orchestra will furnish the music for this occasion and we feel assured that this will be one of the greatest social affairs Rochester ever had.

SIMON OPENS OFFICE.

Walter C. Simon, the well-known writer of special motion picture music and expert of "playing the pictures," announces that he has opened an office at Room 612, 1482 Broadway, New York City, and that he will make a specialty of preparing music for feature productions. Mr. Simon has probably written more special picture music than any other composer, and his long experience in "playing the pictures" eminently fits him for this work.

"The Spy's Defeat" (Essanay)

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

THE Essanay Film Manufacturing Company will offer for release, on March 31, a meritorious photodrama in two reels, entitled "A Spy's Defeat." The production was made under the direction of Harry McRae Webster, the characters being sustained by members of the Eastern stock company.

The scenes are laid in Germany and Russia, the chief interest being centered on incidents that take place in the official residence of the German Minister of War. The story is well told and leads up dramatically to the climax near the close of the second reel. It is possible that the production might have been still further strengthened by a stronger subclimax at the close of the first reel. The interior view showing the embassy ball, in the Minister of War's residence, is imposing and worthy of the occasion, the handsome uniforms of the men and the elegant evening attire of the ladies forming an attractive and kaleidoscopic series of pictures.

The leading characters have been admirably impersonated. Francis X. Bushman as Lieutenant Paul Heinrich, secretary to the Minister of War, has the most appealing role and is at all times equal to its demands; and Frank Dayton as Count Plentoff, the spy, gives an unusually fine characterization. Olga, the accomplice of the spy, is excellently acted by Miss L. Drew. Von Metzing, the Minister of War, is strongly drawn by Wm. Walters, whose rugged physique and features harmonize well with the part. Miss Ruth Stonehouse, as Fredericka, daughter of the Minister of War, is always interesting. Her acting, while showing Fredericka under the hypnotic spell, is realistic.

There are several oversights of minor importance in the production that tend to weaken the scenes in which they occur. One that is very palpable takes place when the Minister of War is showing important fortification plans in his private office to Lieutenant Paul Heinrich. The spy is shown opening the door of the room, fully one-half of its sweep, in the line of vision of the minister, and then closing it without being observed. Another takes place in the roadhouse, across the Russian border, when Lieutenant Heinrich binds the spy by merely tying his hands behind his back. He may have bound them to the back of the chair also; but everyone knows that the chair is not fastened to the floor, so that the spy could easily have arisen and given the alarm to his henchman, after his foe had left the room. These are small things, but they jar and are especially noticeable in a fine film like "The Spy's Defeat."

Paul Heinrich, a dashing young lieutenant and secretary to the German Minister of War, is in love with Fredericka, daughter of the latter. She dashes his hopes by reminding him that he is of inferior rank and station to aspire to her hand, and informs him that he must win his way to the top before their marriage can take place. This scene takes place during the embassy ball and the lovers are overheard by Count Plentoff, a Russian spy, and his accomplice, Olga.

Count Plentoff and Olga have attended the ball for the purpose of securing important plans of a certain German fortification, which the German Minister has secreted in his office. The spy possesses strong hypnotic power, and it immediately flashes on his mind that he must hypnotize Fredericka and suggest that she shall bring to him the drawings.

The Minister of War and his secretary had been studying these plans on the night of the ball, and they had restored them to their hiding place only a short time when Fredericka entered the room. Lieutenant Heinrich was alone, the Minister of War having departed. To his great surprise, she went directly to the secret drawer and abstracted the papers, without speaking a word to him. Amazed and greatly troubled, he followed her, and discovered that she handed the papers to the spy. Paul threw himself on the Russian to recover the papers, and was on the point of succeeding when he was tripped up by Olga. Before he could regain his feet the couple had fled.

Fredericka had fainted when Paul came on the scene, and he now engaged in restoring her to consciousness. On recovering she drew his attention to a wallet that had been dropped by the spy during the struggle. In it he found two notes which read as follows: "Use your hypnotic influence and get papers from Minister of War." "If successful, meet me to-night, Orloff's roadhouse across border." Both notes were signed by Petrovsky, War Department, Russia.

Paul enjoined secrecy on Fredericka and set out to recover the papers, single handed. This he accomplished after a terrific struggle with General Petrovsky, and afterwards by cowing Count Plentoff, the spy.

In the meantime, the German Minister of War had discovered the loss of the plans, and was bordering on despair when Paul entered the room. The latter presented him with the precious papers and explained their disappearance. The Minister, overjoyed, and delighted at Paul's bravery, pinned two high decorations on his breast. Just as this had been done, Fredericka entered the room and the lovers embraced, while the grim Minister of War looked on with a smile.

"The Clown's Revenge"

Two-Reel Great Northern Thriller.

Reviewed By Louis Reeves Harrison.

ASIDE from beautiful photography, which is a source of perpetual delight in Great Northern films, high interest in this photoplay will be less attracted to its sensational features than to the series of circus scenes about which it has been constructed. These are of top notch quality. Those acts of daring which send cold shivers down our backs at the regular circus lose power to excite us when thrown on the screen, but the old enchantment of the sawdust ring is put to clever use in this photodrama. Its unreal semblance is cleverly contrasted with what is actually going on behind the scenes.

The moment we are transported from the arena to the unvarnished verities of professional life, a curiosity that has lingered long in most of us is gratified. The treatment of characters, scenes and events in the performer's tent is either in accordance to actual truth or to intrinsic probability, without attempt of selection of what is beautiful over what is not—pure realism. We are even permitted a glimpse of the dressing rooms during action, and we are carried to the top of the tent to witness the start of a perilous descent on the bicycle from that point. The mysteries of the circus performance are laid bare.

Scene from "The Clown's Revenge" (Great Northern).

Plots of stories built around mechanical accessories of this kind are usually wrenched out of all veracity in the attempt made to localize them, and what Mathew Arnold calls the "incurable falsity" of plot in this photoplay mars what might easily have been made a story of absorbing interest and affecting end. The motive of vengeance is so outworn in drama of all kinds that it should be handled with great care and skill to impress the average audience of today.

The vindictive clown in this case is in love with Baptiste, wife of Marzoni, a trick cyclist. The clown's sense of injury is purely vindictive because the bicycle performer has done him no direct harm. Marzoni's wife is an accomplished equestrienne and plays her part in the entertainment alone. He has a professional partner in his act, an attractive girl named Coralie, and the ardent nature of her affections leads to complications. Baptiste falls from her horse in the ring and is so badly injured that she is forced to remain behind for treatment while her husband moves on with the company to an adjoining town.

The parting between man and wife, quite as well as his treatment of her on other occasions, indicates that she has his purest devotion, but he is only a man, just a plain ordinary man, with love of variety and instincts predatory, so he becomes quickly fascinated by pretty Coralie, the girl he carries astride his shoulders in his dash on the wheel from the top of the tent down a steep incline, with a perilous leap through the air, to the arena. Soon after the show passes on to the next town, leaving Baptiste behind, and Marzoni and Coralie begin to slide down another incline that sometimes has a perilous leap at the end.

The clown, possessed by an imaginary sense of injury, plays the spy and writes to Baptiste that her husband is unfaithful. This cruel act causes her to summon her husband by an urgent telegram. He responds and apparently reassures her, but she resolves to follow him in spite of the injury she received. Leaning on a cane, she appears among a group of waiting performers gathered at their entrance to the main tent. She has satisfied herself by personal investigation that Marzoni has become infatuated with Coralie and takes a stand where she can observe them closely while they do their sensational act before a large audience.

Far above, Marzoni and Coralie are making ready for their whirl to the ground—we are given a view of their anxious faces in small scope with the crowded arena in oblique view. Baptiste stands below with her eyes fixed on the lofty platform. The effect of her unexpected presence there would be that of destroying the rider's nerve, but he is unaware that she is present. Down he comes, Coralie on his shoulders, and we see them leap into space. The bicycle swerves at a critical moment, and the riders are dashed to their death. Such is the tragic end. Baptiste, perhaps the unconscious instrument of the clown's vengance, rushes to where her husband and Coralie lie united in death and sinks down upon his body. The clown stands unmoved and satisfied. The end, however, is not justified because the story is too commonplace. Only great themes should have tragic ends.

THEY'RE "IN!"

This week witnessed the moving of the Thanhouser Eastern forces into their new temporary studio at Main Street and Echo Avenue, New Rochelle. The Eastern forces comprise the majority of Thanhouser workers, since Los Angeles is a producing center only and very few factory people are employed there. The temporary New Rochelle buildings are fireproof, as the World has stated before, and even the inner rooms are walled in concrete. In addition to the four large stages under the all-glass roof, there are two open-air stages, which will be used in summer.

PETER LANG.

Peter Lang is the Dr. Pickwick of the Lubin Stock Co., easily recognized in the photoplays as the well fed Burgomaster Friar Tuck, or Foxy Grandpa. Mr. Lang is a Bostonian and for some years was a valuable member of the famous "Bostonians" also with many of the Liebler Co., and Frohman organizations. He is now in the prime of his life and career, and well satisfied to earn the laurels offered by the devotees of the silent drama.

Without a License?

Proctor Theater Licenses Revoked, But Licensed Service Continued by General Film Co.

MOTION picture theater managers throughout the country will be interested to learn that the edict of the Patents Company revoking its license to the Proctor theaters in New York, because they insisted in running Kinemacolor pictures, has been apparently disregarded.

When the Proctor theaters announced that Kinemacolor pictures would be installed, licensed pictures were being supplied them by the General Film Company. Upon the installation of Kinemacolor pictures the usual notice of cancellation was sent to the Proctor management by the Motion Picture Patents Company, and the licensed service was discontinued upon the refusal of the Proctor concern to comply with the demand of the Patents Company.

Under these circumstances there was nothing for the Proctor management to do but to put in independent service, which it did forthwith, and continued to run independent pictures for at least a week. According to the Proctor people, they were very well satisfied with the service they got from the independents and gave no thought to returning to licensed pictures, when they were solicited by the General Film Company to restore the old service. This they did upon being advised that the change would in no way affect their arrangements with the Kinemacolor. Consequently, the patrons of the Proctor houses in New York have the pleasure of viewing Kinemacolor and licensed pictures at one and the same time.

When the matter was called to the attention of the General Film Company it was admitted that licensed service had been restored to the Proctor theaters and, so far as was known at the time of inquiry, it would be continued indefinitely.

The Proctor management, upon inquiry, confirmed the facts as stated above and assured the Moving Picture World that licensed pictures and Kinemacolor were running simultaneously in all its houses.

Inquiry was also made of one of the licensed manufacturers if, under the circumstances as related, the licensed manufacturers would continue to sell pictures to the General Film Company.

"Sure thing," was the reply; "we see no reason why we should be made the goat in the face of the government litigation that is now on. Our business is making pictures."

"Then in all probability the General Film Company will continue to serve the Proctor Company regardless of the cancellation of licenses by the Patents Company?" was asked.

"In all probability the service will continue," declared the licensed manufacturer.

Inquiry at the office of the Patents Company failed to elicit even a modicum of information on the subject. In fact, it was declared that nothing was known about the matter at the offices of that company.

THE GERMAN KAISER IN THE FILMS.

A most interesting feature, the shortest on record, but among the biggest in the size and character of the subject filmed, is offered to state right buyers by The True Feature Company, which has acquired the exclusive American rights for the film known as "The German Kaiser in the Films." These motion pictures are the only ones officially authorized by the German Emperor and were exhibited to him in private on the occasion of a recent wedding in the imperial family. The Emperor was delighted with the pictures and through an order from the imperial chancellory the public exhibition of these pictures was permitted within the limits of the German Empire. By special arrangement The True Feature Company has obtained the exclusive rights of exhibition in the United States. These unique motion pictures show more vividly than any book or printed picture the interesting personality and the busy life of the most widely advertised ruler of his time. The Kaiser is frequently seen at very close range and in many characteristic poses, sometimes amid scenes of military splendor and sometimes in the intimacy of his household with the Empress and the Crown Prince. The feature had its first representation in this country in the City Square Theater in Atlantic City, one of the largest and most successful picture houses in the East. Manager O'Keefe had advertised the film widely and showed it last Sunday to four crowded houses. He immediately booked it for a return engagement next week. These pictures make up the first series of the crowned heads of Europe in films. There is a good lobby display and convincing literature is also provided. For territory and further information address The True Feature Company, Box 219, Madison Sq. Station, New York City.

Talking Picture Devices

Several Concerns Claim Priority, But Edison's Kinetophone Seems to Have Created Greatest Interest.

In answer to many inquiries regarding the so-called "talking pictures" and to note the several claims of priority in that particular field, the Moving Picture World offers the following information:

Cameraphone.—This was the first device offered to picture theaters in America, for which it was claimed that the picture and the voice could be reproduced simultaneously. J. H. Whitman was the promoter and owner of the patents covering the synchronizing mechanism. The Cameraphone Company operated a large studio and factory at Eleventh Avenue and 43rd Street, New York, for some time, but eventually failed for lack of interest on the part of the public.

Gaumont Chronophone.—This device for the production of "talking pictures" was perfected by the Gaumont Company, of Paris, and was first shown at the St. Louis World's Fair. It was not until 1908 that the device was offered for sale in America, during which year Mr. Herbert Blache opened offices on East 25th Street, New York. The Chronophone was, to all appearances, successful in meeting all claims of the inventors, but it did not meet with favor here, so its promotion was discontinued for the time. We are informed that it is in successful operation in Paris and that the Gaumont Company is preparing again to urge its use in America.

Cort-Kitsee Device.—This is a synchronizing device invented by Dr. Kitsee, of Philadelphia, Pa., and is being promoted by Mr. John Cort, a New York theatrical man. Up to the present writing no attempt has been made to offer the Kitsee device to the public, but private demonstrations have been given that are said to have proved the practicability of the mechanism.

Synchrophone and Cinematophone.—A new device being promoted by the Synchrophone Motion Picture Company of New York. This device may be seen at Sherwood's picture theater on Fulton Street, New York, between Broadway and Nassau Street. Many advantages are claimed for this mechanism, but there has been no effort made to place it generally.

Kinetophone.—This is the Edison device now being operated in a number of the larger cities in connection with vaudeville theaters. It is being handled by the American Talking Picture Company. Whatever may be said by rivals regarding the merit of the Kinetophone and the work of Mr. Thomas A. Edison in bringing it up to its present state of perfection, it must be admitted that it has been instrumental in gaining recognition for the "talking picture." If not the first in the field, it is the first to gain any considerable recognition in America.

DINNER TO GLENWOOD WHITE.

Glenwood White, leading man of the Universal-Gem company, was the guest of honor at a beefsteak dinner given by his associates at the Champion studio, Coytesville, N. J., on the evening of Saturday, March 15. It was a farewell tribute to Mr. White, who sailed Tuesday, March 18, for London to enter upon a vaudeville engagement of eight months duration in England and the Continent.

The Champion studio was decorated for the occasion and some sixty players and friends of Mr. White assembled to do him honor. Music was provided by the Coytesville orchestra and Pete Burns, constable of the village, was the caterer.

As master of ceremonies Billy Quirk presented Mr. White a beautiful silver mounted walking stick and a handsome gold scarf pin, tokens of good will from his friends.

Among those present were Mr. and Mrs. Tom Evans, Mr. and Mrs. Billy Quirk, Mr. and Mrs. F. E. Farnsworth and Miss Farnsworth, Mr. and Mrs. E. M. Saunders, Mr. and Mrs. A. Leach, Mr. and Mrs. H. P. Phillips, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Counderman, Mr. and Mrs. Ackerson, Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Hoff, Mr. Arthur Kerwein, Mayor of Fort Lee; H. P. Caufield, Francis Powers, Charles Craig, Jack Burns, Joe Fitzhenry, Harry Neilson, E. A. Knight, P. Ritter, George G. Greuiler, J. E. Seittle, J. P. Roddie, Austin Walsh, E. H. Murphy, P. Griffin, Kid Hogan, Archie MacArthur, of the Moving Picture World, R. H. Lembreck, H. Kohler, Miss Grace Nelson, Miss Billie Baer, Miss Bessie Chanklin, Miss Aamold, Mrs. Robert Moore and Mrs. B. Summerville.

After the dinner, of which juicy slices of beefsteak formed the principal part of the bill, there was a brief program of entertainment consisting of pictures, music and a few sketches. Miss Mary Bair, a former member of Brady's "Way Down East" company, sang several selections and Austin Walsh gave a comedy musical sketch. Dancing followed until an early hour in the morning.

"MATCHES" (American).

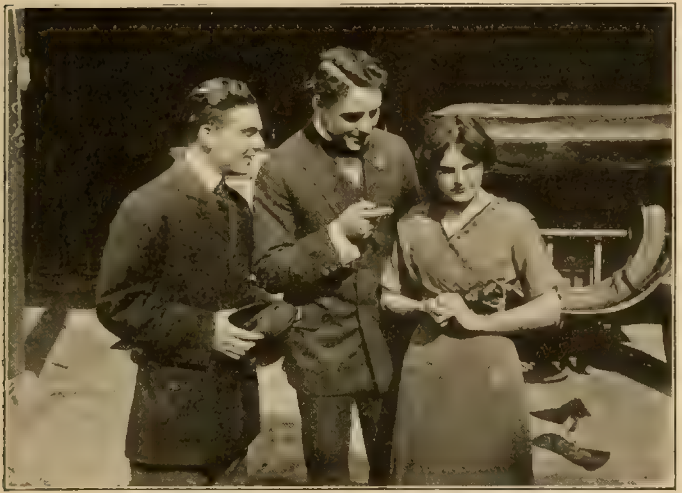
Under the odd title of "Matches," suggesting illumination or matrimony, the American Film Manufacturing Company has just made a splendid little love story amid some of the prettiest scenes in all California.

Jack Kerrigan, as a rare matrimonial catch, arrives at the rich widow's mansion in a snappy roadster, with an English chauffeur driving. He is introduced to Jessalyn Van Trump as his logical choice, but with the perverseness that ever characterizes cupid, promptly falls in love with Miss Oldrock, daughter of a wealthy widower who is pledged to remain single until his daughter marries. Now Miss Van Trump, as the chosen one for Jack, falls in love with her own chauffeur, a horrible situation truly, but wonderfully relieved by the discovery of Jack's English chauffeur that the family driver is the scion of English aristocracy—a condition most appealing to Louise Lester, who plays the mother of Miss Van Trump. Thus the chauffeur and Miss Van Trump are united and fail to tell mama until the happy event is consummated. Needless to add, mama is delighted to find that her chauffeur is an English nobleman. This makes it easy for Jack in his suit for Miss Oldrock. Oldrock, who has been paying hopeless attentions to the mother of Miss Van Trump, is thus rendered happy by having his daughter marry Jack, thereby absolving him from his promise not to marry until the daughter marries.



Scene from "Matches" (American).

From these situations arises much good-natured fun and pleasant intrigue. The entire reel is one long series of love complications. The settings used are the pick of California's most beautiful winter homes. The garden scenes are particularly beautiful and the photography is clear throughout.

X-RAY, MICRO-KINEMATOGRAPHY.

The latest development in scientific picture taking is in the combined uses of the X-Ray machine, the microscope and the camera. By the aid of this "triple alliance" new and most wonderful possibilities present themselves which will be more immediately useful to the medical profession. Many other fields of research will gladly avail themselves of the great opening now made for elaborate detail, and it will not be long before subjects of common interest will be at the service of many educational leaders who, with such a vast amount of hitherto hidden detail at their command, will be able to largely increase their pedagogical efforts. The writer has recently seen the first of a series of pictures taken by this new combination and hopes in the next issue to be able to make his readers familiar with them.

SEVERAL VITAGRAPH ARTISTS CLOSE.

On Saturday, March 15, Mr. Lawrence Trimble, director; Mr. Tom Powers, leading man, and Mr. James Morrison, juvenile, tendered their resignations to the Vitagraph Company. Jean, the Vitagraph dog, will probably decide to go with her master, Mr. Trimble. There is a general impression that this trio of gentlemen will be associated with Miss Florence Turner in the making of her feature productions in England this coming spring and summer.

"THE ANGEL OF MERCY" (Gaumont).

A Red Cross nurse with all the heroism and romance attached to the profession which Florence Nightingale and Clara Barton have so well advanced, is the central figure in this drama. That the actress has personal heroism and daring as well as the professional heroism of an Angel of Mercy, as the Red Cross nurses are called, is evidenced in a dramatic scene. In this scene the Red Cross nurse, after having seen two spies overpower a courier of the French army, steal his despatches and then hurl him into the tunnel, crawls along the precarious foot-board, such as characterizes foreign railway trains, to obtain safety in another compartment from the spies who had detected her in her eavesdropping. The road-bed is none too good and the train is rocking violently. She took big hazards.

Scene from "The Angel of Mercy" (Gaumont).

Of interest is the scene where the nurse and officers of the French government race with a train to reach a station where the conspirators, after having disposed of the station-master, are about to pull a switch, which would derail the train carrying supplies to the French army.

There are the usual words of praise for the photography.

CARNEGIE LYCEUM.

Natural color motion photographs in the Kinemacolor process of the scenes of the inauguration of President Wilson have been added to the program at Carnegie Lyceum, where "The Making of the Panama Canal" and "Actual Scenes of the Balkan War" have been viewed by large and enthusiastic audiences for some weeks. Among these scenes which are of interest to every American are the Chief Justice of the United States Supreme Court administering the oath to the President, the inaugural address, President Wilson being congratulated by ex-President Taft, the state carriage bearing President Wilson and ex-President Taft back to the White House, the great military review, and the suffragette parade of the day before.

KINEMACOLOR NOTES.

C. S. McCullum, who has spent six years in the negineering department of the Panama Canal, has been engaged by the Kinemacolor Company as a speaker to accompany one of the road shows of "The Making of the Panama Canal" and "Actual Scenes of the Balkan War" which Kinemacolor is putting out. Mr. McCullum opened with the show now playing Boston at the Tremont Temple on Monday evening, March 17, and after spending three days with that show went to Cincinnati, to open the show, which begins a five weeks' engagement at the Olympic Theater on March 23.

Emil Ankermiller has been engaged by the Kinemacolor Company to act as business manager for the road show of "The Making of the Panama Canal" and "Actual Scenes of the Balkan War" at the Olympic Theater, Cincinnati. Mr. Ankermiller has been in the management end of the show business for many years and is one of the best known business managers and advance agents in America. He was for years with Eddie Foy and has been in control of the business affairs of other well-known stars.

Motion Picture Exhibitors' League

MORE CENSORSHIP MADNESS.

President George H. Wiley of the Missouri Exhibitors League, reports a serious state of affairs in Kansas on the censorship question. In the legislature of that state a bill providing for the censoring of pictures by the state superintendent of public instruction was introduced by Senator Stavely. According to Mr. Wiley, who writes under date of March 10, the bill has passed both houses of the legislature and is looked upon with favor by the governor.

It was argued in favor of the measure by the Ways and Means Committee that about 1,000 reels of pictures were run every day in Kansas and that, at the proposed rate for censorship—$2.00 per reel—a revenue of $2,000 per day would accrue to the state.

The measure was fought stubbornly by the Kansas exhibitors, but without avail. It is estimated that fully 50% of the picture theaters of the state will be put out of business if the bill becomes a law.

To show to what lengths the advocates of censorship are going the text of the Kansas bill is printed here in full:

SENATE BILL No. 367. By SENATOR STAVELY.

AN ACT

Regulating the exhibiting or using of moving pictures and stereopticon views; providing and regulating the examination and approval of moving-picture films or reels and stereopticon views, and fixing penalties for the violation of this act.

Be it enacted by the Legislature of the State of Kansas:

SECTION 1. That on and after July 1, 1913, it shall be unlawful for any person, firm or corporation to exhibit or use any moving-picture film or reel unless the said film, reel or view shall have been examined and approved by the State superintendent of public instruction, as hereinafter provided for.

SECTION 2. In addition to the duties now imposed upon the State superintendent of public instruction it shall be his duty to examine all moving-picture films or reels intended for exhibition in the State, and approve such as he shall find to be moral and instructive, and to withhold his approval from such as tend to debase or corrupt the morals. Upon such moving-picture films or reels examined by him and which shall be approved by him there shall be stamped or written a certificate, signed by him, showing that such picture or view has been examined and approved by him, giving the date of such approval.

SECTION 3. The said superintendent of public instruction shall keep an accurate record of all examinations made by him and date thereof, and by whom presented for examination, and noting such pictures or views as shall be approved and such as shall not have been approved, and briefly stating his reasons for withholding his approval of such as are not approved.

SECTION 4. For each examination made by said officer he shall receive the sum of two dollars for each moving-picture film or reel. No picture or view shall be examined until such fee shall have been paid to him, and one-half of such fee he shall retain for his services in making such examination and the other half of said sum shall be paid by him on the last day of each quarter to the State treasurer, and by said treasurer credited to the general revenue fund.

SECTION 5. The said State superintendent of public instruction shall have general power and authority to supervise and regulate the display of all moving-picture films or reels in all places of amusement or elsewhere within this State. Said power and authority shall include the power to inquire into and investigate, and to have displayed for his benefit, to aid him in his investigation, the moving-picture films or reels which are intended to be displayed, and said State superintendent of public instruction shall approve such moving-picture films or reels as shall be moral or proper, and disapprove such moving-picture films or reels as are sacrilegious, obscene, indecent or immoral, or such as tend to corrupt the morals.

SECTION 6. It shall be the duty of every person, firm or corporation intending to sell, rent or exhibit any moving-picture film or reel within this State, to furnish to the said State superintendent of public instruction, as he may require, a description of said moving-picture film or reel, describing the scenes and purposes of any film, reel, and to exhibit and display for his examination and approval or disapproval any such film, reel or view.

SECTION 7. Any person, firm or corporation exhibiting or permitting to be exhibited any unapproved moving-picture film or reel shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be fined not less than twenty-five dollars nor more than one hundred dollars for the first offense and not less than one hundred dollars for each subsequent offense. Each unapproved moving-picture film or reel exhibited, and each day the same shall be exhibited, shall constitute a separate offense.

SECTION 8. All laws or parts of laws so far as they conflict herewith are hereby repealed.

SECTION 9. This act shall take effect on and after the first day of July, 1913, and its publication in the Session Laws of 1913.

MR. PRESIDENT: Your Committee on Education and Educational Institutions, to whom was referred Senate Bill No. 367, have had the same under consideration, and instruct me to report the bill back to the Senate with the recommendation that it be passed. A. B. CARNEY, Chairman.

SECRETARY CHRISTENSON RETRACTS.

In a recent issue of the Moving Picture World there appeared a letter from Secretary Christenson of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America, in which he denounced the proposed Ohio censorship law in unmeasured terms and recommended its defeat. Since that writing Secretary Christenson has changed his mind, offering his reasons for the change in the following communication:

Cleveland, O., March 4, 1913.

Editor The Moving Picture World,
New York City.

Dear Sir:—I desire to comment on the Ohio State Censor Board Bill, following my previous letter in your journal.

On February 26th we had a conference of prominent exhibitors of this State at Columbus, and this matter was thoroughly discussed pro and con. The bill, as proposed, was taken up in detail and several important changes were made, especially that of charging a dollar on old reels, this being reduced to 25 cents per reel. Other changes were also made in the bill.

The motive for presenting this bill in this State was made more clear to my mind, and, after listening to the arguments of exhibitors from Cincinnati, Columbus, Toledo and other points, wherein they stated that their municipalities have been asked to hold in abeyance proposed city ordinances for local censor boards and, after taking into consideration that Ohio has recently gained the privilege of coming under "home rule" (giving all municipalities the right to enact their own laws governing their own cities), I have come to the conclusion that, if we can get a censor board that will have jurisdiction over the entire State, doing away with petty boards such as are proposed in many towns, it would be the better plan. In this way, the enactment of this Censor Board Bill will supersede the enactment of home rule and so it will be impossible for the municipalities to create any other censor boards in their home towns.

Further, inasmuch as no lawyers were able to devise means whereby the present National Censor Board could become legalized in this State, my contention was a hopeless one, and I now feel that this Censor Board Bill, as approved, is the best way out of the difficulties which beset us.

I also wish to call the attention of the other States to the fact that I am advised the U. S. Government would be unable to enact a law creating a National Censor Board that would be legal in the States outside of the District of Columbia! I am further advised that the present National Censor Board has no legal standing even in its own State, that of New York, being simply a self-constituted board of censors.

This proposed Ohio Censor Board Bill has a provision in it for a National Congress of Censors, and if this bill becomes a law in Ohio, and the other States should legalize this Ohio Censor Board in their own States, it can in this way become a legal National Censor Board, with headquarters for such a Board at such a place as may be selected. Such a Congress would minimize the expense to manufacturers and the film business in general.

So, if there are any proposed State or city Censor Boards in other States, I would advise the members of our League to try to hold such proposed measures in abeyance until we have passed an Ohio law creating this Censor Board. In this way only can we secure harmony of interests and really benefit all concerned.

The bill has been gotten up with the desire to be of benefit to the exhibitors and the entire industry and my earnest hope is that the Governor will appoint to this board substantial business men who are familiar with the film business and therefore capable of censoring films when this bill becomes a law.

Yours truly,
C. M. CHRISTENSON.
National Secretary of The Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America.

FIGHTING CENSORSHIP IN IOWA.

F. W. Young, Secretary of the Iowa Exhibitors League, writes that the exhibitors of that state are making a good fight against a particularly vicious censorship bill in the Iowa state legislature. The measure provides for one censor who will have to examine 150 reels per week, the cost of which will fall heaviest upon the small exhibitors in the small towns.

Mr. Young says that there is a chance to kill the bill as the Iowa exhibitors have a strong organization and are able to combat most of the freak legislation that comes their way.

LOS ANGELES EXHIBITORS WAKE UP.

The prospect of legislation hostile to the interests of motion picture exhibitors has been the means of bringing about a certain move on the part of Los Angeles exhibitors which argument and logic have heretofore been powerless to effect. In other words the motion picture exhibitors of Los Angeles have finally been driven by fear to change their view of the movement for organization which is going on among exhibitors all over the United States. For three years they had held out against it, the chief reason was that nothing had ever happened to disturb their serenity or prosperity. Conditions have been too easy for them and they have imagined that they would always have things just as they wanted them without any effort on their part.

A year ago the writer went about from theater to theater urging upon the exhibitors the necessity for getting together and found that about 75 per cent. of the men who were operating picture houses took the attitude that organization could be of no benefit to them whereas it might benefit the other exhibitors at their expense. They were not able to explain how this could be but expressed suspicions that such was the case. The argument that some movement against the theaters, such as a campaign against Sunday exhibitions, would find them unprepared was not heeded until an infantile paralysis scare came along and the motion picture theaters being unorganized, were made to bear the brunt of the rigid quarantine regulations. Then they hastily organized the Los Angeles Motion Picture Men's Association and within two weeks the quarantine was lifted.

About the time the organization was being formed the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of California was organized at San Francisco and overtures were made to the Los Angeles exhibitors to join and co-operate. A representative came down from San Francisco and appeared before the association, but was turned down. The local exhibitors said in effect that they thought they could get along without the state organization. They have maintained this attitude up to the present time. But now hosile legislation is threatened in the legislature which is meeting in Sacramento. A bill is pending which the exhibitors consider drastic enough, but it is not a circumstance to a bill which has been drafted by the ultra conservative religious element in the state. This bill is being held back to see what kind of legislation the legislature adopts on the subject. If the legislature's bill is considered too mild the church people will at once begin the circulation of initiative petitions throughout the state embodying their drastic substitute bill. The petitions will be circulated in the churches and Sunday schools and some of the women's clubs of the state have already indicated their willingness to co-operate. If such an initiative petition should be filed the people of the state will vote upon it next October. Here is indeed one of the gravest perils threatening the motion picture industry in California, for the proponents of the drastic measure will be able to exert an influence through the churches and women's clubs which can only be overcome by the hardest kind of work.

Confronted by this situation the Los Angeles exhibitors have finally awakened. The Los Angeles Motion Picture Men's Association which only last summer scornfully rejected the friendly overtures of the State Exhibitors' League has just joined it as an organization and all of the members of the local organization have joined the state body as individuals. Aroused by their example the exhibitors of the smaller cities throughout Southern California have also joined it, until today the state organization has among its members more than 85 per cent. of the exhibitors of Southern California. The northern part of the state has been well organized for some time so the exhibitors of the state are now in a position to make a fight for fair play. At least they will be united in any action they take and therein will lie their strength.

The officers of the Los Angeles division of the state league are A. T. Pugwell, president; G. H. McLain, vice-president; O. V. Traggardh, secretary; Edward J. Tally, treasurer; E. J. Tally, R. W. Woodley, M. Stutz and G. H. Halsell, board of trustees. Secretary Traggardh has opened offices at 360 and 362 Pacific Electric building.

P. M. Powell.

NOTES FROM PRESIDENT NEFF.

On Saturday, March 15th, W. R. Wilson, State Treasurer of Ohio, telephoned to President Neff, that a bill had been introduced by John F. Kramer, of Mansfield, Ohio, to close all picture shows on Sunday. This bill is known as House Bill No. 591. Mr. Neff arrived in Columbus 10.30 o'clock Sunday morning and immediately communicated with the legislative committee and now reports that there is no chance of House Bill No. 591 passing. It is just such bills as these that continually annoy the motion picture exhibitors and agitate the public.

A meeting of Cincinnati Local No. 2 was held in President Neff's office in the Mercantile Library Building, Cincinnati, on March 18th. Matters of importance were discussed and business was transacted. New passes have been issued to about two hundred city officials and friends of the motion picture exhibitors of Cincinnati. Each pass is issued to the individual named and extends the privilege for the holder of the pass to bring one with him. The pass is good at fifty-five picture theaters in Cincinnati; those who are fortunate enough to receive one feel very much complimented as the pass is considered of great value. In other words, a pass signed by the President and Secretary of Local No. 2 is accepted by every member of the League. Officers present at the meeting were: President, A. C. Dingelstedt; First Vice-President, G. W. Hill; Second Vice-President, Chas. Sternberger; Secretary, H. Heimerdinger; Treasurer, Otto Luedeking, and Fred A. Botts.

Mr. Jas. Steele, formerly manager of the old Calcium Light Exchange and recently manager of the General Film Company, of Cincinnati, ever since it started, has resigned. Mr. J. E. Willis, of Cleveland, arrived in Cincinnati Monday morning and placed a new man in Mr. Steele's position.

J. H. Broomhall, Ohio State secretary visited President Neff at his office Thursday.

CHICAGO LETTER

By JAS. S. McQUADE

THE following article, contributed by Mr. Cotter, manager of the Universal Film Exchange of St. Louis, is timely and shows a careful study of present conditions in the film industry, especially in the Independent field:

"In the history of the film business, there has never been a time when the public demand for high-class subjects was so imperious and persistent as the present. Several years ago, one feature a week was welcomed by the exhibitor. Times have changed. With the fierce competition of the various manufacturing companies, there has come into the field a persistent demand for features. This demand has become so insistent, that it behooves manufacturers, who are striving for the betterment of the business, to take cognizance of this condition, and produce pictures which are up to the standard created by the advanced artistry and perfection of detail, which distinguish the productions of the best producers.

"That good features pay, has been demonstrated time and again; still the mass of exhibitors seem oblivious of the tremendous possibilities presented when a great feature is shown. In this respect, the value of appropriate music cannot be too strongly emphasized. For instance, nearly every theater devoted to the spoken drama has an adequate orchestra for the enchancement of the play. Why cannot exhibitors see the advantage of having correct and appropriate music, rehearsed with the same care and attention that is bestowed upon the melodic accompaniment of the spoken drama? The value of appropriate music can scarcely be estimated in, for instance, such photoplays as "Dante's Inferno" or "Satan," or in great plays like "As in a Looking Glass," with Marion Leonard, which, by the way, broke all records for a feature in this city last week. Of course the exhibitor will say that this will entail more expense. But will not increased patronage more than offset this condition? In other words: make the feature picture a FEATURE in every sense. It is time for exhibitors to realize that the feature, in the world of entertainment, has attained a rank rivaling in importance the great productions of the dramatic world, and they should endeavor to enhance their offerings with the same care as to detail and musical accompaniment that is bestowed upon their more ancient rival. As to the manufacturers, the sooner they realize that the day of the wild and woolly, and the insipid drama has passed, and that real, vital subjects are the demand of the hour, the sooner the film will cease to be an adjunct to cheap vaudeville, and will be regarded as sufficient in itself and command the patronage it deserves.

"Another thing: the manufacturers who are now releasing films of one-reel subjects to the various exchanges throughout the country, are doubtless equipped and furnished with the material to produce really high-class subjects, such as are in urgent demand. Why not a feature each day in their daily program, thus saving the exhibitor an inordinate amount of trouble, and anxiety, in securing his daily feature program from two or more exchanges? The insistent demand for the BEST subjects shows the healthy trend of public taste; but a high standard can only be maintained by the intelligent co-operation of both manufacturers and exhibitors."

No Place in Pictures for Brutal Realism or Horrors.

In an editorial, in a recent issue of the Chicago News, the brutality shown now and then in moving picture enterprises is most deservedly denounced. Reference is made to the attempt by several camera men recently to register th flight of a man, who was in the act of being shot into the air by means of a huge skyrocket. Luckily the rocket exploded when it was fired, instead of at a height of 3,500 feet as was intended, from which elevation he had planned to fall by parachute. The promoters are rightly censured for such bloodthirsty realism.

Another case, which comes in for righteous condemnation, is that of the man who, a few months ago, leaped from a lofty landing of the Eiffel tower, in Paris, with an inadequate parachute. the man hesitated, fearing to take the fatal plunge, but he was urged to do so, in order that the cameras might trace his descent to death. The last camera depicted the crushing impact of the body against the ground, and the rushing in of the crowds to view the mangled remains. The poor victim was Francois Reichelt, a tailor, who had hoped to gain a fortune from his parachute.

"So much for realism," continues the editorial. "The horrors of melodrama are also calling for rebuke of restraint. Moving picture theaters today are showing a film whose plot deals with the attempt of a Mexican to attack an American girl in a cabin among the mountains. The shocking quality of this and other features—as, for instance, the scenes where the hero is left bound hand and foot, while a lighted candle burns slowly down toward the level of the gunpowder in an open canister—must leave a harmful impress on the minds of young spectators."

Most assuredly such scenes would, if the pictures were shown in any theater. But they are not being shown; for the very good reason that these scenes were confiscated by the authorities in Mexico, and the participants arrested. It is also certain that no censor board in America, worthy the name, would pass such a film were it offered for inspection.

"The moving picture people have a good field and are most unwise to abuse their privileges," the editorial concludes. Quite so; and the wonder is that anyone calling himself a producer could so blind himself to what is required of the moving picture today as to produce such scenes. The moving picture has no place for brutal realism or revolting horrors.

Pathe's Weekly Receives Black Eye.

Bitter complaints have been received over the failure of Pathe's Weekly No. 11 (released Monday, March 10) to show the inauguration of President Wilson. The one sheet poster gotten out for No. 11 had the following announcement: "Washington, D. C., Woodrow Wilson is inaugurated president of the U. S." In some of the posters this line was crossed out before being delivered to the exhibitors; in others it appeared as originally printed, and these being posted in the lobbies of theaters led to the disappointment of many patrons and to the discomfiture of many managers. Some of the latter were ashamed to meet their disgruntled Monday nighters and hid themselves in their box offices.

Now there was a reason for this disappointment. Pathe issued a 600 feet special of the inauguration. This was called a "supplement" and it was released on Saturday, March 8. Supplements always follow the main edition; they don't precede it. Ten dollars extra was asked for the "supplement" by all General Film Company branches in Chicago, except one. Many exhibitors say they knew nothing about the supplement and told their patrons that the Pathe Weekly would have a section devoted to the inauguration. They had learned to believe in the Pathe style of advertising, "Book it every week. No matter what happens, if it's interesting, it's in Pathe's Weekly." Now things are changed and a big weekly feature, eagerly looked forward to by hundreds of thousands of people, has received a black eye. And for what?

Chicago Film Brevities.

L. C. Mann, formerly lecturer with "Dante's Inferno," on the road, has been appointed advance man for the Lea-Bel Feature Film Co. Mr. Mann will lecture on the film, "Satan," when it is exhibited in southern Illinois.

The Anderson-Watkins Film Co., room 508, 184 W. Washington street, is the sole owner and distributer of "A Day at Tuskegee." This feature film shows the various activities of Booker T. Washington's great industrial institute. This fine educational exhibit is especially designed for entertainments in churches, colleges and schools, and those seeking further information are referred to the firm's advertisement on another page, in this issue. A special exhibition of "A Day at Tuskegee" will be given at Orchestra Hall, Tuesday evening, April 1st, when the growth of the famous institution, from a small shack in 1881 to the massive structures now erected, will be shown, together with the varied industries carried on. The pictures show the students engaged in workshops and class-rooms, with views of the institute regiment and band. Those especially invited for the occasion are: Dr. Booker T. Washington, Miss Ella Flagg Young, superintendent of Chicago schools; Dr. Harry Pratt Judson, president of the Chicago University; George Cole, well known publicist; Julius Rosenwald, president Sears, Roebuck & Co.; Miss Grace Abbott, director of the Immigrants Protective League; Judge John E. Owens, Mayor Carter Harrison, and other prominent Chicagoans who have visited Tuskeegee Institute.

The Allardt Feature Films, Inc., is the title of a new feature film exchange recently established in Chicago, with offices at 810 Straus Building, this city. Menlo E. Moore is president of the firm. Sidney Smith, vice-president, and H. J. Allardt, of the well known Allardt Vaudeville Circuit, is treasurer. D. W. McKinney, well known in film circles, in Chicago and New York, is general manager. This firm has a number of exclusive features to offer the trade. Among these is the Paris Eclair Company's great feature production of Sherlock Holmes stories, in a series of eight subects, produced at a cost of $20,000 under the personal supervision of the author, Sir Conan Doyle. For further particulars concerning the Sherlock Holmes series, readers are referred to the firm's advertisement on another page, in this issue.

Kinemacolor Players Snow-Bound—Chinese Pictures by Essanay—New Selig Director—Nuggets of News.

AFTER having been snowbound in the mountains for two weeks, David Miles, producing manager of the Kinemacolor company, and twenty of the members of his company have returned to the studio in Los Angeles. The experience, though filled with hardships, also had its bright side, for Miles brought back with him several thousand feet of negative which he says contains some of the most beautiful pictures he has ever made.

The company went to Squirrel Inn in the San Bernardino mountains, about 75 miles from this city, on Friday expecting to return the following Monday. The second day after their arrival in the camp, at the top of the range, snow began to fall. Before night it was several inches deep and all night long it fell fast. During the day the company had been using a group of Indian tepees. They were left standing for use the following day but when morning came only the tops of the long poles were visible above the snow. The members of the company had been distributed about in small log houses and it was necessary for them to shovel their way out next morning. The snow was too soft to work on and, besides, it kept piling up all day long so a day was wasted. For several days it was impossible for them to leave the little clearing in which the group of cabins is located, but they were able to make a number of scenes. Fortunately more film had been taken along than Mr. Miles had expected to need but it was all used. When it was finally exhausted the members of the company set out early one morning for an eight mile tramp through snow, breast high. It took them nearly all of the day to arrive at a point below snow line where the traveling was easier. Their luggage was left behind them to be brought back later when the trails have been cleared. On their return to Los Angeles the members of the company presented Mr. Miles with a green bronze loving cup lined with silver inside. On one side of the exterior is a picture of a squirrel inlaid in silver and on the other side is an inlaid silver shield bearing the inscription "To David Miles, in Appreciation of His Great Patience During a Snowbound Week On the Mountain Tops of California."

Frank E. ("Spec") Woods, one of the directors, and five other former members of the Kinemacolor organization are at liberty, due to the fact that one of the four companies operating at this studio was closed this week. No reason for the event is offered at the Kinemacolor offices, but current gossip has it that the Los Angeles plant has been too productive for several months with the result that reels have been piling up faster than they could be released.

Secretary Ogle of the Kinemacolor Company of America, is here from New York on business. Director Miles is now at work on the "Nathan Hale" picture concerning which something was said in this column recently.

The wide and favorable notice which was attracted throughout the country by the recent Kinemacolor release "As the Candle Burns" has naturally been very gratifying to Mr. Miles and his employees for the picture was made at this studio and before it was sent East it was considered one of the best pictures the studio has turned out. The unanimous praise which the critics have given it has confirmed the local view. The scenario was written by W. E. Wing of this city, corresponding secretary of The Photoplayers.

Mackley In Essanay Chinese Pictures.

Let the thousands of admirers of that well known Essanay screen character "The Sheriff" try if they can to picture their favorite, Arthur Mackley, in the role of a Chinese pirate. It doesn't sound possible but it is nevertheless true for Mackley is to uptilt his eyebrows and don a cue and a scowl next week by way of preparation for a series of Chinese pictures.

The reason for this is that the famous Chinese pirate junk "Ning Po" recently purchased by the Essanay company in China, has reached these shores. It is now anchored in Santa Monica Bay off the city of Venice ready for the use of Mackley and his company. The ancient "Ning Po" is one of the oldest and most picturesque craft in the world. Built about 1700, it has had a varied career. For many years it was used by pirates who captured it from its legitimate owners. Much of its alleged history is traditional for the reason that it is difficult to verify details of Chinese history of more than a century ago. It is still in a good state of preservation and thoroughly seaworthy, the latter statement being proved by the fact that it was brought over under its own sails. The crew who manned it are little less interesting than the vessel, for it is related that the Chinese captain who was hired by the Essanay company to bring the boat over had them all released from a Chinese penitentiary by paying a bounty and thereupon the Chinese body corresponding to the city council of the city where they were imprisoned, presented the captain with an engrossed testimonial thanking him and praising him for his great patriotism in relieving the country of the presence of his crew.

As soon as he finishes the Chinese pictures Mackley is to take a long vacation. The Essanay company has granted him a leave of absence which he will use to take a trip back to his native town in Scotland to renew acquaintances which were interrupted nearly a quarter of a century ago. The company wanted him to take a camera and a company along with him, but he protested that that would not be a vacation and so he will go alone.

Martin Succeeds McRae at Selig Plant.

E. A. Martin, a new director for the Chicago studio of the Selig company, has come to Los Angeles to take the directorship left vacant when Director McRae went to the Universal recently. Fred Huntley, formerly a director at the Edendale studio, who afterward went back into the pictures as a lead, is again behind the camera. The other two Selig directors are Colin Campbell and Len D. Parker. At the present time all four of the directors are engaged in one reel subjects. Kathlyn Williams, leading woman of the Selig company, is no more. She succumbed this week to matrimony taking the name of Mrs. Robert Allen. Mr. Allen is an actor with one of the local theatrical stock companies.

News Notes.

Producing Manager Wilbert Melville of the No. 1 Lubin company now operating in this city has added several permanent members to his company and is planning a number of pictures calling for large casts. This week he made a Mexican picture which called for a troop of 60 Mexican cavalrymen. After having the costumes made up, purchasing the equipments, hiring the horses and 60 Mexicans who were recruited in Sonoratown, the Mexican quarter of Los Angeles he found it was necessary to put in a whole day drilling his "awkward squad" before they were fit to use. That he was able to turn them out for accurate work in the picture next day was due to the military training he had before he entered the motion picture game.

Mack Sennet, Fred Mace and the rest of the members of the Keystone company are engaged in putting on a new line of pictures—that is, Sennet says he is producing "comic melodramas" which is an entirely new form of art. It sounds like it. There were elements of comedy and tragedy combined in a scene which Sennet pulled off during a recent picture. It was a difficult scene. It was full of hard work, all of which was done by the star, the same being Sennet. He threw his whole soul into it. It was a long scene. After it was over Sennet was perspiring and puffing. He observed that it would no doubt be a scream on the screen. Then they broke the news to him. The camera had not been going.

Dot Farley, one of the character women of the Keystone company, resigned this week to join the St. Louis Motion Picture traveling company at Albuquerque, N. M. She has a contract with the "Shamrock" people but in all probability will return to Los Angeles before long, for it is reported that the St. Louis company are headed this way and if they like the country may locate here permanently.

* * *

The first release of the new "Efsco" company was brought to Los Angeles this week by H. O. Martin, president of the Exhibitors' Film Service Company, and exhibited before the Municipal Board of Censors. The board passed it without a criticism. The picture which is in two reels is called "Opportunity." The story tells of an ambitious man holding high political office whose plans run counter to those of his son. The boy has started at the bottom of the ladder and worked up to the second vice presidency of a huge oil corporation and a time comes when his connection with the corporation stands in the way of his father's further political advancement. By means of the "fade away" device the son is shown telling his father of the struggle by which he has fought his way to the top. Incidentally his story gives an illuminating and informative view of the magnitude of one of the big corporations. Scenes in the oil fields were photographed at Taft in this state. The photography was done by Harry Revier of Los Angeles. The story has interest throughout and is well and effectively told.

OBSERVATIONS

BY OUR MAN ABOUT TOWN

THE inauguration of President Wilson at Washington last week brought about visits to this city by many residents of Western cities who are interested in the moving picture business, some as makers and others as exhibitors. "We couldn't leave the East without dropping in upon our New York friends. Purely a social matter," was the substance of the answers given to queries as to whether or not their presence was an indication of important doings in the picture field. Those who talked "shop" confined their attention to the censorship question and what one of the most prominent visitors said concerning it is worthy of space here.

The speaker was one of the pioneers of the motion picture business in the West and he knows it from A to Z. He favors censorship, but not in a compulsory sense. His objection is due to a firm belief that official censorship is not practicable. He said: "I agree with the many people who claim that censorship of films by law would be unconstitutional, but I am not disposed to waste time discussing that point just now. The question to which I have directed my attention is whether it would be possible to abide by the law. The more I have heard it discussed the more convinced I become that censorship by law would put such a handicap upon the manufacturers as to ultimately ruin the business of the exhibitors, which quite naturally would mean ultimate great loss to both manufacturers and film exchanges. If there is to be official censorship and the constitutionality is to be waived there is but one form in which it can be practicable. It must be national. By that I mean there must be arrangement by which the Board of Censorship of one State will recognize the certificates of approval issued by the board of another State. At first glance this statement may appear to some as being an appeal for the manufacturers. Any man of common sense who knows anything about the manner in which films must be censored will see at once what I am trying to convey. To have films censored sample copies must be supplied the censoring authorities for inspection sufficiently in advance to allow for transportation, inspection, official reports, changes where they are ordered and the preparation of prints for the market. This precedure must be followed if the laws are to require that all films must be censored and approved before being exhibited to the public. Now, then, how many prints a week will the manufacturer be able to supply for this purpose? Take a case where a concern is putting on the market four new subjects a week. Four prints cannot be sent out on a circuit of inspection to travel from State to State. They would not get back to the producer until months after they had started on the trip. The answer is, let samples be sent to each board. There's the rub. How many States will insist upon individual censorship? Ten. Well, then, the manufacturer would have to send out each week forty prints. For the purpose of argument say each print is worth, on the average, $100. That means the four-print concern would be obliged to send out $4,000 worth of films for inspection with a beautiful chance of hardly one print being suitable for public exhibition. With these figures as a basis, let some of the censorship champions figure the sample cost to the concerns that produce five and six subjects each week, not counting the special releases that are issued. And suppose, as some of the fanatics would have it, every film should be passed upon by a board in every State. What concern in this or any other country could afford to produce the number of films that would be required for that purpose? To remain in the business would mean a curtailment of productions to save enormous outlay dependent upon the whims of inspectors who might be as much qualified for the duties as a hod-carrier is to make a watch. Curtailment of productions would be a decisive step towards driving patrons of the theaters away, or at least reduce the box office receipts to a point that would jeopardize the millions of dollars that have been invested in the business. The manufacturers and exhibitors court censorship. All they object to is unfair methods. If it is to be done, let it be upon a basis of reason. Where reason is lacking there can be no justice, and where there is no justice a law that ignores it will fall of its own oppressive weight. I'm not from Missouri, but they will have to 'show' me before I will agree to throw my money to the winds to pacify a bunch of cranks who thus far have not shown a disposition to concede anything and are continually demanding everything without regard to the impracticability and the oppressive side of their views."

To show how little some people really know about the censorship of films, although they have apparently given it thought and it has been widely discussed in the public press for months, attention is called to remarks made by a gentleman who occupied a seat in the Wonderland Theater on Broadway a few nights ago. A film telling a love story was being shown on the screen. The final scene showed the bride and bridegroom about to depart from the home of the former for the honeymoon trip. The bride was still attired in the garments she wore when the marriage took place. "There," exclaimed the party to whom I have referred, "that shows the kind of censorship the picture films are being given now. It is high time something was done to wipe out such nonsense." What manufacturer would care to risk his capital to the judgment of a board of censors made up of material of that kind? The writer has frequently charged many of the censorship champions with being inconsistent in their views and policies and felt quite gratified when he heard the expression quoted coming from one whose own words denoted that he was one of the champions. The poor bride of that story! Were she in reality, how sad she would have felt on her wedding day to find herself classed with the bride who went on her honeymoon in Salome attire!

For the benefit of the radicals supporting measures to guard the patrons of motion picture theaters and in so doing would, if possible, make neglect of them by the managers a penal offense, opportunity is taken to announce that Mr. Marcus Loew has established a Pinkerton supervision for his houses. The step is a voluntary one. Detectives are assigned to see that ushers and all other employees give careful attention to the comfort and protection of patrons and to keep a sharp lookout for suspicious characters. Incidentally the detectives are to see that there is not collusion between the box offices and the ticket takers. It is said other managers are contemplating the establishment of a similar system. Of course a system of espionage has almost invariably been in operation at all places of amusement so far as it related to the box offices and doors, but the one established by Mr. Loew is far more reaching. It is said that some employees in time learned the identity of those placed to watch them and the results gradually reversed themselves. To guard against this each watcher is watched by another man unknown to him. A well-known theatrical man in commenting upon the system said, "Of course some employees get nettled when systems of that character are put in vogue, but they should not. It is purely a matter of business. Every manager has a right to protect himself at all stages of the game, whether against the public, the authorities, his employees, or crooks. It does not bear wholly upon the financial end of the business. It is done to retain the patronage of the house by protecting and pleasing the patrons, and to do this properly discipline must be maintained. It is no secret that before a manager of a house, or one of his secret employees whose identity has become known, can place his foot on the threshold of his theater his coming is flashed from the front of the house to every other part where a man is supposed to be on duty. This has become known to a number of managers and it has naturally aroused their suspicions on the old theory that where there is smoke there must be some fire."

At one of the theaters recently a film producer said, "A year or two ago when a manufacturer remarked that the time would come when it would be the 'survival of the fittest' among the producers it was looked upon by some of the smaller of the manufacturers as a veiled threat of extinction. Current events dispel that notion. New investors are jumping into the business almost every week and each week from 125 to 130 new subjects are being placed upon the market. Where will it end and how can the 'fittest' help surviving are now the prevailing topics."

A London cinema has hit on a novel advertising scheme. A very literary and distinguished looking man enters a 'bus on one of the metropolitan routes. In a few minutes he discovers he is on the wrong vehicle and immediately rushes away, leaving his letter case behind. The interested passengers make for the case, thinking it may contain some great literary or dramatic masterpiece, when out drops a number of handbills worded, "See the pictures at the R—— Kinema and you would not be had so easy as this.

Music for the Picture

BY CLARENCE E. SINN

F. EDGAR RAY, Musical director Grand Theater, Newark, Ohio, writes: "I am sending you the program with which I accompanied the two-reel Vitagraph, "The Chains of an Oath." Used your cues for the "Cowboy Millionaire" with success. Give us some more."

"The Chains of An Oath" (Vitagraph).

Part One.

1. "Joyous Farmer" (Schuman). Repeat once, then segue.
2. "Chants du Voyageur" (Paderewski) until Donia enters house.
3. "Sicilian Chimes" (Kerry Mills) until title: "First English Lesson."
4. "Pearls" (Novelette by Niel Moret) until Donia reads letter.
5. "Farewell to the Piano" (Beethoven) until end of reel.

Part Two.

1. Agitato p. until Svan enters apartment with Donia.
2. "A Summer's Dream" (By P. Hans Flath) until title: "Svan Decides to Follow."
3. Short light Hurry until title: "The Land of Bondage."
4. "Sans La Feuille (F. Thome) until Gregory appears with knife.
5. Agitato pp. and ff., following action until Gregory turns to leave apartment first time.
6. "Sans La Feuille" until end of reel.

If entre d' acte is desired, "Romanze" by Schuman will hold the "color" until part two is projected."

A dignified program which follows the motive of the picture very well. Our constituents will be glad to hear from you again Mr. Ray.

From the Broadway Theater, Salt Lake City, Utah: "This is the first time I have taken the liberty of communicating with the music section though I have contributed many other articles and suggestions to various departments of the Moving Picture World. We are using first run pictures and of course all your accompanying music and suggestions for the various pictures come too late to be of much assistance to us, though from the program you selected for Reincarnation of Karma, I picked many numbers which we will be able to use in future pictures of this nature.

In making up a recent order list of orchestra music I found the catalog's particularly short of Oriental and Eastern music; at least they were hard to select from the titles. Also the Mexican music we have on hand is well worn since the long run of these pictures we have had. I think it would be of great value and assistance to exhibitors and orchestra leaders if you would from time to time publish lists of various classes of music, giving when possible the composers' and publishers' names. In our new house we will use an orchestra of ten pieces. Yours, Dean R. Daynes."

I can appreciate Mr. Daynes' difficulty in selecting music with nothing to guide him but the titles in the publisher's catalog. The music suggested in this department is usually accompanied by the name of the composer and frequently the name of the publisher is also given, but it would not be expedient to publish lists from their catalogs here. Such advertising would be too valuable to the publishers to give them free gratis. When these gentlemen awaken to the fact that over 16,000 moving picture theaters in this country alone are constantly on the lookout for appropriate music, and that the Moving Picture World is read in every one of them, they will arrange assorted lists of their music and publish them in the advertising pages of this paper. They might be surprised to learn that moving picture musicians desire something else than "rags" and popular songs. In the meantime the suggestions for musical accompaniments will give the composers' names and occasionally, the publishers; but I am sorry to say, no catalogs or lists.

From C. H. Snow, Middletown, Del.: "It is doubtlessly seldom that you hear from this part of the country. I want to congratulate you on the excellent work you are doing in the music suggestions in your department, especially your 'tips on improvising.' Am working in the opera house here running the cream of licensed pictures and two 2- or 3-reel features per week. Speaking of the art of picture playing in general, it would benefit all photo-pianists to keep in close touch with each other and exchange views and compare their ideas as to the conception of music for the picture." (That is what this department is for.—Ed.)

"Only recently a friend sent me a good suggestion and since that time I gave a few pointers to another friend because one had done me a good turn and I passed it along."

Our correspondent has the right idea, but if he will watch the Moving Picture World closely he will find many friends busily engaged in "passing along" their ideas and suggestions. Not so many as I should like to see, perhaps, but compared to the apathy of a few years ago, it is encouraging to observe the number of thoughtful musicians who are willing to share their experiences; in proof of this, witness the growing number of "musical suggestions" sent in from various parts of the country and given this page. They are "passing it along." Some time ago a correspondent sent us a set of rules for the guidance of picture players. One of his maxims was: "go and hear other pianists play the pictures." This is broadening. It gets you out of the rut and stimulates your ideas. Studying the other fellow's "dope-sheet" is of great help too. In both cases you are bound to criticise or approve; if the latter, you may get some new ideas. If you criticise you will naturally try to think how his work might be improved—if it is wrong, where and why it is wrong, and what will make it right. We develop by sharing our ideas and comparing our efforts.

H. R. Seeman, La Fayette Theater, Saint Louis, Mo., says: "In the issue of the Moving Picture World, March 1st, I notice a letter from Albany, Oregon, in reference to effects and music for the picture. I can't agree with the brother from Oregon. If I get him right he thinks a drummer with a first class air-cabinet in the orchestra with the pianist can make the pictures more realistic, and (if I understand him right), is of the opinion that such a combination can accomplish more. Quoting his words, "You have got to show me."

I grant that the effects are quite essential for making the picture realistic, but I must say that effects and music are two different things, and when a drummer of an orchestra attempts to make all the effects for the picture with his $1800 air cabinet he then and there becomes an effect man, and that orchestra is sadly in need of a drummer that can make effects—I mean effects that are characteristic to the music his leader is playing—and let the effect man take his place behind the screen where he belongs. My idea of a drummer and his traps is to make effects incidental to the music the orchestra is playing. For instance, I am playing this week for the Pathe special release, "Mother"—a western drama, and there is one scene where there is galloping of horses and Indian fights. I am playing a good number for this scene entitled "Cowboy Capers" in the drum part of which there is lots of work for cymbals, tom-tom, etc. Is it right for the drummer to sacrifice these effects that are characteristic to the music in order to catch shots, horses hoofs, etc.? In other words, the effect drummer must play his effects according to his picture whereas the orchestra drummer who makes his effects characteristic to the music is helping his leader carry out his contract to play music suited to the picture. I must say again that the drummer who attempts to do both not only sacrifices his work as a drummer, but is also doing an injustice to the music. Both good effects and good music are essential, but cannot be worked together in the orchestra pit. The drummer using bells, chimes, xylophone, tympani, etc., is doing more to help the cause of "better music for the picture" than the drummer with his $1800 air cabinet. Yours very truly, H. R. Seeman."

These gentlemen are evidently looking at the proposition from different angles. Without taking sides one way or the other at present, I wish to point out that the majority of picture houses employ but one effect man, viz.: the drummer in the orchestra pit. With the larger houses using an orchestra it is often differently arranged, but in the smaller places employing but two or three musicians (usually two—piano and drums), the sound effects incidental to the picture are the most important part of the drummer's work.

Mr. Seeman kindly encloses his musical program for two pictures:

"MOTHER" (Pathe).

Part One.

1. Waltz "Blush of the Rose" until title: "Their Boy;" then:
2. Intermezzo "Starland" until he writes home; then:
3. Song "Mother" (from play of that name) until title "Bob Gambles, etc."
4. Same intermezzo ("Starland") softening for fireside scene, continuing until mother gets letter. Then waltz (No. 1) until scene out west.
5. March "Local Pride" (fast) until title: "Bob's Mother Prepares, etc."
6. Waltz "Asphodel" (Hildreth) until end of reel.

Part Two.

1. At title :"Bob Sells the Stolen Horses" Bright characteristic march "Cowboy Capers" (new—by Allen), until title: "Believing Her Son the Sheriff."
2. Waltz "Asphodel" until sheriff sends for Bob.
3. Serenade "Blushing Rose" until title: "Bob's Mother Leaves."
4. Tosti's "Goodbye" until title: "Their Dreams—and the Reality."
5. "Mother" song till end.

"A Chance Deception" (Biograph).

1. 16 bars Spanish dance (Bolero) then:
2. "Il Bacio" (The "Kiss Waltz") until title "Am I Too Old?"
3. "In the Shadows" (Finck) play second part quasi mysterioso at title "His Suspicions Confirmed." Continue until husband enters house; then:
4. "The Romance of a Rose" (new) 2d movement agitato until title: "Asphadia," then take up "Romance of a Rose" at introduction, play through—then:
5. "Titl's Serenade" (or any serenade) until finish.

PEACEFUL DAYS WITH HITE.

Dr. W. R. Shallenberger, associated with C. J. Hite in the Thanhouser Film Corporation, has his opinion of a busy film producer. Recently Mr. Hite wrote the doctor to come to New Rochelle and spend a couple of peaceful days with him. The doctor came on. He arrived at the Thanhouser offices the afternoon of the third.

"Gee! doctor," said Mr. Hite, "I've decided to do the inauguration. I leave in ten minutes for Washington. Won't you come along?

The morning of the fourth was spent in "peaceful" scurrying about the Capital City for locations. In the afternoon the inauguration was filmed. All the doctor had to do was to race through police lines and help lug cameras.

After an arduous day he thought of finding a resting place for the night.

"Nixie!" said Hite. "It's back to the factory for us with these negatives. The factory's only in New York, and a train leaves in sixteen and a quarter minutes!"

At 5:30 the next morning they taxied to the factory, after vain attempts to find sleep on the train via comfortless seats.

"Maybe we'll find a place to sleep after you've delivered this stuff," ventured the doctor as they entered the factory.

"Yes," replied Hite; "yes—after we've a print made and had it run. I'd hate awfully to let this go out without seeing it."

The negative was developed, a first print made and projected.

"Fine!" ejaculated Mr. Hite. "Great stuff! And it must make the flyer for the West. I'd better stick around and see that the shipping clerk makes connections."

It was then nearing noon.

"Come on," the doctor was saying. "Come on; we must get some sleep. That was a strenuous day yesterday."

"I know," consoled Hite. "Suppose—why, suppose the shipping clerk misses that flyer. We'd better stick around the shipping room."

At that moment the 'phone bell rang. The call was for Mr. Hite, and after answering it he turned to Dr. Shallenberger and said:

"There's a theater in the Bronx that wants to break records in showing the inauguration picture. It's the Ideal, on Westchester Avenue. I've promised to bring 'em a copy as soon as the prints for the West are out."

A couple of hours later the Western prints were off, and Mr. Hite and the doctor in an automobile speeding to the Bronx. The print was handed to the waiting theater man, and the auto went on north to New Rochelle. It flashed by Mr. Hite's home.

"Goodness gracious!" said the doctor; "aren't you going home? Aren't you at all tired?"

"No," came the reply. "One hasn't a right to feel tired in this business. But I'll drop you at the house and let you get some sleep. I've a two days' accumulation of mail to sift through at the office."

And at 11:30 that night C. J. Hite, closing his desk for the day, had the audacity to exclaim: "Nothing to do till tomorrow!"

JACKSONVILLE ITEMS.

Southern Players Talk of Starting a Club. Auto Races Planned. Hotaling Has Some Zulus.

The photoplayers who have been wintering in the South are considering the formation of a club along the lines of the Screen Club. They have a location offered them and they plan to get the club under way this season that all may be in readiness for next year. With four Kalem companies, two sections of the Lubin company, the Gauntier players and others, most of whom will return to "Jax" early next fall, there is the nucleus for a club of size. It is planned to admit the ladies to associate membership and the privileges of the club rooms, though they will not be accorded the vote unless this should become necessary to save the windows.

Walter H. Stull and George E. Reehm, of the Lubin comedy section, have invested in automobiles and every night, down in front of Montgomery's Grand Theater, they hang around and brag of the merits of their respective machines. It is planned to hold a race down on the beach some Sunday when the two comedians can hustle their cars along and settle the question of speed.

Arthur D. Hotaling, the veteran director, has planned half a dozen Zulu comedies and the Liberty Bell trade mark will shortly swing over a series of novel productions. Some negro players have been imported from New York and eight or ten productions will be made in the next three or four weeks. Many of them will offer really novel features.

George O. Nicholls, the director of the dramatic section of the Lubin forces, recently took over the Hotaling company, while the latter director took a run up to New York, and with the combined companies produced a couple of Arabian stories with unusually fine actual settings.

MORE CHURCHES SHOW "BETHLEHEM."

Last Christmas many American churches put on "Star of Bethlehem" exhibitions with good success. Encouraged at that time by good reports received, C. J. Hite boomed it again for Easter church exhibition. Numerous clergymen who learned of the church use of the biblical film at Christmastide, became interested, and fresh requests came in for bookings on the picture. The renewal of interest has resulted in many additional letters to Mr. Hite from churchmen in praise of "Star of Bethlehem." A New York lecturer of biblical films, Mr. Valentine Hart, wrote the Thanhouser head that he alone showed the picture in churches at Fort Hamilton, Great Neck, Bath Beach, and Pleasantville, N. Y., and at Sunday religious concerts at the following theaters, to audiences of the following size: Bayridge Theater, Bayridge, N. Y., 1600; Montauk Theater, Brooklyn, N. Y., 3000; City Theater, West Hoboken, N. J., 3500; Lyceum Theater, Stamford, Conn., 4000; Orchard Theater, Brooklyn, N. Y., 1000; Hippodrome Theater, Asbury Park, N. J., 2100; Bijou Theater, Stapleton, N. Y., 2000.

AMERICAN HOLDS ANNUAL FROLIC.

Players of the American Film Manufacturing Company at Santa Barbara held their annual dinner and dance at the beautiful Hotel Arlington recently. About fifty attended the big dinner and after "the eats" the players amused themselves until early morning by dancing.

S. S. HUTCHINSON MAKES INDUSTRIAL.

S. S. Hutchinson, president of the American Film Manufacturing Company, left for Honolulu last week, after completing a splendid reel on the chicken industry in California. Mr. Hutchinson began the picture on a chicken ranch near San Francisco and traveled to Pasadena to get certain other scenes that will make it a remarkably strong industrial. The camera work was done by R. D. Armstrong.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Lost To Us.

WE are afraid that Melvin G. Winstock is lost to this department. There was a time when he used to send in nice advertising schemes. Now he only writes when he has made a speech somewhere. Last letter announces three speeches, but does not say anything about advertising his houses. We mourn his loss.

No Vaudeville In His.

Here is a paragraph that F. R. Weber, of the Star Theater, Chambersburg, Pa., sends in. Mr. Weber, who used to have a string of restaurants on Market Street, Philadelphia, says he can fight "like an Indian" when it is necessary, but since he runs the right sort of show he doesn't have to. Here is what Mr. Weber says:

> Every now and then some exhibitor rises up and exclaims that he is compelled to play vaudeville because his competitor does it. Here are the facts that dispute the fallacy. The Star Theater, Chambersburg, Pa., played vaudeville for over two years because its competitors did. Two of them played four acts and three and four reels of pictures for five and ten cents. Nearly a year ago the Star cut out vaudeville and put on three dated reels and one commercial and is now doing more business than it ever did—with all the vaudeville expense left out. One of the houses that ran four acts is out of business and the other opposition plays three acts and runs three reels of pictures for five and ten cents. The Star seats 750.

All over the country the real managers are cutting out vaudeville and putting part of the vaudeville salaries into better film service. The people who appreciate good pictures do not want the sort of vaudeville the picture manager can afford. When they want vaudeville they want the dollar and a half sort.

Believes in Readers.

Mr. Weber believes in reading notices and keeps things moving in the shape of a daily paragraph that booms the theater by starting off with something wholly foreign and working around to the show. Now and then he tries something else, one of the recent novelties being a column advertisement, the upper half of which is a "fist" pointing down a succession of capital B's in this effect:

B

A "B" line to the Star Theater.
"B" wise. "B" there.

An eight-inch string of single letters in the middle of a white column will attract attention in any paper. We are sorry we cannot afford space for some of the reading notices.

All Details.

The Alhambra Theater, Seattle, sends in a whole column advertisement, single column width, that starts off like this:

I F
YOU ARE

ANCE
ING
MENT

We would like to have you see the new program opening today at the

ALHAMBRA

There follows a detailed explanation under the heads of Quality, Quantity, Projection, Performance, Safety, Service and Prices. Under the head of quantity comes this very understandable explanation of first run:

> Our program always consists of a pleasing musical act and four first-run reels of photoplay. By "first-run" we mean films never before seen anywhere. The term corresponds to "first time on any stage" in the dramatic world. You are always a "first-nighter" at The ALHAMBRA.

Under the various heads the details are pretty completely covered and this is done in such a way as to appeal to those not photoplay fans. It is easy to coax the photoplay enthusiast into the house. The great point is to win over the man who never thought seriously of the possibilities of the picture performances. This makes its strongest bid in the line "The show is always 'just starting' whenever you arrive."

Lacks the Punch.

H. S. Stansel, of Agricultural College, Miss., which is the name of the postal station as well as the institution, writes:

> Having read so many valuable criticisms offered to others I am sure you will be able to help me in my efforts.
>
> I am in a small college town, running five reels, including a feature each Saturday. These I advertise heavily with circulars, but do not seem to get the desired "punch" into the matter. There is no other medium available except the screen which I use some. My friends tell me the show is excellent and attendance is fair, but I believe if I could put "a spark o' nature's fire," or some other kind of fire into my advertising I would do a great deal better.
>
> The blood and thunder does not appeal to me, but do you think I am too sober in my treatment. My patrons all claim intelligence above the average, and I am wondering if they are too smart to come to a picture show regularly. They all come occasionally.
>
> I run forty-day stuff which is in excellent condition. Have not had a stop on a picture in quite a while; projection is better than in the neighboring towns, through a Power's 6A, and I can not see why I can't get people to "get the habit."

Perhaps a Reason.

Mr. Stansel seems to have found the reason in part. He does not get the punch into his stuff. He doesn't give to the announcements the turn that makes you feel that you will be unkind to yourself if you do not see the offerings announced. Perhaps, in part, location has something to do with it, for we note that "Mr. Rives' bus will leave Gill's drug store at 7:40 for the college, returning after the show." A charge of twenty-five cents is made for the round trip. Paying a quarter to ride to a five and ten cent show doesn't seem to be a well proportioned fare and if Mr. Stansel wants to draw from those in the vicinity of Gill's drug store he might make a deal with Mr. Rives to sell a flat ticket covering admission to the theater and the ride.

It is not easy to build a clientele for one night a week, but it should be easy in a college town to get the students and the college widows. But to do this there must be real "yank" to the stuff. It reads rather too tamely. The Vitagraph's "The Dawning" is a "delightful and artistic two-reel Vitagraph special featuring Leah Baird and Earl Williams." There is "also a western drama and two comedies, five reels in all."

It does not seem that the players' names will appeal strongly to those who see pictures only Saturday nights. It is still less probable that a two-reel feature will mean much to them. The brief synopsis of "The Dawning" is so briefly told as not to interest. We would suggest starting it off like this:

She Married to Spite Her Sweetheart

and to please her mother. You can imagine the possibilities of a situation like that when the girl in the case is strong willed and rebellious. Something is happening every moment the picture is on the screen. It's a Vitagraph, which means that there is none better, and it is twice the usual length because there is about three times as much to the plot as to the average story.

And on top of this comes a Thrilling Western Drama and
Two Corking Comedies.
A two hour show for a one hour price.
Come out in Rives' bus Saturday. It is next best to a picnic.
Leaves Gill's drug store at 7:40.

It would be a good thing if Mr. Stansel can do it to try the chatty, semi-confidential style, cutting down the display lines save for the title and making running comment.

We'd let our patrons claim "intelligence above the average," but if we went after them we'd get after them just as strong as though they were not. We would not get familiar or offensive, but we certainly would try to wake them up.

Direct Chat.

Try something like this:

> We want you to come to the College Chapel next Saturday night and see one of the best photoplays that has been brought into Eastern Mississippi in a whole handful of months. It's a Vitagraph, so good that they made it in double the usual length because it is more than twice as good. It's a story of a strong willed young American girl who falls in love with a French artist. He is called to Paris and, angered at his apparent desertion, she gives her hand to an American favored by her mother. She does not love him and when she meets the artist in Paris again he tries to take advantage of this fact, but the girl turns to her husband and it is through the events that follow that her love for her husband dawns and she sees the two men in their proper perspectives. That is just a sketch of the story, but you can imagine what the clever Vitagraph players do with it. Miss Leah Baird is the girl. If you've seen her before you do not need to know more. If you have not seen > her it is about time you got acquainted. Come around Saturday and we'll introduce her to you.

> Come around anyhow, every Saturday. If you could have half as much fun for twice the money anywhere else we would not urge you, but you can't. Four companies of actors—real Broadway actors—are at your command. It would cost two or three thousand dollars a week to pay the people you'll see on the screen next Saturday, and all you have to pay is five or ten cents. Can you beat it? We don't see how you can. Two solid hours of high class enjoyment for five cents an hour is about as cheap as pleasure comes.

Real photoplay fanship is not built on one show a week but a show or two every night. We think Mr. Stansel would make more than twice as much money if he ran Wednesday nights, too.

Free to the Kiddies.

Recently the Empire Theater, Fort Dodge, Iowa, ran an all educational program and announced that children under ten would be admitted without charge on special tickets provided. Mr. A. Engle writes that the idea worked out very successfully, bringing in a good crowd and creating much favorable comment.

In common with others, Mr. Engle complains of a recent Licensed release which is clever, but too palpably an advertisement for a certain brand of bacon, and advances the natural argument that since the company was no doubt paid for making the subject he should be paid for exhibiting the same. The advertising film is so seldom put out as a special release that it is all the more apparent on that account, and we think that the unfavorable comment will act as a stop to further ventures along this line for some little time to come.

Back Again.

We've missed the Arcade Theater, Tientsin, from the department lately, but they have sent in an illustrated booklet for "Arrah na Pogue" and a folder for "Enoch Arden." This line would coax us, we think. It can be applied to other films:

> A film that will thrill and vibrate every heart, grand in scenic beauties, compelling in interest and presenting in realistic wonders Lord Tennyson's lines.

That's some little language to come all the way from China. We commend it to the manager who complains he cannot get a punch in his stuff.

Out in that section of North China it is necessary to work in the same people over and over again, but intelligent advertising does it, and the Arcade is getting the best of an uphill fight. Lately the original lines seem to have taken on added snap. Here's another bit from "Arrah na Pogue," this time:

> Dion Boucicault's Romantic Irish drama translated into pictures.

"Translated into pictures" is a decidedly good line and it means just that. Try it some time.

Closer to Home.

Brooklyn is not so far away as Tientsin, but there's the same spirit of hustle—in spots. Frank J. Farina, manager of the Eden Theater, sends in an anniversary souvenir, twelve pages with stiff cover in brown. He writes:

> The idea naturally was to make a little noise during the dull Lenten season, although it was really our first anniversary. It proved a big success as all the extra expense of decorations, specials and programs was met by increased takings at the box office. It did not net anything financially, but I saw many new faces in the audience and hope to see them again, now that they have found their way in.

A two-reel feature every day was the business bringer, part of the expense, no doubt, being taken up by the advertising in the souvenir. This last might have been improved upon a little had more care been taken with the typographical display. The program was shoved to the top by the advertising and is not made to stand out as it should. One point rule is not heavy enough to cut the advertising from the program proper and both sides of the line would profit through the use of heavier rule, preferably the three on six point border. Apart from this, the souvenir, which carries a number of cuts of favorite players, is good. One point that we note is that the cuts are reductions of the Kraus poster cards. These are framed in the original and the uniform effect in the small cuts is decidedly good.

The anniversary idea—if you do not have too many in the course of a year, is an admirable excuse for a little extra hurrah, and will make business by bringing in new attendance.

We Do Not Believe It.

Here's a letter from a C. S. Johnson, Cuero, Texas, who says his drummer can keep off the pictures. It is pretty hard to believe that any drummer can keep his sticks quiet, especially in a death scene or something like that, but here is the statement:

> Have been reading your "Advertisers for Exhibitors" since that part of the paper was started and I have derived a great amount of good from it. There is never an issue that I don't get something out of it. I often wonder why more of the exhibitors down this way don't use the ideas advanced in it, but the most of them don't. They seem to think that if the box office is open every night and a few posters tacked up in the lobby, that is all that is needed. Personally, I can't see it that way.
> I am inclosing my first weekly program. It is the first time I have tackled anything quite as big as this and there is a lot that is wrong with it, but I believe it is an improvement on the "tonight" dodgers I have used heretofore. I will very much appreciate any suggestions you will make in regard to it. As you may note, I have my own printing plant and it is a big help in many ways. I print all my own dodgers, tickets, letterheads, blotters, and in fact, everything I need. It saves me a lot of money and at the same time I can get them out just when I want them and just the way I want them. I keep plenty of cuts on hand to brighten my printing up and use plenty of them.
> I have also found Hennegan's stock paper and dates a great help here. I keep a good stock on hand and as I have a small bill posting system of my own just for my theater, I get good results. For most of my features I usually post about five three-sheets and fifteen one-sheets around town in good locations.
>
> I believe I have the largest picture house in this part of the state as I seat 1,000 people. Have two Edison machines and a spot light in my booth. Use piano and drums for music and actually have a drummer that can keep from playing all the time. He cues the pictures in some cases, but not often. Am throwing my picture 95 feet and getting good results. Am inclosing a picture of my place and while it is not a very fine looking place it seems to be what they want down here. Is built for summer and winter as I can close it up for the cold weather and open it up in summer.

Cameraphone Clips.

The Pittsburg Cameraphone Bulletins contain some good clips in the recent issues. Valuable to any house is this pick-up from Lippincott's Magazine, to which the item should be credited, if you use it:

> There was once a Sordid, Commonplace Man whose wife went in heavily for Art, whereas the only kind of Pictures he cared anything about were those of the Moving Variety. In an effort to cultivate his esthetic tastes, she took him abroad and dragged him through the great Art Galleries, where he Embarrassed her by evincing a desire to pause before pictures such as "The Temptation of Aunt Sainthony," at which she wouldn't look except when there wasn't anybody around.
>
> Being of an Emotional Nature, and fond of a Good Cry, his wife used to stop and weep before all the Sad Pictures—of which there were only a few, being in this respect different from many of our American Exhibitions, in which their pictures are nearly all sad. At this her husband, who was entirely destitute of Temperament, scoffed rudely.
> "Oh, pickles!" he said, unsuavely. "The noise you are emitting sounds like the Soul of a Lost Whale. Do you really enjoy bellowing thus before the picture of a Poor Widow who was compelled to eat her children to keep from starving to death? As for me, I prefer the other kind of moving pictures."
>
> So saying, he wandered off and asked the Liveried Attendant to point out to him Leonardo da Vinci's "Mona Lisa," of which he had often heard; but the guard told him that it had become a Moving Picture. This, however, only served to confirm the husband's good opinion of his own Good Opinion in all matters pertaining to Art.
> And the husband is still Sordid and Commonplace, and he still likes moving pictures.—February Lippincott's.

Here is another item that will make fans by getting them interested in the trade marks. If you will get the various trade mark cuts and run them in your advertising and in the program, you'll be surprised to see how they help business by creating partisans.

> Trade-marks are becoming an important factor in the motion picture art and industry, and picture-playgoers are learning to size up and classify the films by their distinctive symbols of production—a fact which we have noted on various occasions, especially in the higher class electric theaters. This is as it should be. Let the film trade-mark become a veritable symbol of "Good Will," a guarantee of moral faith on the part of the producer analogous to a guarantee under the Pure Food and Drug Law, so that the mere exhibitor and observer may be absolved from all blame, and the responsibility for inferior or questionable production rest where it properly belongs. This will not only protect the public but the producer as well, and render his mark a valuable asset.

Makes a Record.

We have spoken of numerous page advertisements, but we think that the Queen theater, Dallas, Texas, holds the record with a double page advertisement, considering the size of the town and the cost of space. The Queen was recently opened, and apparently the management feels the need of "waking them up." Six cuts, of the organist, organ, house, musical director and some of the children seen in independent pictures give relief from the type, the text mostly being devoted to demonstrating that the Queen is in a class by itself. The line we like best is a small box at the bottom of the advertisement that reads:

Pictures are played at the Queen
according to their merit.
No Hurry.

If the management has the nerve to live up to that promise when the house is full and people in the lobby want to get in, the house will make a hit that will last.

It's hard to keep from telling the operator to "speed her up" when you are turning money away, but it will come harder when there is no money to turn away. It is a matter of common business honesty. When a patron pays you the price you charge for admission, the ticket issued carries with it the implied contract that you'll give a proper performance. If you rush the show through, you are cheating your patrons for you are depriving them of the enjoyment for which they have paid. You are cheating yourself because you are driving away trade.

It is better to have to turn people away than to have to coax them in later, no matter how it may look to you at the moment. Not long ago we commented on the speed of the performance in a first class house on a Sunday evening and the assistant manager apologetically explained that to run at regular speed would mean thirty or forty dollars. It never seemed to occur to him that he was imperiling a business of from $800 to $12,000 a week for the sake of $40, but that was precisely what he was doing. Some day it will be noticed that the early evening show on Sunday is not so well patronized that it has to be rushed through. Then it will be too late. We hope that the Queen sticks to its policy.

The PHOTOPLAYWRIGHT

New Circles.

AN application comes from Roswell, N. M., for the formation of a photoplay circle. The applicant writes that a number of copies of this paper are sold there and he thinks there must be others than himself who are interested in photoplay. If there are, send in your name and it will be forwarded.

A very successful writer in Los Angeles announces his willingness to form a circle in that center of the industry. We would like to see Los Angeles the next on the list. Come on.

The Double Climax.

We think that the Essanay subject, "The Girl in the Case," presents one of the best instances of the built-up climax that we have seen lately. The story is trifling and runs about four hundred feet too long, but we have to deal only with the climax. Gus Carney falls in love with an actress and offers her a diamond ring to fall in love with him. He has been joshed by a friend and when it develops that this friend is in love with Carney's niece, naturally the friend regrets that he made difficult the course of Carney's love, especially as the girl refuses to have anything to do with him until he squares things with her uncle. To get in right he persuades a policeman to make a fake arrest and he turns up to offer to get Carney free if he will promise a clear track with the niece. It goes against Carney's grain to make concession to the man who nearly got him in Dutch, but he is in a predicament and has no other course. Still full of resentment, the two men go to the hotel. This is the preliminary action. In the last scene the uncle gets a note that his niece has eloped with another man. Now he is full of glee. He is out of his scrape and still he does not have to give his niece to the man he dislikes. He is enjoying the laugh when in sweeps the actress and returns his ring. She, too, has married another. In an instant the new climax piles on top of the other and turns the tables. There is a second and heartier laugh and still another when the two men, both suffering defeat and finding a new bond in the double beating, link arms and go in search of a drink. It's a good example to study—the climax, not the search for the drink—of course.

One Reel and Three.

Lately there has been a decided tendency to talk of the possibilities of the multiple reel story and the ultimate extinction of the one reel drama and half-reel comedy. A man who has studied the business very carefully from certain angles declared only the other day that it was but a question of months when the one reel photoplay would be done away with entirely and its place be taken by the two, three and four part stories.

This is entirely an error. We believe that the growing importance of the multiple reel story will undoubtedly bring about a change in the policy of some houses and bring into existence a new class of theater where the performance commences at eight or half past and runs through to ten thirty or eleven without a repeat, but on the other hand the multiple reel cannot, in the very nature of its construction, wholly do away with the one part subjects. Theaters running continuously find the multiple reels a good attraction on the bill boards, but it is the possibility of dropping in and seeing a complete story in twenty minutes that attracts a large class of patrons and these will keep permanent the demand for short subjects. We do not enter a theater to see the last act of a play before the first and second and it is the same way with a multiple reel. It is all right if you get there when the picture is about to start, but much of the suspense and interest is killed if you see the climax before you get the commencement of the story. We are not worrying about the fate of the thousand foot story just yet.

Give Facts.

When you write this department asking information, please give all the facts in the case that we may be aided in forming judgment. When you write that you sent a story to "a certain company a few weeks ago," and it is not yet back, tell us what company. We do not expect a story back from Edison as quickly as from Vitagraph because the methods of handling scripts differ, but unless we know whether your script went to Vitagraph or Edison, how can we tell whether a script has been out too long or not long enough? The same applies with equal force in other matters.

Credit to Authors.

We print this letter from Benjamin Barondess, of Brooklyn, not because we are wholly in accordance with the scheme, but because he states his position plainly and sanely and because his standing as a writer of photoplays, entirely apart from the Vitagraph multiple reel that he speaks of, is such as to give force to his argument. He writes:

> Some time ago you invited correspondence on the question of credit to the photoplaywright. A few recent experiences of mine in this connection prompt me to take up your challenge. I submit them together with any ideas I may have for what they are worth.
> On the film of my "Chains of An Oath," I was given no credit. I determined to take the matter into my own hands. First, I applied to the local houses. As soon as I proved my authorship I was gladly promised aid. Accordingly, on the night my story was run a slide was thrown on the screen announcing that I had written the scenario of the film. I know that the audiences were just as gratified as I was. I next applied to the manager of the Royal, on Willoughby Street, a regular theater running films only. I was told that my request would be readily complied with except for the fact that the house contract with the General Film Exchange forbids the exhibitor from adding to, subtracting, or in any way changing the production of any film on the screen. If this is true, it presents a condition of affairs that calls for speedy amendment. The ordinary exhibitor wants to help and will if his attention is called to the facts.
> You state that you have hesitated to take any step that would force the companies to give recognition, it being your opinion that it is only a question of time before every company will give credit. I agree with you that there is nothing to be gained in attempting to coerce the producers to hasten the long delayed recognition of the photoplaywright. At the same time I don't see why the scenario writers cannot take matters into their own hands in other directions, until the companies wake up.
> The photoplaywrights have two avenues of approach. First, through the exhibitors, and second, through The Moving Picture World. I think it is proper for the author to apply to local theaters as I have done. The Exhibitors' League of America might aid by passing a resolution calling on its members to give help where it is desired. I hardly think the companies can take umbrage at this. But the best help the photoplaywright can have is through the columns of The Moving Picture World. Permit me to suggest some plan like this: In connection with the Photoplaywright Department you could run a column each week containing names of current films and their authors. The World prints a list of releases about two weeks ahead. Let each photoplaywright watch this list. As soon as he sees that his story is booked for release let him write in to The World. I don't pretend that the plan is flawless, by any means. I merely suggest it as a first step in the campaign for justice. Let others add to or amend it, or if possible propose a better plan. A working hypothesis will soon be arrived at. Won't you give the scheme publicity in the furtherance of justice? I want to add my need of praise to others for Edison, Lubin and Universal, for seeing the right thing and doing it. Sooner or later every studio will get on the band wagon. Here's to that great day!

Mr. Barondess' suggestion of a list in this department giving the author's names is interesting, but not practicable. This would interest the authors and but few others and it would require a lot more work than the results would warrant. The list would scarcely cover 50 per cent. of the names at best and no real good would be done. More than this, there would be interminable correspondence with those left out and those who think that their ideas have been stolen. When it becomes evident that there is a demand on the part of the public for the names of the authors or when it is made plain that the universal listing of names will attract the better class of writers, then the scheme will be feasible and will have not only our endorsement but more important the endorsement of the manufacturers as well. Until we can see some good purpose served by the use of authors' names, we will not retreat from our present position that we are satisfied if our name gets on the proper checks.

His Experience.

Now comes this letter from La Verne Allen, who slings type in a newspaper office. It is an interesting commentary on our attitude on schools. He writes:

> Seeing so many articles in The Moving Picture World about the correspondence schools, I wish to tell a little experience with them. The enclosed ad I set up in the office in which I work. I immediately answered the ad and was told I could have the course of ten lessons for $2 per lesson or $15 cash. Well I didn't have the $20 to spare at that time so didn't answer, some time later getting a follow-up letter with the same offer for $4 and the remainder of the $20 when I had sold $100 worth of plays. Now one of my friends took the course and up to date has sold none. I bought a book that I saw advertised and got a little idea from that and proceeded to work and have sold a few, very few plays. I have got the ideas, that is, some of the editors have been kind enough to tell me so and have asked for first readings, but I don't seem to get along very fast. I find that my greatest help is your photoplay column and I wish to say one thing that I think will benefit some and that is, clip the items on photoplay work from The Moving Picture World and paste them in a scrap book for reference. Lots of times when I have been up against it on something I have looked in my scrap book and found just what I want. It doesn't take up much room and I think it a valuable reference. The rejection slips that I have got lately are something fierce and by this same mail I am sending for one of your books on Technique of the Photoplay so that I can try and find out what is the matter with my scripts.

We have spoken already of the new scheme of reduction which gives you the course for $4 and gets an extra $16 in case you happen to be one of the ones who make good. It is not always the fault of the school that its pupils do not make good, but we do hold it against the schools that they will take money when the correspondence should show how hopeless it will be to expect the would-be student to make good. On the other hand the school gives practically nothing in the way of instruction beyond mere photoplay form, since it cannot teach what it does not know. If you can write photoplays you can write plays, but if you cannot, you cannot be taught how to, and you'll have to furnish the brains yourself.

Once More—Smith.

Russell E. Smith rises again to remark on the magazine and the manufacturer and as usual he starts something.

The point he makes is this:

> Suppose that I, as a fiction writer, write a photoplay which I sell to a company. I sell only the photoplay rights. This being the > case, I am at liberty to write a fiction story from the same plot and sell that, too. That is the situation.

>
> But here is what I would be up against.
> The film would be storyized by some picture magazine and possibly be published in the same month as my fiction version. Then what happens, both magazines being copyrighted?

If Mr. Smith reserves to himself the fiction rights to the photoplay he sells a company, that company has no right to grant to any of the motion picture story magazines the right to fictionize the film. If a magazine does fictionize the story without permission or if the manufacturer, having purchased only the film rights, permits it to be done into a story, then the holder of the fiction rights has cause for action against the picture story magazine, the manufacturer, or both. The fact that both magazines are copyrighted has nothing to do with the case. Copyright is merely the registration of a claim to protection, not the guarantee of that protection.

But if Mr. Smith sells a story to the Gumph Film Company, reserving the fiction rights, and the Gumph Company permits the Picture Fan Magazine to make it into a story, if Mr. Smith sues the Gumph Company, he is going to enter into a long course of litigation and simultaneously get himself in exceedingly bad, not alone with the Gumph Company but with most of the other manufacturers. In the end he may be able to collect a couple of hundred dollars' damages, but he will have lost the sale of photoplays to nine-tenths of the manufacturing companies.

Now let's take another angle. Mr. Smith writes a photoplay and sells it to the Gumph. He writes a story from the same plot and sells it to the Fiction Monthly. If he tells them that there is a photoplay along the same lines soon to be produced, the chances are that he will not make the sale. If he says nothing and the Fiction Monthly publishes the story and then finds that there is a film of the same plot they'll be likely to start something that will end in the discovery that Mr. Smith is the author of both and he will find himself unpopular with other publishers than the man who gets the profits of the Fiction Monthly.

Bannister Merwin tried writing a story and photoplay from the same plot, selling the photoplay to Edison and the story to Munsey. Several complaints were made to the editor of Munsey's that the story had been "stolen" from a film story. The Munsey people knew better because they had purchased the story from Mr. Merwin with the full knowledge that the Edison film would be released before the fiction story could be printed. It was done largely with the purpose of finding out just how the filming of a story affected its value as current fiction.

It was pretty well established that the visualization of a story after that story had been published, was regarded with approval if the story was announced as a visualization and not an original plot. It served to illustrate the fiction story. But the story drawn from a film is seldom regarded with favor save by the readers of the class of magazines of which the Motion Picture Story Magazine was the first, and even here we believe that the illustrations are wanted rather than the fiction form by a majority of the readers.

This form of eating your cake and having it, too, seems more or less impracticable. Some of the magazines will not accept a fiction story with the picture rights reserved because they purchase all rights on general principles. Others do not want the film to anticipate the plot. Most story release forms reserve all rights and the form states that any erasure renders the contract void. Mostly these releases are printed on voucher checks and the signature to the release is the endorsement on the check.

On the other hand most manufacturers similarly reserve all rights to the stories they purchase and will not purchase plays with reservations save through special arrangement and then only with favored authors.

We think that Mr. Smith, and the hundreds who think as he does, will do well to give up the idea of getting twice paid for the same idea and decide beforehand whether an idea will bring more money as a photoplay or in fiction form and convert it into the most profitable ware.

Differs With Smith.

Here is a sound letter from a clever writer who has made a name for himself in a specialty. He disagrees with Russell E. Smith in this fashion:

> That point about film credit on adapted short stories interested me. I think if Mr. Smith ever does have one "adapted" and filmed he'll be tickled to death to have his name left out of it. I was. It is funny that the companies seem so unwilling to make use of the writers. No director, or group of directors, can be expert in every phase of life which comes up for production. But they have the writer's knowledge of the particular subject in hand, right at their elbows, to use if they want it—yet in the majority of cases they throw it away. Magazine publishers and play-producers assume that the writer knows the technique of the subject he's writing about. If they doubt it they query him or get expert information. But the film director seems, in so many cases, to delight in taking the contrary view—to the man in the audience (disregarding the poor wight of a writer)—it looks like congenital perversity. I can't think of anything that would do more—in more and varied ways—to improve the tone of photoplays than a spirit of friendly co-operation between the producer and the writer. And the thing is up to the former—for the whole attitude, as I, a newcomer in the field, see it reflected in the trade journals and on the screens is "you be damned; we're more than sufficient to ourselves." And you know there isn't any soreheadedness in that —for the experience of my one script has been perfectly deserved.

But there is one thing that this writer does not understand, and that is studio conditions. The directors frequently work in such a rush that there is no time for correspondence, or even local inquiry, and at best the author is seldom likely to meet the director half way. In technicalities sometimes the author with a specialty can help, but more often he will hinder, because he will not meet the director half way.

There are some bull-headed directors who will do nothing to raise a friendly feeling between himself and the author. He resents interference in the studio even, but on the other hand the director works from the camera point of view; the author regards the narrative as of greater importance, and neither sympathizes with each other. We think in the grand average that the author is more apt to hurt than help.

On the other hand, we are strong for the original Smith proposition that if an author is also an expert photoplaywright he should be allowed to visualize his own story. That is a point not touched in this letter. We repeat it merely because it should be repeated.

What a Story Is.

Just remember when you are writing a story that it is not what you think is a story, but what the editor and producer think is a story that is going to be taken. Of course, you think it is a story or you would not have written it, but unless you can get an editor and a producer to look at it in the same light you do not make a sale.

Now, most producers and editors are looking for stories, but they want real stories, and they'll not share your prejudice in favor of your particular script. They want something really good, something with a tang to it, and if yours is not that sort of a story, no matter how good you may think it, it will not make a sale.

Hundreds of writers each week put down a string of incidents and proudly send out their "story" that really isn't a story at all. There is plenty of action, and it is all about the same people, but we've seen patent medicine testimonials that read far more interestingly than some of these stories, because the human note was sounded, and mostly the note of human interest is lacking in the stories that we are thinking of now. There may be thirty or forty scenes, many of them more or less interesting in themselves if they were connected up with what went before and what will come after, but the incidents are detached; they lack relationship to each other. There is no suspense, no uncertainty as to the outcome. It is just a lot of disconnected incident, a jumble of events, and yet between twelve and fifteen hundred dollars are wasted each year in sending around stuff that has no chance of a sale. Why not wait until you write a good one?

Cines Prize Contest.

The Cines Company, of Rome, sends the following announcement:

> GREAT INTERNATIONAL DRAMATIC CONTEST ARRANGED BY THE CINES SOCIETY OF ROME.
> Actuated by a noble desire to constantly increase the moral worth and artistic perfection of kinematography, the Cines Society has decided upon a great contest for kinematograph dramas. To this end it has announced five great prizes, the first of which is fixed at 25,000 francs. The conditions of this contest will be announced shortly, likewise the names of the members of the board of judges. Among the latter will be the most influential and conspicuous names in the world of art and literature. This highly laudable step on the part of the Cines Society will no doubt interest not only the public, but all literary circles, by reason of its lofty aim, as well as the importance of the proposed awards.

Inquiries,

NOTE—No questions can be replied to by mail. Look for your answers here. A list of addresses to which photoplays may be sent will be supplied on receipt of a STAMPED AND ADDRESSED ENVELOPE.

M. P. M.—"Technique of the Photoplay" will give you correct photoplay form. But no matter how correct the form, you must also have an idea. Don't overlook that.

K. L. D.—In "A Shadow of the Past," Miss Anna Little was Bill's wife, who was later known as Gertrude Baker. Richard Stanton was Bill and J. B. Sherry the Colonel.

W. M. B.—Robert Herron was the boy in "The Tender Hearted Boy." Miss Sweet was the girl in "Three Friends." Questions about tall thin girls in pictures two years old are barred. Keep up to date. We've answered that Cinderella question about eight times, and we are on strike.

R. W. R.—Henry D. Carey was Raffles in "A Chance Deception," but the Biograph Identifier confesses himself stumped at his wife.

C. P. D.—The slip means that the company doesn't want the script. It does not matter particularly whether it was turned down by an editor, or a producer, does it, so long as they do not take it? In the company mentioned all of the directors, in conference, turn down the story.

G. and F.—No reply to your first question is available. Richard Stanton was John Bell in "The Wheels of Destiny." Mildred Harris was Mildred in the same film. Kay-Bee and Broncho films are made in Los Angeles. We cannot tell if the actor named is going to stay with his present company or not. We are an inquiry editor; not a fortune teller.

H. A. B.—You most assuredly would have trouble with the Board of Censors with your plot if it ever got that far. It does not matter how they get the child; if they detain her, it is kidnapping.

MAY BELL—Sorry, but we must positively decline to identify the "dark-haired gent with the large nose." The Butler was Harry Northrup. Frank Lewis was Joseph Baker.

C. E. H.—We fail to find record of the title you mention.

RUBENA—William Humphries was the Russian Peasant. He has written a large number of photoplays, a long time ago and lately.

BETTINA—The book costs twenty-five cents for one copy. Which girl does your second question refer to? "The girl" is too vague.

H. C. T.—It is against the practise of this department to tell whether a scene is actual or studio made. What difference does it make, so long as it is convincing?

Photoplay Writing.

Projection Department

Edited by F. H. RICHARDSON

It Might Pay Here.

THE older readers of the department will remember that something like three years ago, I discussed the feasibility of using automobile trucks for a travelling show and said I believed the plan was entirely practical, and would be a money maker.

Over in France they are doing that very thing now. The show is carried by three large auto trucks, one of which carries two tents, one of which seats something like five hundred and the other about double that capacity, the large tent only being used where audiences of quite good size are expected. The second truck is used as living quarters for the showman and his assistants, while the third houses the machine, seats, etc.

One of the truck engines supplies power for the generator mounted therein, supplying current to the machine, and for incandescent lights inside and outside the tent. This plan is, in my judgment, entirely practical, and I believe, if rightly managed, in some sections of this country it could be made to produce big money, notwithstanding the expense attached to that kind of a proposition.

Ships That Pass in the Night.

I presume that you will know of the famous story, "Ships That Pass in the Night.". Well, we here in New York have quite a story of operators that do not pass in the day time, or night either. During the year 1912 there were 1943 applications for moving picture operator licenses. Of this number 388 did not appear for examination, 1581 were rejected as not competent and 362 were passed. In other words, out of the total of 1943 examined only 362 were found competent and given license. This speaks well for the work of the examining board. In the past, there have been many operators licensed who were, to all intents and purposes, ignorant of electrical action as well as projection. The New York board does not examine the operator regarding his proficiency in projection, but only in matters electrical. If the board extended its operations to projection matters it would be interesting to know how many would get by. I have a very grave suspicion that the already tremendous percentage of failures would at least be very largely augmented.

In New York City, once an operator has passed he is ordinarily not called upon for re-examination except when he gets into trouble. If he steers clear of actual trouble; that is to say, has no fire and is not caught directly violating the rules or the law, his card is renewed from year to year without further examination. In view of the fact of the rather strenuous examination now being conducted, I am afraid that, if all the old operators were called up for re-examination, there would be very good reason for consternation on the part of both managers and operators in this city. I think there might be either one of two things happen, viz.: a lot of theaters would have to close down from lack of operators or there would be an influx of competent men from other cities.

Light Trouble.

Mr. Wallace Potter, Springfield, Oregon, writes:

> We are using two Edison model B machines, projecting a 13½ foot picture at 75 feet, using about 25 amperes d. c. through a Mercury Arc Rectifier. We are using ⅝ Bio Carbons at the top, and ½ inch solid Arco carbons at the bottom. When the above amperage is used the light is nice and steady, but when raised above this the current is very unsteady and the arc seems to travel around the carbons. What would you suggest? Would you recommend a two or three winged shutter for the Edison model B?

The only thing I can suggest is that the carbons are not what they should be. Perhaps the core of the upper carbon is not good. If any brother has had similar trouble when using a rectifier, will he please write to Mr. Potter, The Bell Theater, Springfield, Oregon. Personally, with an Edison model B, I would prefer a two winged shutter, I think.

New License Law.

Mr. Oscar Brown, Escanaba, Mich., writes:

> Our city has just passed an ordinance, taking effect in 20 days, that all motion picture machine operators must be licensed. We have four picture houses, three of them employing two operators and the other, only one. The first three have two machines each. Heretofore they have only had boys, fourteen to sixteen years old, operating the machines, paying them $4.00 to $5.00 per week. Under the new law they must be twenty years of age and have passed examination before the electrician of the fire department. This official knows nothing about motion picture work or machines. Inasmuch as I ran a Motiograph for a year, and am myself at present in the city fire department, I offered to write you and ask you to send me a list of examination questions and answers. The city does not lay out any specified examination, the intention being simply to compel the managers to employ competent operators.

Now here is something I would really like to be of assistance in, were it practical, but it is not. I could submit you a list of questions and give you the answers thereto, but this would be highly unfair, since very often the knowledge a man has is more nearly determined by his manner of answering a thing than by exactly what he says. Then too, if I give you a list of questions and answers, as soon as they were sprung on the first two or three applicants they would be public property and all the rest would be prepared to buck the line. I would advise the fire department electrician to have you present and, if possible, to select some other operator whom he knows to be competent, and to just ask the men plain, common sense questions. As a matter of fact, the greater part of the examination, as usually given by the authorities, is on the electrical end of things. For instance, give a man a piece of wire and ask him what size it is. Ask him how he knows what size it is. Ask him if he has a wire gauge, and if he has not, ask him what one looks like, and how it is used. Give him a piece of asbestos covered stranded wire and ask him to explain how he would determine its carrying capacity. Ask him what a rheostat is for and how it operates. Have him sketch a series and multiple connection and explain the effect of each. Have him explain the principle of a transformer and tell you how it operates, and why a compensarc or economizer delivers different amperage on different contacts. Ask him what the shutter of a projection machine is for, and why it has more than one blade. I would suggest that the fire department electrician immediately order, from the Moving Picture World, a copy of the hand book, price $2.50. I think a study of that will go a long ways towards enabling him to conduct an intelligent examination.

Crater Projection.

Messrs. Shields & Van Buren, Los Banos, Calif., contribute the following:

> In February 8th issue I note that Springfield, Ohio, wants a peep-hole in the front of his lamp house so that he can obtain the side line of his carbons. If he will locate a clear spot on the wall or ceiling of the operating room, a little to the left of his upper magazine, and punch a nail hole in the lamp house as nearly as possible in line with the carbon crater and the spot selected when the crater is in operating position, drill another hole in the lamp house near the edge to receive a stove bolt to hold a wire frame to receive a half of a broken condensing lens, placing the latter in front of the nail hole with the flat side to the light and square with the same, he will have the exact image of his carbon craters, from every angle, projected on the wall, or ceiling, as the case may be. He can thus always tell exactly how far apart his carbons are and it is a constant reminder when the light needs adjusting. As you do not personally favor the home made screen I am a little timid of sending my method of preparing one, but I am nevertheless positive that I can improve the picture in a good many houses by almost 50%. I did it in our house, and it is no brush-marked affair either. If this gets by I will perhaps come again, for, considering all of the good we get out of the projection department, it would seem that each one should help all he can.

I am not sure, whether your scheme would be any better than the hole-in-the-side-of-the-lamphouse so often described in this department. It does not seem to me as if you could see the condition of the crater quite so well by your plan though you might be able to tell about the side lining of the carbons better. I do not favor home made screens for the simple reason that the screen is an exceedingly important factor in the general scheme of projection, and it is much more likely that a good result will be had if it is prepared by men who have made a study of that particular thing. You are perfectly right in saying that each one should help all he can by contributing ideas to the department. Come again.

Much Pleased.

Mr. Tony J. Anthony, Bickwell, Ind., says:

> The new hand book is certainly just the thing for the moving picture man, I find it a marvel of combined theory and practice, well calculated to aid one in the conduct of a paying business, or to put a poor one on a better and paying basis.

For your words of commendation, please accept our thanks.

From Racine, Wis.

Mr. Jess Bowman, Racine, Wis., discourses thusly:

> Just a line from the City of Racine to let you know we are on the map. Projection in this city is good. It seems to me all the boys are trying to excel each other in projection, and they are willing workers too. There is good material here to form a local as we have eleven picture theaters, one vaudeville house and an opera house, all doing good business and putting up fine pictures. While working in Milwaukee, I met some of the members of Milwaukee Local Union No. 164. They are as polite and accommodating men as one would care to meet. Racine is an Independent town. Only one house runs Licensed film, viz.: Racine Orpheum Co. Each house has a three-piece orchestra consisting of a violin, piano and drummer. Three reels constitute a show, except one house which runs four. I am using a Power's Six, > which is giving excellent satisfaction. Have a General Electric Mercury Arc Rectifier, and have had no trouble with it. I ran one once before, nine months without changing tubes. My operating room is 10 x 10 with 10 foot ceiling. I just received my copy of the new hand book. I expect to be in New York some time this summer and hope to meet you in person.

We shall be glad to see you brother Bowman. It is a pleasure to us to hear reports of good projection. I like to hear that the men are "trying to excel each other." Friendly rivalry is highly beneficial, both to the men themselves and to the business as a whole. I would suggest to the Racine men that, for a good many reasons, it would be good for them to form a local. There is much benefit to be had through such action, from any and every point of view. The Racine managers need not fear the advent of a local union; in fact they will find that a rightly conducted union will in the end benefit them as well as the men.

Cutting Film.

Mr. William Hoffmann, Kewanee, Ill., contributes the following idea:

> Just a little suggestion to lighten the burden of operators. What I say refers to the square upper magazine of the Power's machine. With a three-cornered file cut a slot on each side of the hook which holds the door latch, starting at the inner right angled corner and extending downward and slightly outward in such a way that the upper ends of the cut meet with a sharp edge, either at or slightly below the inner corner. This is the most simple way I have been able to devise to cut off the ragged ends of a film leader. Trimming the end in time will many times save the leader, where otherwise piece after piece would be torn off. The cut is not quite as smooth as with scissors, but it is a lot better than when torn across by hand.

I have not a Power's magazine at hand, therefore cannot trace this idea out, but presume it is of value. It is passed on to our readers for their consideration.

Light Trouble.

Desplaines, Ill., writes:

> I must disagree with Mr. Jenkins, of La Grange, Ga., about small town projection. Our little city has only 3,200 population, but believe me, the projection must be A1, else the people will go to Chicago, which is but a thirty-five minute ride. I use 60 amperes, 220 volt a. c., through a Ft. Wayne Compensarc, projecting a 12½ foot picture 72 feet. Have a 6½ and one 7½ condenser and a 3½ inch objective lens. We have two new Simplex machines with a B. & H. Lamp house is 12½ inches from the aperture.

You are evidently speaking of the back focus, Desplaines. Your objective lens is about 5 inches e. f. You should use two 7½ condensers. You will find the difference between e. f. and b. f. fully explained in the last paragraph of page 336 of the Hand Book. Your double spot may be due to (a) wrong set of carbons. See page 204 to 212 of Hand Book. (b) to the condensing lenses not setting parallel with each other. (c) condensing lenses too far apart. I think with the aid of the Hand Book, which you now have, you will be able to dope this all out and get rid of your trouble.

Higher Priced Projectors.

S. M. Farrar, manager of the Casino Theater, Eldorado, Ill., who is also a breeder of fine dogs, writes as follows:

> I have a well equipped house for a small town. I use an Edison Model B Projector. It is a great machine, with the single exception that after a year's use the back lash of the shutter is very bad, so that, unless the operator is a man who thoroughly understands the setting of the shutter, he cannot get all the travel ghost out, and there is where the crank turner is shown up. Almost anyone can operate a new machine with fairly good results, but it takes a real operator to keep a machine in first class condition. In connection with this I wish to say that in my opinion projection machines will never be materially improved (and we all know there is plenty of room for improvement, both in quality and workmanship), until their price is advanced. I will be more than pleased to see some company make a machine to sell for about $400.00. It will be a long step towards perfect projection. I received a copy of the new Hand Book last week, and to use the language of the street, it "delivers the goods." I only wish you had gone further, made it three times its present size and put the price at $5.00 or more. You must have spent many a night burning the midnight oil in the preparation of this book.

The picture of that mutt on your dog circular looks like the real goods. Would not mind owning one like him myself. I thoroughly agree with you that projection machines should sell for $400.00. I have made this same statement in the Department several times. As to the back lash, that is due to the wear in the gears, which should be replaced. They run at high speed and in a year's time will wear considerably. Many thanks for your very kind words of commendation. May we continue to merit your approval. There are few who realize the amount of work I did on that book, and I do not care to go through the experience again in a hurry.

Arc Hisses.

Mr. Thomas Scott, Jacksonville, Ill., sets forth his difficulty as follows:

> Our current is 110 V. 60 cycle A. C. through G. E. Murcury Arc Rectifier. Have rectifier set at 40 amperes. When I start the arc it hisses like ten thousand snakes together and will not settle down until carbons have been frozen, and even then they refuse to feed steadily. Have examined all connections thoroughly and find them O. K. Have tried all kinds of carbons and get the best results from ¾ Bio cored above and ⅝ hard below. Lower carbon tits continually. Am using Power's 6 and Power's 6A, about 12 x 14 picture at 72 feet. What's the answer?

The fact that a tit forms on your lower carbon, and the further fact that the arc hisses is evidence that you carry your arc too short. So far as I can see that is the answer to the whole proposition. Study carbon setting, pages 204 to 212 of the handbook, and carry a longer arc. That is all the suggestion I can make, and it will do the business if you have set things forth correctly, provided your rectifier is delivering the amperage it is supposed to. Your ⅝ and ½ inch carbon combination is correct.

Size of Room.

Georgetown, Del., asks:

> Could a room 19 by 80 feet, having an 11 foot ceiling, be used for a moving picture theater hall? Would this height of ceiling allow the putting in of an elevated floor, presuming a picture 8½ by 10½ feet?

Not with any degree of satisfaction. A picture 8½ feet deep would bring you within three feet of the floor. If you set your projector right up against the ceiling you would still have to place the front row of seats pretty well back, or the heads of the audience, when coming into or leaving the front seats, would interfere in the light. You can easily figure things out for yourself. Draw an elevation of the room, to scale. Draw a straight line from a point 18 inches from the ceiling (about as close as you can get the projection lens to the ceiling) at the rear end of the hall, where the lens will be, to the bottom of the screen, and then see where that line comes within 6 feet of the floor, which point may be made the location of the front row of seats. You could slope the floor so that it would be brought within 6 feet of the light ray, but not any more. Such a room is far from ideal for the purpose of a moving picture theater hall. It is both too narrow and the ceiling too low.

A Rival to Mr. Edison.

Mr. R. N. Abbey sends in the following concerning what seems to be a Missouri Genius. If even half of it is fact, the man he writes of is truly a wonder. Mr. Abbey's letter reads:

> I have seen some picture theaters, nearly every one in twenty odd states, but for downright genius and determination and successful application of progressiveness we must give the bun to Mr. E. E. Wagner, owner, etc., of the Bijou Theater, Lamar, Missouri, and it is the "etc." that we have to sit up and take notice of. Lamar has a population of about 2500. The Wagner family is composed of Mr. and Mrs. Wagner and two babies. His theater is rather unpretentious in its proportions and appointments, yet it is, I dare say, one of the most marvelously equipped houses in all the world. Mrs. Wagner presides in the ticket office and Mr. Wagner in the operating booth, which includes the entire force. The baby Wagners have their swinging beds and amusements in the ticket office. The operating room holds the key to the marvel. It is a conglomeration; a net work of wires, cords, levers, push buttons, switches and apparatus that would mystify Mr. Edison himself. Every conceivable "effect" necessary to moving pictures is produced by Mr. Wagner from his operating room, by pulling a cord, pressing a button, throwing a switch or lever or "cutting in" this or that apparatus.
> His machines are run by motor, with a self-made appliance regulating speed as desired. With the same motor force he runs his rewind and a whirling light of 20 lamps, in front of the theater. He has an automatic attachment which provides tension as required to his machine take up, thus avoiding the slippage and friction which is so productive of rain marks, especially on the first and last parts of all films. His slide carrier is about 5 feet long and he has only to slip the carrier along as occasion requires. He has a complex "tinting" contrivance by which he can throw one, two, three or four tints on a single picture, blending the tints to color water, sky, landscape, etc., etc. Made his own dissolving stereopticon. He, by throwing a switch, stops motor and machine and throws a safety bonnet over the aperture. Also he controls every light in and about the theater individually, in sections, or all together. He controls every fan in the same way. In his ticket office and booth he uses palm leaf fans, controlled and regulated in some way so that they can be speeded to produce a gentle zephyr or a regular whirl-wind, as desired.
> In front of his theater is a horn some ten feet long and inside of this a large motor boat horn. For a ballyhoo he throws a lever and this horn tells the population, "next show will start in a few moments." The people know the signal and promptly get in line. Mr. Wagner has ten doors and windows in his theater and he can open and close every one of them from the operating room. His electric piano sets on a wheel truck which rests on a turn table that is suspended from the ceiling and is so nicely balanced that he can turn it front or back to audience as desired or whirl it round and round. In case of fire he could drop the truck handle and pull it into the street. It is one of those orchestration affairs, but has been so worked over by himself that he can by pulling certain cords in the operating room cause it to play soft and low, down to a mere whisper, or swell with fullest power; then another cord, music stops; another, big drum, as desired; another, small drum as desired; another, horn as desired; another, xylophone; regulating speed and volume of sound of each separately or all together. He uses two talking machines on the stage and handles them, rewinds, sets and operates them from operating room, working them in with the pictures, vocal and instrumental music, and "talking picture" effects. He runs 18 records with one winding of the gramophone, which is done by hand, but everything else is done in the operating room, 106 feet away by pulling wires, etc. He pulls different cords and gets a dog bark, big dog, little dog, dogs fighting, dogs on trail, and "treed"; auto horn, steamboat whistle; railroad whistle, bell, train crossing trestle, "approaching" starting and departing; rain, wind, thunder, lightning, fire bell; fire engine; horses all gaits; street car and bell; all sorts of shooting from pistol to musketry, > cannonading, separately and altogether. And by an artful arrangement of Tungsten lights and red reflectors he shows the red flash of the "guns." Indian tom-toms, men and women "shouting," baby crying, furniture, crockery, etc., breaking; explosions and all sorts of sounds incident to pictures, all on or about the stage. He has 3 curtains on his stage, including the screen, and two sets of wings. He raises and lowers and shifts all these by pulling cords from his operating room. Every conceivable thing seems to be provided for. When his theater is crowded he has only to press a button and a "green" light indicates what rows have vacant seats, therefore, no ushers are necessary. A transparent electric lighted clock, of his own arrangement, indicates the time. He regulates ventilation and temperature from operating room. Mr. Wagner makes his own light, feeds engine and heats theater with natural gas at $5.00 a month. He is a camera fiend and don't mind a ten mile walk or twenty mile drive for an interesting slide, of which he has shown thousands. His baby girl, the pet of the town, has been photographed in every imaginable posture. His workshop back of the stage is a fully equipped machine shop, blacksmith, cabinet, carpenter, tin shop, etc. He is an inventive genius, and a clever workman, a careful manager, close observer, and a stickler for the proper "effects" for every picture.

If all this is true, Mr. Wagner is certainly something more than a genius. We would be glad to have a somewhat detailed description of his methods of accomplishing these wonders. May we have the pleasure of hearing from you on this subject, brother Wagner. Surely such a system would not only require years to evolve and construct, assuming it could be done at all, and would be enormously complicated. I would especially like to know the details of that take up tension equalizer.

Friend Day Wears a Smile.

Brother Blaine Day, Sherman, Texas, writes:

> They say "everything comes to him who waits," and I have got mine at last. The Jewel Theater, Mr. J. B. Wilson, owner and manager, closes down March 1st to build a first-class theater, the finest in North Texas. The operating room will be of concrete, 12 x 9 feet with a 7½ foot ceiling, with one entrance door and another leading out of the operating room into the repair shop. There will be two windows opening on the street and the observation port 12 x 16 inches. The projectors will be two Power's 6A machines, which will be imbedded 2 inches into the concrete floor to make them solid. The lens will be on a level with the curtain, and there will be no downward slant of the projection. And last, but not least, there will be a vent flue 3 feet in diameter through the roof; also I am not going to have to climb a rope ladder to get into the operating room. When complete, you have a special invitation from both myself and the manager to look us over, and we will show you a picture on a white plaster screen that you will admit is as good as the best. Will send you a picture of the operating room when it is done.

Congratulations, brother Day, I wish every theater had an operating room like that. The operators themselves, however, are not doing their duty in this matter as well as one could wish. They keep talking about "coops." I am trying to get them operating rooms, but they seem to prefer a cracker box. At least they continue to talk about booth, booth, booth, and, as I have told them time and again, as long as you continue to fill the managers' mind up with the term "booth," he is more than likely to build you one.

A Pennsylvania Case.

Mr. Fred Hoffregen, New York City, comments on the case of the Pennsylvania assistant operator who was blacklisted by the manager to the effect that in his opinion the operator who was in charge, and therefore responsible, should be discharged for neglecting his work, and the assistant, if employed only as assistant, should be immediately reinstated. The brother then writes at length and most interestingly on the general phases of operating. I wish I had room to give his letter in its entirety, but it is impossible. I fully agree with his conclusion in regard to Pennsylvania.

Ft. Worth Case Again.

Mr. E. C. Harman, Vancouver, Wash., comments on the Ft. Worth screen question. He says that in the first place Ft. Worth must have a very peculiar aperture to get a 12 x 14 picture, in which view he is entirely correct. His conclusion is that the aluminum screen will require at least 15 per cent. more light or a total of 48 amperes as against 42 for the mirror screen. He says that the shutter of the machines would have to be taken into consideration, which is correct. He suggests using an ordinary two foot rule or a straight piece of wood 6 inches long to line the carbons sidewise. This would only be correct when using upper and lower carbons of the same size. If the ½ inch ⅝ combination were used it would not work. Brother Harman had a letter in the February 1st issue, and it was in error credited to Vancouver, B. C. Our apologies. Mistakes will occur in the best regulated families.

W. S. Turnpaugh Replies.

On page 462, February 1st issue, a Ft. Worth correspondent says:

> Recently a correspondent stated he had for years picked his machine with an eye to the intermittent speed. Then why did he cause four ——— projectors to be purchased in place of four ——— machines, and order half a hundred dollars' worth of parts to get them ousted?

Friend Turnpaugh is entitled to space to reply to this, and here is his answer:

> When a man is being scalped by some "behind-the-brush artist" he likes to say a word in his own behalf. Enclosed find statement from Mr. R. A. Healy, manager and part owner of the most modern photoplay house in our city, the one where I work, wherein he states his reasons for purchasing the machines named instead of those of the other make I asked him to buy. The ——— Company can corroborate the matter, because I wrote them asking them to place their machines with the Hippodrome Amusement Company, who purchased the last two of the machines we now have, and from him Mr. Healy bought them. These machines were purchased against my wishes. I like them to run all right, but love the ——— when it comes to putting on a real flickerless picture. I could say considerably more, but the man who wrote is a member of the same union that I am, and I do not wish to stir up controversy.

Mr. Healy's letter fully corroborates Mr. Turnpaugh's statement. After dealing with that matter he says, in part:

> Mr. Walter Turnpaugh is one of Ft. Worth's most able operators and electricians. He has been in my employ for two years and has always consistently favored the ——— machines.

I dislike to print this matter, as I do not wish to be understood as entering into any controversy as between the different makes of projectors. I am, however, practically obliged to give space, in this instance, in justice to an old correspondent.

License Wanted.

Mt. Morris, N. Y., asks:

> Have been running Power's 5 for more than a year, obtaining good results. Will you please tell me where I can get an operator's license?

You will have to go to some city where operators are licensed, Mt. Morris, such as New York, for instance, put in an application and take the examination. If found competent you will secure a license, but it will only be of value to you in the city in which it is issued. I think you had better be satisfied as you are unless you are very sure you can pass the examination.

Tightening Cloth Screen.

Dawson Bros., owners and managers of Palace Theater, Waseca, Minn., writes:

> We note, in a recent issue a line to the effect that you want to know what the operators' and managers think of the handbook. If there was anything the matter with it you would have heard from them ere this. The fact of the matter is that it could not be more complete. We believe that it covers the troubles of the operator in every respect, and no operator, or even crank turner should be without it. We are always looking for friendly hints pertaining to the business, and though we cannot personally thank the many contributors to the department, we take this method of now doing so. Have you ever noticed the condition of some cloth screens, dirty or smoked-up, and perhaps full of dents and creases. It seems as though the operator pays little or no attention to his projection surface, though it is of the utmost importance from his point of view. Our screen is in a frame, with tighteners arranged so that it may be stretched as tight as a drum. But occasionally something may come in contact with it, making a bulge or dent which cannot be thus taken out. The remedy is, have someone hold a flat board on the front side of the screen, and at the back hold a dampened cloth against it, running a hot flatiron against the cloth. The steam will take up a bad bulge, or dent, and not effect the front side in the least. To remove dirt or smoke from the screen, ask mother or wife for a loaf of fresh made bread, which must still be warm, and, removing the inside of the loaf knead it back into dough. Rub the screen gently with this dough and it will remove all of the dirt and smoke. Keep kneading the dough as you work, so as to keep it soft.

We are obliged to you for the dough idea, but would suggest that a better scheme, where a cloth screen is used, is, as has been before suggested in this department, and as is set forth in the last paragraph of page 336 of the handbook, that one have two screens, and have one laundered about every two weeks. The method of taking out the dirt is of value, however. It is unique, and I have no doubt effective. You are absolutely correct in saying that the operators pay far too little attention to the condition of their screens. They cannot produce good results without a high-class surface to do it on.

Painted Screen.

Mr. A. W. Ballenger, the Dean Theater, York, Neb., writes:

> Have delayed acknowledging receipt of handbook because I have been busy getting a few of the good things it contains worked into my mind. The book deserves more than you have ever said for it. I know I had my money's worth inside of an hour after I received it. I hope all the boys get one, for it will surely help anyone. I am running a Simplex, installed about a month ago, getting good results. Have not broken a condenser in a long time. Made a screen after the instructions set forth in the handbook, except that I used a preparation known as "Sani-Flat." It is a pure white, with no gloss. Put four coats of this on muslin which I at first sized with white glue and English whiting. There is not a wrinkle in the screen, which is pretty fair, considering that it has to be raised and lowered to accommodate vaudeville. Whether it is the machine or the screen I am not prepared to say, but there is a minimum of flicker, and our front seats fill up almost as readily as the center or back ones. Our operating room has asbestos board walls and ceiling, with a large vent out to the open air, tin floor and asbestos board for port covers. The room is suspended from ceiling and braced to floor with iron pillar under the place where the machine sets, so that the machine is steady and solid as a rock. I am one of the owners and do my own operating.

I take it that Sani-Flat is some kind of a patent paint. That kind of a screen would produce a minimum of flicker. That is to say, even with a flickering machine it would reduce the trouble to the lowest limit. I see by your letterhead that the Dean "is not a store show." The store show is, except in the smaller towns, in the afternoon of its existence, and I, for one, am glad of it.

That Word "Booth."

Mr. O. J. Chandler, owner and manager of the Palace Theater, Peru, Ind., writes:

> Let me call attention to page 770, February 22d issue, in which an elaborate write-up of the Liberty Theater, Salt Lake City, is given. Think of a man building a $150,000 moving picture theater and putting his projection machine in a "booth"! It would seem that he would need an operating room in a house of that kind. A "booth" is a place about two feet by three feet in size, where you cast your ballots.

Yes, neighbor Chandler, and it is defined by Webster as a rude shelter built of boughs. Your point is well taken. We are probably fortunate, however, that Mr. Blaisdell, who wrote the article in question, did not call it a "cage," "box" or "coop." Let us be thankful for small favors.

Operating Room Light.

Mr. B. Shattuck, Waverly, N. Y., writes:

> I noticed on page 777, February 22d issue, Mr. Wm. Lorence, New York City, gives his method of switching on and off his incandescent light from inside or outside the room; also your comment that it would be in violation of the underwriters' rules. This phase of the matter can be overcome by the use of three-way switches, wired the same as the diagram shown on page 777. I am an electrician and install a good many such switches on hall light circuits in dwellings; therefore I know they comply with the underwriters' rules.

Many thanks, friend Shattuck, for the information contained in your letter. I do not know exactly what kind of a switch you refer to, but presume others will.

Triumph of the Silent Players.

Mr. Geo. L. Wilson who is on the road with a production, writes:

> I had the good fortune to pay the city of Parkersburg, W. Va., with the Bernhardt "Queen Elizabeth" films, and to show you the growth of the motion picture in the favor of the American people, I played the Camden Theater. This house was constructed ten years ago as a "legit." theater, but was not a success. The theatrical syndicate was forced to buy the opposition house and close the Camden, which remained in silence, dust and darkness for two years. Recently it was leased by the Robinson Amusement Company and opened with Association service, no vaudeville, and is playing to capacity business. It is one of the classiest houses in the state. It cost over $100,000, and seats 1,500 people. It is in charge of the genial Charlie Bippus, an old "legit." manager. It is his first venture into the realm of the silent player, and he has met with big success. At Clarksburg, W. Va., the competition of the moving picture theater is so hard on the saloon that the latter is giving free pictures. The saloon keeper could not get a picture license except as a free proposition. Verily, this makes plain how the uplift of the pictures deprives the saloon of its nickels. Received the new handbook and must congratulate you on the production of such a complete, concise, up-to-the-minute treatise on the motion picture industry in all its branches. It certainly should be in every theater in the country and be carefully studied by all operators.

As you say, brother Wilson, the fact that the saloon was forced to give free pictures in order to hold its trade against the moving picture theater speaks well for the latter. It does not, however, speak well for the intelligence of the city officials, who, while recognizing the evil of the proposition by refusing the saloon keeper's money for a pay-show license, were willing to grant him free permission to boost the sale of his wares through the medium of moving pictures.

Likes the Book.

Mr. E. Jones, 3414 N. Halstead Street, Chicago, Ill., writes, ordering one of the blow torches and saying:

> Last month I bought a copy of your hand book in the Chicago branch of the World. Some book? Yes. I would not take twice what I paid for it.

Excellent Announcement Slide.

Mr. W. E. Busha, manager of the Star Theater, Belvidere, Ill., writes:

> This is my first dip into the department and I hope you like it. I have been at the silent end for several years. Am running a house of my own now seating 290. Have Power's 6A, B. & A. compensarc, Radium Gold fibre screen, and project a 12 foot picture at 78 feet as clear as a bell. I noticed, in a recent issue, that a brother inquired about transparent enamel he noticed on a slide. I am sending under separate cover one that is "home grown." How does it look? After trying it out, wash the color off and try it again and see how the letters stand out. My own dope; gum arabic and indian red. In February 22nd issue I noticed and tried out the Bon Ami scheme, but it lets through too much light to suit me, though otherwise it was O. K.

The slide submitted is a cover glass coated, presumably, with a mixture of gum arabic and Indian red, which makes a completely opaque coating. In this brother Busha has written, with a sharp, pointed instrument, the wording, and on the outside of one side he has, with different colored water color paints or dyes painted over the lettering and lining. It certainly makes a very neat slide, if carefully done. But after all I still favor typewriting on gelatin as being the handiest, cheapest and in every way most practical. The outfit furnished by the Utility Transparency Company (see advertising pages), is that kind of a proposition and it works well. Glad to have you with us brother Busha. Come again.

Double Spot Remedy.

Mr. Wm. Reed, Booneville, Mo., writes as follows:

> Booneville is a town of 5,000 inhabitants, and our theater, the Gem, is the only show here. We have a Standard and Edison machine, and have ordered Power's 6-A, but it has not yet arrived. I have noticed some operators are troubled with double spot. I had one myself, and remedied it by means of the screw which adjusts the top carbon of my standard lamp. I lowered the top carbon slightly—just enough to remove the double spot. I have had no trouble since.

I do not quite understand, but presume the brother means that he lowered the top carbon arm slightly, thus throwing the point of his top carbon a little further back in relation to the lower. Those troubled with double spot can try this out. If it works with Booneville it may work with others.

Can't Answer.

Mr. Fred Mackenzie, Brooklyn, N. Y., writes:

> Am running an old Edison Model B with good results. Have been advised to get a Simplex; have also been advised not to. What is your opinion? Have a first class booth (there you go again! Can't you get the "booth," "coop," "cage" idea out of your head? You just sit down and say, operating room, operating room, operating room, over and over again for six or seven hours, until you get it fixed in your mind) 16 x 20 feet, with two windows in front; rewinding, tool and supply room on one side, the latter 16 x 10 feet. In fact, everything is up to the mark and a credit to our cause. Ventilation is perfect. I want you to run down and see us some evening, if convenient. The boys will surely give you a rousing welcome, as they all know you through me. Am much pleased with the new handbook. The bottom loop of my Edison loses itself quite often; also there is a ghost on the screen, although I am using Bio carbons, set at right angles. What is the remedy? Have a motor drive, and a method all my own of keeping commutator clean. By simply pressing the finger tips slightly on the commutator it is kept clean and bright. The finger tips seem to remove all foreign substances. I also invented a method of soaking carbons in a solution of sulphuric acid and turpentine, with a little magnesium added. The result is a brighter illumination and a soft yellow light, eliminating the injurious violet rays of the arc. Will give you the formula later. What is the mean temperature of the arc at 40 amperes a. c.? A friend of mine wrote you three weeks ago, and has not seen his answer in print. Why?

Replying to your last inquiry first, it is utterly impossible to print all of the letters received. The department is very interesting, but we must remember there are others. We have four pages at our disposal, with enough material to easily fill ten. However, there is a letter from Brooklyn, page 883, March 1st issue; possibly that is your friend. Correspondents must not expect their letters to appear within less than two weeks of the time they write, and it may be longer, particularly if the matter treated is not of immediate importance. As to the temperature of the arc at 40 amperes a. c., I do not know what it is myself, but it is pretty hot, as you will discover if you stick your finger in it. In a letter from Booneville you will see how he remedied his double spot. Perhaps it will help you. Frequent losing of your lower loop may be caused by a too loose take-up tension—an all too common fault. I may be able to visit you some time, but will not make rash promises. What elevated line are you near? I cannot, for very obvious reasons, compare the relative merits of various projectors in these columns. The Simplex is a good machine and has many advocates.

Twenty-Five Cycle Current.

Mr. A. L. Caulkins, president of the Elite Theater Company, Carthage, Mo., writes:

> Referring to page 261, January 18th issue, under heading, "Flicker Trouble," allowing that the operator is using Power's "Six" with 25-cycle a. c. through a rectifier; how is the flicker to be overcome in the machine? We have the same trouble and would be glad to receive your suggestion.

Using a rectifier gives you d. c., and you should use a three-wing shutter, which, when run at normal speed, gives a practically flickerless picture, though there is no shutter made which will absolutely and entirely remove all flicker. That is not in the nature of things, and will never be accomplished so long as the intermittent movement is used. It occurs to me that, rectifier current being pulsating and 25-cycle a very slow alternating rate, it is barely possible the pulsations of the rectified current might show on the screen. How about this?

Three More Hand Books.

Mr. C. T. Smithers, president of the Idle Hour Circuit, Aberdeen, S. D., writes:

> Received the copy of the new handbook I ordered. It certainly is fine. Enclosed find check for $7.50 for three more. In the interest of my business I want every one of my operators to have and study one of these books.

This is the kind of a letter that speaks for itself, and I may add that it would be a money-making proposition for any company owning a circuit of theaters to provide every one of their operators with a copy of the handbook. It would be money well invested. This may sound like tooting my own horn, but it is a fact nevertheless.

"JUGGLING WITH FATE" (Selig), March 12.—There is quality in the photography of this picture, and the pleasure that one gets from its lovely backgrounds will be, through the early scenes, the most noticeable thing in it, for the producer has intentionally left the spectator to guess his way. The object was to create a feeling of mystery, and this was accomplished—but at the expense of a clear-cut impression. Yet the guessing is not unpleasant, and the offering seemed to entertain a large audience. The players are very acceptable. Producer William Duncan made it from Edward McWade's script, with Tom Mix in the leading role as both desperado and sheriff. Rex de Rosselli and Myrtle Stedman are the bad man's accomplices, and Lester Cunio plays the man who unravels the mystery.

"THE MISJUDGING OF MR. HUBBY" (Essanay), March 12.—Augustus Carney and Eleanor Blanchard play Mr. and Mrs. Hubby, a couple whose jealousy costs them money. The situation is new, and its development is full of unexpected and amusing events, but the chief roles give no fresh characters, although two of Hubby's clients—a couple seeking a divorce—do furnish a fresh human interest. E. H. Calvert and Dolores Cassinelli play as detectives. The photography is clear, and the offering seemed to please.

"THE INTERNATIONAL SPIES" (Kalem), March 12.—It is hard to take this offering seriously; it is in the old style and borders on vulgarity. It was produced in England, on the Channel and in France by the B. & C. Company for the Kalem people. The photography is very fair.

"A MODERN HORSE" (Edison), March 12.—This modern horse is a big motor vehicle, and we can recommend it as a hard worker. A well-photographed picture, worth seeing.

"AUNT ELSA'S VISIT" (Edison), March 12.—Charles M. Seay, author and producer of this picture, deserves credit for conceiving a situation rich in comedy possibilities. He has worked it up, for the most part, very well. Once in a while (take Aunt Elsa's breaking the plate, for instance) it falls into what is rather stale farce, but on the whole is very amusing and certainly made the audience laugh, at times heartily. Alice Washburn plays the lead as Elsa, a spinster aunt, full of the old Nick, whose coming seems unfortunately timed. Yale Boss is commissioned to keep her out of the house till after the party given by the two girls, Gertrude McCoy and Clara Adams. Bigelow Cooper is father, and Mrs. C. J. Williams is mother. The photography is very clear.

"HIS HONOR, THE MAYOR" (Vitagraph), March 12.—The best of this picture is its many freshly human characters, but it also has a fine comedy situation behind it and tickled the audience much. Bunny is the mayor, not in favor of woman suffrage; Harry Morey, another politician, is a sort of boss; Charles Eldridge, a lesser political light, would like to make speeches, but is always pulled back to his seat. Aunt Minerva (Flora Finch) comes on a visit to Bunny's wife (Julia S. Gordon) and makes suffragists of them all. The conversion of the boss and his henchmen is fine. W. L. Tremayne, the author, deserves good credit, as does the director, Frederick Thomson. The photography is clear.

"A TIMELY BATH" (Pathe), March 12.—A very farcical offering, often a bit vulgar. There is a priest in it who is made more or less ridiculous. It is not a slow picture, and those who laughed filled the house with noise.

"A TOUR IN THE ALPS" (Pathe), March 12.—A very clearly photographed picture of the ascent up to Mer de Glace, in the Alps. An excellent offering.

"THE GRIM TOLL OF WAR" (Kalem), March 12.—A two-reel special with many acceptable scenes—some very pretty and one that is solemn. The story it tells is of the Civil War. It wouldn't stand analysis as a picture of life, and it has one unfortunate "break," when the recruiting officer swears in the hero as a soldier without rising from his seat. In spite of all these things it is true that a large audience was amply entertained by it, with the aid of patriotic music not of the best. War scenes make the old tunes very impressive. The offering also has some stirring fireworks that come in a very well-made battle, with one or two explosions that rip things up in lively fashion. The photography is clear, and much of it has quality. The acting is in part acceptable. Hal Clements plays the colonel and hero; Guy Coombs, his unknown brother-in-law, of whom he is unjustly jealous. Anna Nilsson, Marguerite Courtot and Storm V. Boyd also have roles.

"THE SPRING OF LIFE" (Biograph), March 13.—It used to be a maxim in medicine that the nastier the dose the quicker the cure, and they used to put dead toads' eyes in their bills. In this picture we find the "Spring of Life" getting its tang from old eggs fed to the trough behind it. The innkeeper has to let his daughter marry the hallboy to keep the truth from his guests. It is a fairly amusing offering and gave the audience some laughter. Grace Lewis is the girl, and Edward Dillon the hallboy.

"TIGHTWAD'S PREDICAMENT" (Biograph), March 13.—On the same reel is this livelier farce, in which Tightwad finds that his wife has sold all his spare clothes for the pin money he should have given her. The photography in neither is as good as usual in Biograph pictures. Both are lively; this is quite speedy.

"OLD GORMAN'S GIRL" (Essanay), March 13.—The chief reason why this picture does not move one deeply is that the "stranger" is made to seem far more desirable than Tom, who seems a presuming slouch; yet in the end it is made to seem her good fortune that the stranger is killed before she can marry him—the picture doesn't really get anywhere. Then, while the players are pleasing, the photography is too obscure to let us see them act, except at moments. It was put on by Arthur Mackley and his company.

"WHEN JOHN BROUGHT HOME HIS WIFE" (Lubin), March 13.—A simple but very pleasing offering—we liked it better than any other today. Some spectators want pictures with a punch, but this, at least, has humanity. The acting and photography is all that could be desired. Lottie Briscoe is boarding at the house in the city to which Arthur Johnson, a country boy, comes. Both seek in vain for work through a few scenes that are just right, and then get married to change their luck. John brings his bride home to the farm. It shows the handicraft of a skilled writer, and we find that its author is George Terwilliger. It was produced by Arthur Johnson. Charles Brandt and Clara Lambert also have roles. The photography is of good quality.

"THE GAMBLER'S HEART" (Melies), March 13.—Such a title promises little, but in this case the offering is somewhat better than its name. Its hero is the good gambler who sacrifices himself for the heroine, but there is freshness in the situation, and among the lesser figures there is some feeling for character. The photography is clear enough. Perhaps this offering could be placed as better than most releases for today.

"THE LOVE THAT TURNED" (Pathe), March 13.—A story of an American among Mexican revolutionists. It offers a spirited moment during a chase. The backgrounds and scenes are fairly interesting and clearly photographed.

"THE GREAT WALL OF CHINA" (Selig), March 13.—A subject of great interest and very clearly photographed. We wish there had been more of it. Some good, instructive data about it is given by way of introduction.

"THE FUGITIVE" (Selig), March 13.—An old style farce. We ourselves found it hard to keep interested in it, and we heard much conversation around us while it was on. It was written by T. W. Robertson and produced by C. H. France. In the cast are Lyllian Leighton, John Lancaster, Palmer Bowman and Darel Goodwin.

"THE DECEIVERS" (Vitagraph), March 13.—One could wish that the photography of this picture had been clearer, for the acting was good enough to be worth seeing better. The story is only fair, being not very fresh, but serves as a container for the artistic work of Mary Charleson and George Stanley. The love-making of these two shows a sincerity that is very refreshing. As a whole, the picture is commendable; it will give entertainment. Rollin S. Sturgeon is the producer, and W. Hanson Durham the author.

"SIXES AND NINES" (Lubin), March 14.—A farce that depends on the number plates of two automobiles. One is 999 and the other is 666; both drivers get into trouble and both turn their plates upside down. The idea is certainly fresh, and it makes a laughable picture, but there is very little to it, and it might have been carried much further. William Hopkins and Robert Burns play two rural constables. The other players are not so noticeable. The photography is clear. It was written by E. W. Sargent and produced by Arthur Hotaling.

"JANE'S WATERLOO" (Lubin), March 14.—A competently acted picture in a rural setting and deals with one of "the more deadly" sex, according to Kipling. Jane (Jennie Nelson) is in love with Jenks (William Orlamond) and has arranged to marry him willy-nilly, but he escapes, with the help of his friends and a ladder. The situation, as worked out, gives at moments an impression of spontaneity, but the offering has a slightly bitter taste, due to its clear intention of poking fun at Jane. There is much that is truly pleasing in it, and the photography is very clear. It gave the audience a good deal of laughter. R. Cummer Mason is the author, and it was produced by Joe Smiley.

"AN OLD, OLD SONG" (Essanay), March 14.—Of one thing we can be certain: this picture will leave a very pleasant taste in the spectator's mouth. The situation is not at all new and will not, as developed, convince the mind; its appeal is to the heart. The ending is made effective by the "old, old song" itself, "Silver Threads," which is flashed, words and music, on the screen. The two chief roles are taken by William Walters and Ruth Stonehouse, and their work is very acceptable. Bryant Washburn also has an important role, and is especially commendable. He is getting better every day. Miss Scott is charming in the role of a little girl. In the story the old song reunites a daughter and her father, who had not wanted her to marry. The photography is very clear.

"SISTERS ALL" (Vitagraph), March 14.—A picture of modern life, showing how the cherished daughters of a sweatshop master worked with his downtrodden employes and lived in poverty until the grasping old man gave living wages. Florence Turner is in the leading role on the workers' side of the situation, and Edith Story is the leading daughter. Courtenay Foote plays the father. The offering is more of a preachment than a story pure and simple, and therefore, while it will make a strong appeal to some, its appeal will not be general. It is full of character, but doesn't ask our sympathy for anyone in particular, so we are kept from putting it, as a cloak, on our own humanity. It is not in any real sense dramatic. Its author, Dean Willets, has done an excellent piece of journalistic picture writing, and Larry Trimble has worked it up most artistically. The photography is perfect.

"AN INDIAN MAID'S WARNING" (Kalem), March 14.—A good commercial offering; it provides the action that many like; is an Indian story with all the "bunk" left out. It has the hard riding, the smoke, the battle, the killing, and is short. We commend this very much. We can't get along without the Indian story, but we don't need the trash that too often goes with such. Ruth Roland is the Indian maid; P. C. Hartigan, the settler she is friendly with, and V. Howard is her chieftain father. The photography is fair.

"JONES' JONAH DAY" (Kalem), March 14.—A farce picture that is speedy and has no dry spots. It uses, freshly, an old situation and gives a good deal of laughter. The lead is taken by John Brennan, who, while fishing, is compelled to exchange clothes with an escaped convict (Marshal Neilan). Ruth Roland plays Jones' wife. It is very clearly photographed and pleased the audience.

"A YOUTHFUL KNIGHT" (Edison), March 14.—Here is an exceptional offering, and the more human a spectator is the more it will please him. Not very even, it is still all good and its best warms the heart with truth and really spontaneous humor. The quality that makes it hold is in its characters, which are just queer enough to make a situation, yet most convincingly normal. We see their queerness, but feel that they are just as sane as we. We are made to believe in it when we see how their queerness makes those who are not queer react. Anne and Bannister Merwin are the joint authors, and Walter Edwin is the producer; both are worthy of high praise. Miriam Nesbitt is, naturally as can be, the mother of the young knight (Yale Boss), and Leonie Flugarth is the little girl next door, not queer at all and not less natural than the others. The photography is almost perfect.

"THE SANDS OF TIME" (Selig), March 14. — This picture stands securely on its scenes, beautifully lighted and perfectly photographed. Caroline Cooke and Winnifred Greenwood, the widow and her daughter, appear in very pretty gowns and, acting simply and naturally, are all that is charming. It hardly tells a story, and is not dramatic, but shows the growing up of the girl who runs away from a good home to a fast life and ends in sorrow. She is homeless and is rescued by the Salvation Army workers. During its development Father Time appears (a double exposure), as though to show that what is written is written and nothing can efface it. At the end a vision of Christ appears, just before Time turns his glass and begins again. The sub-titles are beneath comment, but the picture is full of merit. Its author is Mrs. O. Bronson, and Lorimer Johnston produced it. Carl Winterhoff, Harry Lonsdale and LaFayette McKee have roles as the man the girl ran away with, the minister and Time.

"THE UNWELCOME GUEST" (Biograph), March 15.—It is the characterization and the good acting that gives this picture a high place among the offerings of today. The "unwelcome guest" is the father who is poor and too old to look out for himself, so is brought to the son's home to work with the slavey and is half starved. These two characters (taken by W. Christie Miller and "Little Mary") are the center of the picture's interest and, especially the former, are drawn with assurance and imagination. It is an offering with a good deal of punch and held the audience's attention strongly. The photography is of excellent quality.

"THE GIRL AND THE HORSESHOE" (Cines), March 15.—Another of the Cines pictures telling a simple story that is human, true and very pleasing. It shows a carefulness on the producer's part to include nothing that is not significant, and consequently it convinces us that its central character, a young girl, really lives. In the delicate romance that it tells it reminds us of a Cines picture of a few weeks back, "The Ideal of Her Dreams." Where that offering was liked this will be popular also. The photography has a pretty quality.

"WINNING SMILES" (Cines), March 15.—A clever clown makes love to many women, one after the other, whom he chances to meet, and their husbands give him what he deserves. It won smiles and some laughter. It is a short film on the same reel with the above.

"THE GAUNTLETS OF WASHINGTON" (Edison), March 15. — A story pictured as happening forty years after the Revolution. The opening scene introduces as old beggar who, in a tavern, tells how, with the help of another man, he once saved Washington's life. This leads to his finding an old friend. The last scene, where the old beggar finds the friend and protector, is much more dramatic than is the tale of how the Hessians were scared away when at the point of capturing the Commander-in-Chief. The photography is clear, but lacks quality. The offering will be helped greatly by a drum and fife, well played. Bannister Merwin is the author of the script, which was produced by Walter Edwin. The beggar is Marc MacDermott; Charles Ogle is Washington; Bigelow Cooper is the lad who helped scare the Hessians, and also the new-found friend. Richard Ridgely is the traitorous farm hand who carried the news to the Hessians.

"THE HEART BROKERS" (Lubin), March 15.—The idea behind this farce is good, but the picture of it seems too far fetched to be truly funny, and it made but little laughter. It is from one of Lawrence McCloskey's scripts, produced by Barry O'Neil. Peter Lang has a matrimonial bureau and is doing a big business. Mary Walters consults him on behalf of her brother (Bartley McCullum), but, herself, falls in love with him. To bring him around she has to open a bureau of her own, just across the hall. There are many players in the cast, and the photography is very good.

"INNOCENCE" (Pathe), March 15.—A dramatic story with an old situation, but it has been developed in the latest style and mixed with some good comedy. A little girl picks up some gems dropped from her father's pocket and hides them in her doll. The father is accused of theft and sent to prison. Escaping, he is aided by the fact that the Pathe Freres are taking a picture of an escaping convict. Later the father is shown to be innocent. The photography is almost perfect and the offering seemed to be acceptable to a large audience. Paul Panzer takes the leading role.

"THE DOGHOUSE BUILDERS" (Vitagraph), March 15.—A farce featuring Hughie Mack and Wallie Van as two clown carpenters. It tickled the audience greatly and kept laughter going which at times was very hearty, indeed. Flora Finch also appears in it. Florence Turner wrote the script, which James Young produced. The photography is good.

"QUEBEC ZOUAVES" (Vitagraph), March 15.—There are just a company of them, and are shown passing to and fro, and also drilling. The photography has little quality, but is clear enough.

"THE POWERA OF THE CAMERA" (Biograph), March 17. — An entirely new twist has been given to the situation, in which a motion picture camera plays a part in the escape of convicts in stripes. And it is very funny to see the sheriff fooled into accepting the refugees as actors, because they turn a coffee grinder which has been nailed to a rod. The Biograph camera also has not a little power in securing clear pictures.

"A DELIVERY PACKAGE" (Biograph), March 17.—A farce on the same reel with the above that made a good deal of laughter throughout the house, but never made the whole house laugh as one. It is speedy, but just a trifle vulgar.

"KATHLEEN MAVOURNEEN" (Edison), March 17.—This old melodrama favorite makes a good picture offering, and it has been done in film before. One reel seems too short a space in which to put this story over effectively, for some of the characters had to be skimped, and in this case Squire Kavanagh (played by Marc MacDermott) suffers, and the plot with him—he too suddenly becomes a villain. Mary Fuller plays the titular role acceptably, and Augustus Phillips is pleasing in the role of lover. William West, Gertrude McCoy, H. Linson and M. Gripp have good roles. The photography of some of the scenes is very lovely; in some it is poor. It makes a good, substantial offering.

"THE $20,000 COROT" (Kalem), March 17.—We find a good deal to commend in this picture. It shows care on its producer's part to make sets and scenes natural, and care in the acting, too, so that, although the story is somewhat melodramatic, it interests as a possible "slice of life." The plot (there are two interlocking stories) is skillfully woven and deals with a rich man's daughter and his secretary, who love each other, against the father's will. The secretary is sleuthing to find the stolen painting and traces it to the very house where the girl, on a charitable mission, is attending a poor sick woman. The secretary calls the police to get the painting, and they are in time to rescue the girl, who has been captured by the gang. It's a combination of things that have really happened and will surely interest. Alice Joyce plays the girl; Tom Moore, the secretary, and R. Purdon, the rich man. The photography is of good quality.

"LOVE BEFORE TEN" (Selig), March 17.—Two children, Roy Clark and "Baby" Lillian Wade, play the leads in this little elopement romance or comedy. They had seen a love match among their elders and were following suit. H. A. Lockwood and Eugenie Besserer have roles. The photography is clear, and some of the scenes are very pretty.

"THE MOUSE AND THE LION" (Vitagraph), March 17.—A detective story, by W. L. Tremayne, that, except for one short moment, gets over most effectively. Perhaps it's the best offering of today's regular releases. The "lion" is a detective, played pleasingly but conventionally by Leo Delaney, and the "mouse" (Paul Kelly) is an honest lad whom he has picked up and installed as his hallboy. The "mouse" happens to recognize the woman (Lillian Walker) whom "the gang" send to decoy the detective to where they have cleverly arranged a trap to "get" him. The "mouse" is able to free his patron from the gang's trap and help him bag the gangsters. It ought to have been shown how the boy came to loosen the stones into the cellar; to see him doing it without knowing how he suspected the trap fails to convince us. This is the offering's one weak spot. The picture was produced by Van Dyke Brooke, who plays an unconvincing gangster. George Cooper is not at all unconvincing as a member of the gang, nor is William Shea. The "mouse" also plays naturally. The photography is very good.

"GREED FOR GOLD" (Lubin), March 17.—A melodrama that interested the audience, although there seemed to be some more or less correct guessing on the outcome. It is conventional, but is acceptably acted and has one or two of the up-to-date features, such as the blowing up of the villain's cabin, which conveniently discovers the missing partnership paper, assuring the heroine of her share in the rich mine. Wallace Clifton is the author, and F. J. Grandon the producer. Edgar Jones plays the hero; Clara Williams, the heroine; Edward Luck, the villain. Others in the cast are Emma Bell, Charles Edrington and F. Hall. The photography is very fair.

"AN ADVENTURE ON THE MEXICAN BORDER" (Lubin), March 15.—A good offering, in two reels. It is not cheaply made in any way, and a troop or two of United States cavalry were used, so it seems, in it. The story, although not at all probable, is sensible, and not impossible. It brings the Mexican troops into conflict with the cavalry, but doesn't presuppose a war with our neighbor republic. Nor does it make a gingerbread hero of an American lieutenant and an impossible villain of a Mexican. Both, in this picture, are men whom it would be worth while meeting; at least they would be interesting. It is merely what its name implies—an adventure—and it took well with a well-filled house and gave entertainment. The backgrounds are freshly interesting, the atmosphere is convincingly military, and the photography is clear. Romaine Fielding, who is both author and producer, plays the lead as the Mexican, and is ably supported by Robyn Adair, Mary Ryan and a large cast. A true feature picture.

"THE WOE OF BATTLE" (Kalem), March 15.—An offering that is strong on its spectacular, rather than on its dramatic, side. It has some marvelously fine scenes, including a view from inside a fort which is bombarding a passing river steamboat supposed to be loaded with ammunition, and also the final destruction of the fort by fire and an explosion; great volumes of dense smoke are seen rising before the powder goes up. These thrilling scenes are very clearly photographed, like most of the other scenes, some of which are lovely. The heroine is pretty and photographs well in her Southern home—a perfect set. Guy Coombs plays the Northern lieutenant; Harry Millarde, the Southern captain, and Marian Cooper, the girl.

"PEKIN, CHINA" (Selig), March 18. A travel picture that shows not a great deal of the city proper, but gives a few interesting views. We are shown the "Chief Gate," the "Camel Gate" and a corner or two of the park-like grounds around the famous Summer Palace of the now deposed Manchu Emperor. We can see but little of the details in the white marble bridges and balustrades near the palace, but we do get a good general idea of the place.

"TURN HIM OUT" (Selig), March 18. On the same reel is this farce of clown characters. One person in the audience laughed all the time, but for the most part the rest watched silently.

"THEIR COUNTRY RELATION" (Cines), March 18.—A satirical comedy whose object is to ridicule the insincerity and emptiness of a certain fast lot in the city. It is accomplished by bringing two unsophisticated people from the country on a visit and by showing them as astonished at city manners which every one else takes as a matter of course. The audience watched it closely, and to us also it seemed an entertaining picture. The photography is clear, but without much quality.

"WHO'S CHAMPION NOW?" (Cines), March 18.—A farce that gets fun from the ridiculous, but decidedly gets the fun. We don't believe there was anyone in the house who did not laugh now and then, and most laughed all the time. It gives a farcical wrestling match. The photography is clear.

"THE VENGEANCE OF THE KABYLE" (Pathe), March 18.—A Kabyle is a native of the mountains of North Africa, the unconquered remnant whom the Arabs could not, even in the vigor of their first conquest, subdue. They are Mohammedans, and in this picture one cannot tell the Kabyle from the Arab. It was produced and photographed in Africa and tells a fairly dramatic story that is not fresh. The acting is not wholly natural, but there is one very vigorous scene. In it a woman is hitched with a donkey and made to draw the plow for her wrathful lord, the Kabyle. The scenes are colored by hand, and some of them are pretty.

"THE PORTRAIT" (Edison), March 18.—Another dream picture, and it gets over about as well as any of them do. Watching such pictures, one is afraid, every now and then, that he has missed the dream's end, for the action is almost never dreamlike. But the author of this picture, Richard Ridgley, had a good idea that, to us, seems fresh, and he has written a picture with some good Bohemian atmosphere. Miriam Nesbitt plays an American art student, loved by a Bohemian genius (Mark MacDermott), whom she won't marry because of his habits. She has told him so, and he dreams before his own portrait of himself, and sees in the portrait, as it changes, a prophecy of his fate. This scares him so that he reforms. The photography is clear, for the most part, but very poor at times. One of the fade-away scenes is wretched.

"THE HOUSEKEEPER OF CIRCLE C" (Essanay), March 18.—A farce set in ranch life and produced by Arthur Mackley's company. It made a good deal of laughter. There is a clever female impersonation in it (the second housekeeper, who applies for the job as a joke on the "Old Man"). The photography is clear enough to serve in such an offering.

"DOLORES' DECISION" (Lubin), March 18.—There is a plot development behind this offering that is fair, though commercial and not at all fresh, but as pictured it is not dramatic nor convincing—in fact, it seems to us the weakest drama that Director G. M. Nicholls has put out so far. There are no especially pleasing backgrounds, and no especially pleasing acting, and the photography is only fair. The script is by E. W. Sargent. In the cast are Ormi Hawley, Edwin Carewe, Ernestine Morley, Irvin White, Viola Alberti and others.

"THE BIRTHDAY GIFT" (Vitagraph), March 18.—The situation behind this picture has dramatic possibilities, but it did not get over very effectively, because, in the development, those things that were most important, were not always assuredly recognized and brought out clearly; the principal lines were at times blurred. We believe the fault lies more with the players than with the author, and the little heroine herself is the weakest factor in it. Yet, while it doesn't grip, it interests, as a character sketch. The motherless girl, daughter of a thief, is living with her uncle and her aunt, who does not like her. To win her aunt's affection she is working for the neighbors secretly, so as to get a birthday present to give her. The aunt finds her little hoard and thinks her, too, a thief. It has a happy ending. The script, by B. M. Harvey, was produced by Charles Kent, with Adele de Garde in the leading role and with Robert Gaillord and Leah Baird as uncle and aunt. Some of the scenes are beautiful; all are fair.

"ACCORDING TO ADVICE" (Vitagraph), March 18.—A farce by the Western company. It kept a good deal of laughter going. The idea is fresh, though slight, and the photography good enough for the picture's purpose.

Independent

"ANIMATED WEEKLY No. 53" (Universal), March 12.—This number of the weekly is diversified and interesting. It contains scenes from the inauguration, the suffragettes in a pantomime play on the White House steps, ice-breaking in Columbia River, the wedding of the Kaiser's daughter, pow-wow of Indian chiefs, Easter fashions, views of the actress, Bessie Wynn, etc.

"FRAU VAN VINKLE'S CRULLERS" (Majestic), March 13.—The good frau puts a ring in her crullers, the finder of which is to be lucky for a year. The family man who gets hold of the cruller containing the ring thinks the luck is slow in starting, for he is chased all over the town by a policeman. All ends happily, however. An amusing little story.

"A REGAINED REPUTATION" (Reliance), March 15.—There is a funny mix-up in the latter part of this film, which overcomes the somewhat tedious beginning of the plot. The policeman, in love with the cook, loses his hat and coat, the robber steals the family automobile, and the cook finally overtakes him on a motorcycle. The climax brings a laugh.

"HER DREAMS OF YESTERDAY" (Excelsior), March 17.—This film story gives us that good old melodramatic scene in which the hero is strapped to a log and sent toward the whirring teeth of the saw, only to be rescued at the last moment by his pretty brunette love. It is well done, and the pictures are good. The latter scene, in which the husband dies in bed five years later, seemed out of place.

"THE BATTLE OF BULL RUN" (Bison), March 18.—This three-reel number gets a very favorable start. The fierce fighting in woods and open fields in the first and third reels is very good. The plot, which concerns a brother and sister acting as Union spies within the Confederate lines, is also pleasing at the beginning, but it drags in the latter part of the second reel, where the scenes are drawn out and unconvincing. The substitution of the false dispatch was cleverly accomplished, but the latter part of the production lacks a central element of suspense. The scene on the battlefield, where the girl sees the spirits of her lover and brother, is too theatrical. The photography is good.

"FOR BETTER OR WORSE" (Eclair), March 19.—The chief criticism of this two-reel production is that it has so many repellent situations. The author, portrayed very effectively by Alec Francis, takes opium and cocaine to stimulate his imagination. The scenes in which he has visions and gradually loses his mind are very unpleasant; also the scenes in and about the sanitarium for insane patients. As a preachment against the use of drugs this is effective, but as entertainment it is too strong. The photography and acting are good.

"BRANDED BY HIS BROTHER'S CRIME" (Frontier), March 20.—A very good Western production, in which one brother allows himself to be imprisoned for the crime of cattle stealing to save his married brother, who is really guilty. The scenes in the branding shed are interesting and give us something different from the ordinary Western offering. The end is somewhat theatrical, but as a whole the film is a good one.

"THE YOUNGER SISTER" (Victor), March 21.—The older sister finds she does not love Jim, but the little girl defends him and keeps the engagement ring. Jim goes away on a big engineering enterprise for ten years. When he returns the younger sister has grown up and is waiting for him. She still has the ring. Not very probable, but well pictured and a good romantic story.

"WON AT THE RODEO" (Thanhouser), March 21.—We cannot remember ever having seen a more successful exposition of real broncho busting than is shown in this lively reel. It certainly gives us the genuine article, both men and girl riders competing in the rodeo. It is worth the price of admission to the average picture show to see this film. A fine offering.

"SAVED BY PARCELS POST" (Imp), March 22.—This very amusing parcels post burlesque is enacted by a cast of famous authors and artists, including Wallace and Will Irwin, Charles Hanson Towne, Rupert Hughes, Julian Street, John Wolcott Adams, Charles Dana Gibson, Tom Masson, Burges Johnson, George Barr McCutcheon and James Montgomery Flagg. The actors are announced by card and introduced in proper person before the burlesque begins. An excellent comedy half reel.

"LEO'S LOVE LETTER" (Imp), March 22.—This, on same reel with above, is a French eccentric comedy, in which Leo chases a love letter about the streets, knocking over tables, etc. A typical knockabout picture.

"THE PEACEMAKER" (Rex), March 23.—An unusual conception of considerable strength, though leaving several things to the imagination. Phillips Smalley, as the boarder, tries to keep the younger sister from taking the older girl's lover. He comes near succeeding in this, but in the end it develops that the older girl loves himself. Somewhat vague as to details, but above the average film in strength of conception and development.

"LOVERS THREE" (Crystal), March 23.—In which Pearl has the three proverbial admirers, Tom, Dick and Harry. They all vow to give her up, and then all call on her the same evening, with amusing results. A good half-reel comedy.

"HIS TWIN BROTHER" (Crystal), March 23.—Chester Barnett enacts the part of twin brothers in this. One appears unexpectedly on the scene, causing Dolly and her father many misadventures. Fairly amusing.

"BUSINESS MUST NOT INTERFERE" (Eclair), March 23.—This is another of the amusing Newlywed series. The pictures are all hand drawings, and should not be missed.

"THE DYTISCUS" (Eclair), March 23.—On the same reel as the foregoing is this interesting scientific.

"DAMAGES IN FULL" (Imp), March 24.—A story of sentiment in which two very engaging children play the pivotal roles. It deals with an employer and his workman, crippled by accident in the course of his duties. In the first scene we find the poor man and his family (Edwin Barning, Violet Horner and Mimi St. John, their child). The accident is extremely well suggested and gives a marked sense of danger. Mat Snyder plays the hard employer a bit too conventionally to give the best impression, for it is good business to fool people, especially if one is going to be unjust to them. The two children, Edith Halleran and Mimi, furnish, as was intended, the best part of the offering. That jury had been bribed; it was fairly "licking its chops." The photography is good. A creditable, not a great, picture.

"THE PRIMA DONNA'S CAT" (Majestic), March 25.—A fairly amusing comedy, in which the loss of the prima donna's Angora cat causes much trouble. Her detective friend, with his wonderful bracelet, thinks he has found the man who stole the feline, but is amazed to learn that the hero found the cat under the bathtub.

"THE ICONOCLAST" (Broncho), March 26.—It would be hard to imagine a more consistent and powerfully moving three-reel offering than this, and except for the final scene there is nothing in it of a questionable character. Its story is one covering a vast range of human emotion; it combines skillfully the fierce passion of the Mexican heart, as shown in Don Jose's hatred of the artist and his religious creation, the Madonna. Then the picture, again admirably, utilizes the vast sweep of the Southern California landscape; we see the railroad builders at work, the Indians in their picturesque village on the lakeside, and later have the crash of warfare. The old mission atmosphere is always in evidence and the pictures are excellent. The crucifixion scene impressed us as too strong for presentation, and many exhibitors will prefer not to use it, no doubt. As a whole, the production is a splendid one.

"FORCING THE ISSUE" (Nestor), March 26.—In most of those things that make a picture tell, this offering is not up to the standard set by former Nestors. It has the Nestor backgrounds fairly well photographed, and there are speedy scenes, but no strongly sustained action. No attempt was made to show the situation in a convincing light, nor is the development likely to persuade us that there ever was an incident anything like that in the story.

"HAVING THEIR PICTURES TOOK" (Powers), March 26.—A comedy showing the difficulties of taking portraits of children. It will go over in some audiences.

"PICTURESQUE BERGEN, NORWAY" (Powers), March 26.—On the same reel are these interesting and finely photographed views of the waterfront of a fishing village, of a ride on a train through the mountains, and of a sail on smooth lakes.

"THE RETURN OF THUNDER CLOUD'S SPIRIT" (101 - Bison), March 22.—This two-reel picture is produced by Mr. McRae, formerly of the Selig forces. It is well made. The theme is based on the superstition of the red men. There is portrayed what we are told is an exact duplication of the ghost dance so prevalent a few years ago among certain bands of Indians, and which the government authorities took such strenuous measures to stop. Throughout the film runs a coherent story, and there are many dramatic situations. The groupings of the soldiers and Indians are well done.

"THE CALLING OF LOUIS MONA" (Powers), March 28.—In these two reels there are two characters which stand out sharply. Edwin August has the part of a boy raised in a monastery, who desires to live his life within its walls. Before he can be admitted, however, he must spend a year outside and face the world. He meets the world and fails. The second character is Charles Manley, the veteran of the screen. Mr. Manley has done no better work than he here gives us as the prior. His characterization is reverential and impressive; well might he have stepped out from the doors of a monastery. The acting of Mr. August, likewise, is of his best. He has fine opportunities to show his versatility—as the boy just starting out, as the successful man of business, as a social favorite, and as the down-and-out. The picture holds throughout. Mr. MacDonald, the producer, shows his skill in the groupings and in the settings. One especially strong scene is in the gambling house—both in its conception and in the manner in which it is carried out. Mr. August is particularly strong here.

"TEXAS KELLY AT BAY" (Kay-Bee), March 28.—Here is a stirring film story of the Western type, remarkable for its splendid scenic effects. The heroine rescues the dashing Texas Kelly from the foot of an insurmountable cliff by means of a lariat. The love affair ensues, but there are the usual setbacks before the end is happily reached. The fighting is exciting and well devised. Texas Kelly holds back the bandits attacking the stagecoach in true border-hero style, until help comes. A good offering of its type.

"THE GEYSERS OF NEW ZEALAND" (Kinemacolor).—Pictures of five different geysers in a far-away land. They will interest.

"NATIVE CARNIVAL PROCESSION, CEYLON" (Kinemacolor).—A fine picture, valuable alike for its portrayal of native costumes and customs. The procession is in celebration of the elevation of a local leader.

"PRESIDENT WILSON REVIEWING THE TROOPS" (Kinemacolor).—Fine views of the recent pageant in the Capital City.

"SUFFRAGETTE PARADE IN WASHINGTON" (Kinemacolor).—Here is the best of evidence as to the crowds that swarmed through the streets of Washington at the time of the woman's parade the day before the inauguration. There are excellent views of the floats and various features of the pageant. One picture that will especially appeal to picture followers is a view of Florence Lawrence on a finely caparisoned charger. She faces the camera with her most charming smile.

"BEAUTIFUL BUTTERFLIES" (Kinemacolor).—This film is rightly named, for beautiful they are. No better subject could have been chosen for revealing the possibilities of this new form of photography. Over a dozen varieties are shown.

NORTHERN VENTURES.

These pictures were taken on two expeditions to the Far North. Early in May, 1912, Harry Whitney, millionaire explorer and sportsman, left St. John's, New Foundland, on a big game hunting expedition, aboard the S. S. Neptune, in charge of Captain Robert Bartlett. Captain Bartlett, who is recognized as one of the most capable of Arctic navigators, commanded the S. S. Roosevelt on Admiral Peary's successful dash to the Pole.

The Whitney expedition carried, in addition to the crew of the Neptune, over two hundred experienced hunters and trappers, dog teams and supplies for two years.

On the return of this expedition a second expedition left St. John's with "Lucky" Scott at its head, its destination being supposed goldfields in North Baffin Land. No gold was found, but between the two expeditions over 20,000 feet of negative was obtained which has now been condensed into five reels.

Last year was an exceptional year for ice in the North, and the Scott expedition bucked the ice for 500 miles, finally getting to within 500 miles of the Pole. The Neptune was frozen in the ice for a period of five weeks. On one day alone 157 icebergs were passed.

JEAN DURELL JOINS AMERICAN.

Jean Durell, who has been playing in stock at San Francisco, joined the "Flying A" forces at Santa Barbara, where she will do character work for the second company.

"HIAWATHA."

The pronunciation of the name Hiawatha as used by the Indian players has caused a great deal of discussion. Mr. F. E. Moore, who first presented the play in 1906 on the shores of Lake Chautauqua, gives as his authority the American Bureau of Ethnology, which declares for Hiawatha, with the long "I" instead of "Heawatha" now generally taught in the schools. "Heawatha" was preferred by Longfellow, and in the Riverside edition of the poem his daughter, Miss Alice Longfellow, mentions her father's desire to have it so pronounced, but after carefully looking into the matter, Mr. Moore decided to abide by scientific accuracy rather than poetic license.

"I have received letters wherever we have played correcting our pronunciation or asking why we so pronounce the name," said Mr. Moore. "We have even been attacked in the papers for doing so, but I have never found an authority that gives the sound of "E" to the first syllable. Longfellow himself carefully spells the name of Hiawatha's mother Wenona, although the city of that name is generally spelled Winona. Phonetic spelling of words taken from the lips of people who have no written language is a matter of chance and personal bias, but in this case there is no dissenting opinion among those who know most about the Iroquois, whom Hiawatha so successfully led. A principal of a large New York school said after conversing with Mr. Moore, "From now on I shall return to the pronunciation of my childhood, and shall say Hiawatha."

Scene from "Hiawatha."

Some may think the foregoing a bit of "high-brow" hair-splitting, but the wide-awake managers of moving picture theaters realize the importance of attracting the attention of the more serious members of society who are beginning to recognize the moving pictures as a great power for good or bad, and those who have come in contact with parents and teachers protesting against some obnoxious film do not care to repeat the experience. In Hiawatha they have an offering that will win as hearty approval as other features have aroused antagonism, and make allies of what can be their most potent enemy.

NEW THEATER AT SPRING LAKE, N. J.

Mr. Otto Morris, of Spring Lake, N. J., is building a new $20,000 motion picture theater at the above place. Everything in the building will be first class, and through Mr. J. H. Hallberg, "The Economizer Man," an order has been placed for a Power's No. 6-A moving picture machine, A. C. current saver, curtain, and a full line of supplies. Callahan & Bisner, of Park Ridge, N. J., have also purchased from Mr. Hallberg an Edison Model B machine, which they will use for a traveling motion picture show in the smaller towns in New Jersey.

SAINT PATRICK'S DAY NOTE.

On March 17 Carl Laemmle and P. A. Powers were standing talking near the Hotel Astor. A brass band passed through 45th Street followed by a lot of men wearing green badges, on their way to join the Fifth Avenue parade.

Said Carl to Pat, "This is a great day for the Irish."

"Yes," said Pat to Carl, "Did you get that bunch of shamrocks I sent you?"

THE OLD LIMITATIONS OF ENVIRONMENT DESTROYED.

It has always been an accepted fact that the surroundings amid which young people grow up have much to do with their general character. Environment whether of good or evil, has always carried more force than the school-room.

To the poor and unfortunate, this environment has been a most serious draw-back, in the crowded parts of the large cities especially, children have not only been compelled to learn that which they should not learn, but in like manner they have been prevented from learning that which they should; to them the whole world was the little world in which they lived, the limitations of their environment was the extent of their education. To educational authorities, settlement workers, and criminologists, how to offset the cepted fact the moving picture is destined to be the agency evils of this environment and break down its injurious limitations has always been a problem. It is now an ac- which shall destroy the limitations of environment. No power has previously appeared alike acceptable to both the slaves of their surroundings and those who seek to give them their freedom. At once popular to an extravagant degree, and capable of illustrating the boundlessness of the universe, the denizens of the most crowded and limited locality, can have the horizon of their lives lifted to the radius of the unmeasurable kinematograph. Scenic, Topical, Travel and Industrial pictures are of untold value to these people; the exhibitor who responds to these needs, is rendering a favor to the community.

It was but recently recorded, that one of these unenlightened slum boys, when in the country, being told that a certain body of water was for drinking purposes, refused to believe it, because he knew better, "the water they drank in his home came through pipes;" pictures of the Great Aqueduct would be a revelation to this boy and thousands like him. While we concede to the moving picture innumerable advantages, there are times when some particular advantage must be named for its peculiar and particular help; in this instance it lies in the fact that the pictures are life-size. When the children see human beings with whom they are familiar, in sizes which are real to them, they readily realize that other representations are in the same proportion. This fact was revealed by a boy who first saw a rural scene in which were cows grazing, having always supposed that cows were a small animal "like in pictures" the country scene was at once a revelation and an education to him. The weekly "Topicals" are great educators to these people, even as they must be to the urban and suburban beholders.

The distinctly rural communities also now are finding their limitations removed; the annual visit of the circus, and the Sunday-School trip to the seashore, are now no longer the only views obtained of the world at large; the nearest town has its picture theater, and the world is at their doors. The only next advance, is when the school-house shall have its picture-teacher, then for them shall the last barrier to their total freedom have been removed, and the environment of the whole universe will be the environment of all. The limitations with its disadvantages and too often its sad evils, will have passed away. Born of these new conditions, who can tell how many an otherwise imprisoned soul, may use its new found freedom to aspire to noble heights and give to the next generation men of mark, who, instead of following many of their predecessors in "ways that are dark and devious" may become leaders to those higher and nobler heights to which others have attained, because of those very surroundings which were favorable to them, and which the moving picture has now made the common heritage of all.

Apropos of the above subject it should be of interest to the wise and discriminating exhibitor to study the environment of his patrons, and allow his sense of the fitness of things to rule his selection of pictures; without doubt he will find titles and subjects of suitably attractive themes of greater value than lurid, alluring, exaggerating posters which always disappoint and become stale.

"HIAWATHA" FOR THE SCHOOLS.

The filming of Hiawatha is one of the most acceptable pieces of kinematography ever offered to the schools. There is perhaps not a school in the United States which does not include Longfellow's immortal work in its English course. In the schools of the civilized world no study of literature is compiled in which this great American poem does not find a high place.

No review of this film is now contemplated on this page as it has been noticed at length in a previous issue of the World. It is sufficient at this time to simply call attention to the salient educational features offered by this opportune release. As an illustrative power, the value of the poem is enhanced and both teachers and scholars will find their studies more comprehensive, yet simplified. The cast of over one hundred and fifty full-blooded Indians impart a living reality to the picture which is beyond estimate; that these Indians represent so really that noble race of which perhaps they are the last faithful typical members the film possess a doubly historical value. It is safe to predict that in but a few generations from now this film will not only accompany the immortality of the poem, but will impart an ever-living realism, for which those future generations will be more than thankful. While congratulating the producers of this film the Moving Picture Educator believes it will perhaps do much to hasten the fast approaching day, when the moving picture shall take its place in the schools, by forcing the slowly educational authorities to realize its pedagogical powers. Early American history could not be more faithfully represented or recorded and illustrated, than by the full powers which abound in "Hiawatha," making it the great masterpiece it has always been, and to which kinematography now adds its living forces.

SOMETHING ABOUT RECENT EDUCATIONAL RELEASES.

The varied and attractive class of subjects now coming in such rapid succession from the manufacturers, must appeal to every possible user of the pictures as amply supplying all his needs. From the depths of the ocean we have "Sea Anemones" which give an insight into the mysterious life at the bottom of the sea. In contrast to the natural life of the sea we have pictures showing how man has conquered the ocean by means of "Submarine maneuvers," in which the oceans' depths are explored.

"How Other People Work," is shown in striking contrasts. In one place "Making Hats" and in another "Making Briar Pipes," while from the Soudan comes "Agricultural Scenes" and "Pottery from Borneo."

Micro-cinematography reveals the hidden secrets of bee, frogs, the great centipede "The Pitcher Plant," "The Opening Bud," "The Chameleon," affording most attractive and interesting lessons in these varied forms of life hitherto known only in part, and then only after exhaustive and irksome studies impossible to the young; while "The Hedgehog" and "A Study of Kittens," enlarge the present knowledge of some more familiar animals.

"Children's Day in Japan" will interest many, especially as it shows how the Japanese authorities encourage youthful indulgencies, by giving them at least one day of the year "the freedom of the city."

"The History of Common Salt," adds another to a growing list of subjects imparting knowledge upon common things in life, familiarity with which has often hidden their value.

Pictures showing how soldiers can build a "Pontoon Bridge" in twenty minutes is a splendid lesson on the value of system and discipline, as is also another showing interesting "Military Maneuvers."

The first production in Great Britain of Gaumont's new color process, "Chrono Chrome," was at the London Coliseum last week. The process, which if not already familiar to America, soon will be, is a kinematographic adaption of the lithographers' three-color process and is based on the super-imposition principle practiced by color photographers.

NEW YORK EXHIBITORS AND EDUCATIONAL PICTURES.

At the regular monthly meeting of the New York Exhibitors' League, the courtesy of the floor was granted to Mr. E. C. Clarke, representing the American Museum of Safety; Mr. Clarke explained that it was the desire of the association which he represented to display pictures on the screen to school children, showing them the dangers of the streets of the metropolis, also how to avoid such dangers. He then asked the exhibitors if they would allow him the use of their theaters during the forenoon, as he expected to have the co-operation of the Board of Education to allow children to attend these places, where they could see the pictures and hear lectures on the same.

A motion was made and unanimously carried, that the members of the organization co-operate with Mr. Clarke, and tender him all the support they possibly could in this good work. A committee was appointed to assist Mr. Clarke of the following members: Mr. F. E. Samuels, chairman; Mr. L. Germain, Mr. F. B. Fulmer, Mr. Frank Tichenor and Mr. L. M. Blumenthal.

This is a move in the direction often advocated by the "Educator" in forming a basis of mutual help, whereby the schools anywhere could use the picture houses for all such similar purposes. Now that a beginning has been made with such a general subject as that of the Safety Association, it will be an easy matter to continue along lines of equally important branches of educational subjects. May this move not only grow in its usefulness, but may it also become general throughout the country by means of an alliance between the Exhibitors' League and the educational authorities.

"BELSHAZZAR'S FEAST" (Gaumont).

This famous occasion which perhaps stands alone in the history of the world as a revelry which changed the history of three nations, is the subject of the latest addition to Biblical pictures; as it is also an addition to famous historical subjects. It is prepared with the usual high-class thoroughness which characterizes the work of the Gaumont studio. Of course the chief interest centers around King Belshazzar and the prophet Daniel, eminent French actors fittingly portray these characters and in a measure fulfill the purpose intended, as to the supremacy of king or prophet.

While the picture is intended to portray the one great incident of the title, there is a slight departure from the actual account which is perhaps due to a desire to incorporate some thought of the historical relations of those times. This departure is shown in the first scene where "Belshazzar, King of Babylon insults from his ramparts Cyrus, King of Persia, who is besieging the city." This digression may be allowable in that it gives a reason for the necessary connection—in thought at least—as to the occasion for the after conflict. Daniel is also shown as previouslv warning the king, as is also "a courageous soldier who tries to show his monarch the folly of his disobedience and of his debauches."

In spite of all this, the impiety of the occasion increases until that great act of desecration, in which the king orders the production of the sacred vessels which were taken from the Temple in Jerusalem and "drank wine in them." This crowning act of profanity at the height of the feast brings down the wrath of the outraged "God of the Hebrews" and Belshazzar sees his doom in the extraordinary hand-writing on the wall. Daniel is called and performs the two-fold work of translating the writing and pronouncing the king's doom. "In that night was King Belshazzar slain," a great battle scene follows in which the hosts of Babylon are overthrown, the king killed and the city strewn with the dead.

An additional scene depicting "The Triumph of Cyrus" is timely for the purpose of making a complete picture. Every endeavor has evidently been set forth to make the picture faithfully represent the times and with much success.

EDUCATIONAL PICTURES MOST IN DEMAND.

Enquiry among some manufacturers as to the class of pictures most in demand, and by whom, elicits the fact that biblical, religious and industrial pictures are asked for first, also that these enquiries are in the proportion of three from churches, to one from schools. After these, topical pictures lead, the fact that topical pictures are also used by every exhibitor makes them the most largely used of educational films, if all classes of people are considered. A brief article on this page one month ago suggesting the most valuable character of educational films, and offering to place any enquirer in line for obtaining complete lists of such films, brought forth a fair number of requests—to which it was a pleasure to reply, as it was also to notice from whom the enquiries came and for what high aims and purposes the information was sought.

The interests of educational moving pictures were never so advanced as at the present time; never were manufacturers more intent in making every effort to keep pace with the great progress being made; it is now only necessary for them to know what is required, and they with commendable zeal proceed to make such response as lies in their power. It is now beginning to become especially noticeable how the various makers are specializing along certain lines; this serves the two-fold purpose of making it easy to know where to look for certain subjects, as also to be sure of their authenticity.

SEA ANEMONES.

This film is now especially noticed because it opens a new field of interesting subjects. We are fairly well acquainted with the flora of the surface of the earth, but with the beauties of the ocean's depths we have but a limited acquaintance and that of a still more limited extent. The wide range of the picture machine knows no barriers in length, breadth, height or depth.

While the Sea Anemone is not essentially of the deep-sea class because: 1. "They are found on the rocks when the tide falls." Being readily noticeable by their varied and often brilliant coloring.

2. "They attach themselves strongly to the rocks." As a result they cannot ruthlessly be detached, requiring some strength to remove them. When removed they seem to lose both shape and stability, but:

Sea Anemone Dining At Home.

3. "When replaced in water they quickly reopen and give the impression of a fountain," assuming what must be their natural beauty when in their native element. Probably the greatest peculiarity is noticed when any kind of shell-fish approaches for:

4. "Their tentacles give out an irritating fluid which causes reckless shell-fish to beat a hasty retreat." This particular picture is very interesting, as one fish after another is seen to approach in a most natural manner, and then suddenly rush back frightened, without any visible cause: the exuding fluid must certainly be exceedingly repulsive. Another astonishing feature of this many sided sea-product is:

5. "They are great flesh-eaters, feeding on shell-fish, which they crush and absorb." Before eating they appear like large chrysanthemums with petals of unusual length, swaying with the motion of the water, when, however, a shell-fish is dropped in the center (as shown in the illustration) they immediately begin to close up, drawing the victim down in the center like as in quicksand, sinking, and sinking, until crushed and absorbed.

6. "They are famous for their graceful movements and brilliant colors." Wind and tide with gentle sway give the long tentacles a graceful rythmic movement which becomes fascinating, while the varied hues impart a beauty which demands appreciation. This is one of those films which, although entirely new to the beholder, he at once becomes entirely familiar with it and is at once educated and pleased.

Flickers.

THERE are very few people in Chicago who do not know the original of the accompanying cut, but I dare say there are quite a few outside of the Windy City who do not know him. For the benefit of those who are not acquainted with Mr. S. Van Ronkel, I will take advantage of this opportunity of introducing him as one of the "reg'la fellers" of Chicago.

Our friend Van Ronkel is one of the pioneers in the film business, and has had a long and varied experience in every branch of the industry; first as an exhibitor, then a manufacturer, an exchange man and now owns and operates the American Slide and Poster Co., with headquarters in the First National Bank Building, Chicago, and a branch office in all General Film Co. offices in that city, as he handles theater advertising matter for licensed programs only. Mr. Van Ronkel has made a study of "advertising the films," and is the originator of many novel and unique ideas in this line.

From our friend, Charlie Abrams, of the Great Northern Feature Film Co., we learn that Marty Williams, assistant to J. W. Morgan, manager of the Universal Exchange, Kansas City, has been granted a license (to wed), and the big event was staged this week. Mr. Williams is very well known throughout the Eastern and Western film trade, and we feel sure that all those not already acquainted with the fact will welcome the news.

E. Mandelbaum, of Cleveland, Ohio, and J. R. Freuler, of Milwaukee, Wis., are in New York attending a directors' meeting of the Mutual Film Comporation.

A letter received from our friend Abe Warner tells of his arrival in Los Angeles, where he intends to remain for at least two weeks and then journey to Portland, Ore., and establish a new office. During his trip through the South he visited Norfolk, Va., and New Orleans, and made arrangements to take over two new offices. Mr. Jack Warner will in future be identified as manager of the Norfolk branch, and Mr. John A. Nichol will manage the New Orleans business.

Tommie Evans, manager of the Fort Lee studios of the Universal Film Manufacturing Co., played host at a beefsteak party Saturday night given in honor of Glenn White, who is leaving the employ of the Universal Co. for a European trip. Billy Quirk, as toastmaster, coaxed some very good speeches from the guests, and presented Mr. White with a scarf pin and cane, which was a present from the entire company of players. Every one of the hundred or more present agreed it was the best time they had had for some time.

George Kleine visited the offices of the Moving Picture World Wednesday afternoon, accompanied with his usual smile and a glad hand for us all. After discussing "climatic" conditions for a while, he hurried off to catch the 20th Century train for Chicago. MAC.

ROSS RESIGNS.

J. G. G. Ross, formerly general manager of the Nicholas Power Company, has resigned that position to continue his work as senior partner of Ross & Taggart, New York City, mechanical engineers.

"The Impostor" (Gaumont)

HERE is a drama the interest in which increases as the story unfolds. The leading character is played bv Mme. Renee Carll. If the part assigned to her is an unpopular one, it must be admitted that out of it she gets much—of the sort that will make the adventuress even more disliked. Mme. Carll has the role of one who tries to defraud an unsuspecting old woman. As a means to this end she steals from a daughter-in-law papers and photographs and passes herself off on the older woman as the widow of a son who had left his home ten years before. There is a child in this story who does work worthy of special mention. Gaumont children are always interesting—chiefly because they are trained to the camera; there is not the constant turning of the eyes apparently to someone standing on the side lines. The entire cast, although a large one, is excellent. If there be an impression during the first reel that the same results might have been accomplished in shorter time, this feeling is dissipated in the second and third reels. The photography is the best.

Scene from "The Impostor" (Gaumont).

There are some good situations in "The Impostor." One is where the grandmother looks into the face of little Jenny and sees there the look of the father. The scene in the police station, where occurs the confrontation of the adventuress by the daughter-in-law, is dramatic. The action of the child, after she has been taken with her mother to the home of the grandmother, in bringing into the house the ragged little flower sellers who had been her brief companions in misery and squalor, is pathetic in the extreme. Taken altogether, "The Impostor" is well done.

JOHN R. CUMPSON DEAD.

On Saturday night, March 15, Mr. John R. Cumpson, the well-known moving picture comedian, died of pneumonia at the home of his sister in New York City. His last motion picture work was done last fall as a free lance. Prior to that he was with the Imp Company for about a year. Mr. Cumpson is perhaps best known to photoplay-goers as "Bumptious," a character that he played often while with the Edison Company prior to his engagement with the Imp Company. By far the best work Mr. Cumpson ever did in pictures was during his initial engagement as a photoplayer with the old Biograph Company, in the well-remembered "Mr. and Mrs. Jones" series, he playing the part of Jones, with Miss Florence Lawrence as Mrs. Jones. Mr. Cumpson had a long theatrical career before entering the motion picture field.

Here is Your Library, Mr. Exhibitor.

The Motion Picture Annual, published by the Chalmers Publishing Company, is a small encyclopedia. The exhibitor can always turn to it with confidence. It has been prepared by practical moving picture men, who know and understand the needs of the exhibitor. Add this to your library forthwith, for it costs but one dollar and twenty-five cents in paper covers or $1.50 in cloth boards. It is fully worth it. The best writers in the motion picture field have provided the literary matter in it. The complete list of releases for 1912 (Licensed and Independent) and the classified trade directory are worth something to you, many times the price perhaps.

Do You Read Advertisements? You Know, Don't You? We Advertise Only to Impress You—The Buyer.

HERE IS FOOD FOR THOUGHT

The Finest Theatres of America, England, Scotland, Australia and Cuba use the Motiograph Machine. Is it not a well known fact that these large Companies operating several theatres in circuit, employ only such instruments (human and mechanical) as assure positive success?

They Take No Chances; They Know by Experience

And HERE ARE SOME FACTS—

The Motiograph Machine is built in one factory—its own. It is built only of the best material money will buy. It is built under the direct supervision of the officers of the Company. It is not an assembled product of many factories.

The Motiograph Machine leads always in improvements. No expense is spared in keeping far ahead of the times.

The Motor Drive Motiograph is ten years ahead of all others.

Mutual Film Corporation

Rental Offices Covering the Entire Country
Executive Offices at 60 Wall St., New York

The Mutual Program Is The Very Best Because:

1. It is founded exclusively on a basis of quality. It releases every week films which have never been equalled in the history of the film business.

2. Quality has never been sacrificed for quantity. A basic program of 21 reels is better than forty or forty-five reels of which the greater portion is below standard.

3. PROTECTION IS AFFORDED MUTUAL EXHIBITORS. The Mutual Film Corporation is content to do a measure of business merited by its commercial value. An exhibitor securing Mutual Service can feel safe that he will not wake up some morning and see his competitor running an earlier run of pictures than he.

4. The value of Mutual Films is attested by the fact that some of the largest theaters in the country have broken all their previous house records with them.

5. The multiple reel features are unequalled by any program on earth. An exhibitor need but compare the Mutual Features with others to be convinced. There are more two and three reel features released regularly than any competitive program. (See list below.)

6. The policy of the Mutual Film Corporation in purchasing its films places the world's markets at its feet. These films are bought on an exclusive basis.

7. The Mutual Film Corporation is the sole agent in the United States and Canada for such popular and leading brands of film as THANHOUSER, KAY-BEE, BRONCHO, KEYSTONE, RELIANCE, AMERICAN, MAJESTIC, EXCELSIOR, MUTUAL EDUCATIONAL, MUTUAL WEEKLY.

8. The Mutual Method of doing business is the only safe one for the exhibitor. He can advertise a coming feature as heavily as he wishes, and not fear that his thunder will be stolen by his competitor, who will book the same film a day or two in advance.

9. Customers are not taken on promiscuously. Before service is contracted for we assure ourselves that we can take care of you and protect you. If you are not a Mutual Exhibitor you should lose no time in ascertaining if your territory is open. DO IT NOW!

What Other Film Enjoys This Distinction?

KALEM'S Biblical Masterpiece, "From the Manger to the Cross," has been endorsed by the Pope, the Bishop of London, the Archbishop of Westminster, Lloyd George and others prominent in all walks of life. Eminent divines in the United States are unanimous in stating that the film has been most reverently produced. Everywhere it has been shown, its appeal has been uniformly strong.

A correspondent writes from Atlanta:

> "Old men and women can be seen struggling through a high wind that is dangerous to encounter, to reach the Montgomery Theatre where the picture is being shown. No revival meeting has ever created so much religious enthusiasm and local comment."

The greatest money-making film ever offered. Its life is indefinite. It is only a question of a very short time when the last of the States rights will be sold. Are you interested in any one of the few that remain open? Write us if you are—wire if you want to be on the safe side.

LUBIN.

WOMEN OF THE DESERT (Mar. 31)—Assma and Maimama, sisters, love Giafar; he, however, loves Maimama. Assma tries to win Giafar from her sister, and failing resolves to resort to incantation. She lights a fire, casts poisonous herbs and leaves into the camp pot and prepares the potion. It fails utterly and Maimama and Giafar are happy in their love. Assmo is furious and resolves to get rid of her sister-rival by having her abducted and sold at the slave market. She negotiates with a slave dealer, promising to deliver into his hands a woman so beautiful that sse shall command a big price and that she, Assama, will also add fifty pieces of gold.

By an arrangement with Assma, Masronds men seize Miamama and carry her off. Assama pretends great agony and concern for the loss of her sister, but she continues to try and fascinate Giafar; he, however, being unconsolable. Maimama is sold at the market to the Caliphs eunuchs, who rejoice that they have secured so beautiful a slave for their royal master's harem. Giafar sees her draged away but is powerless. He follows the eunuchs to the palace and bribes the chief eunuch to give him a position as gardener in the palace grounds. Maimama is dragged into the harem where Saad Ibn Maad, the Caliph, endeavors to kiss her. She struggles and screams. Giafar hear sher cries, leaps into the room and drags her from the Caliph's arms. Maimama pleads that they may tell their story of the abduction and their love. Saad grants permission and after hearing the narrative comforts the lovers and gives orders that they be set free.

SHIPPING A CLOCK (April 1).—Clarence Jolson receives as a Christmas present a large marble mantle clock. As there is no mantle piece in the room he is at a loss to find a spot to hold the time piece. He finally resolves to get rid of the clock. He will send it to his brother, Felix, who has the reputation of always being late. Jolson forthwith instructs his housekeeper, Polly Wilson, to go to the cellar and dig out a box or something in which he may pack the clock. Polly brings boxes and other wrapping material, all of which does not fit. Many suggestions are made by the housekeeper and others, all of which are bothersome. Finally Jolson resolves to keep the clock himself even if he has to house it in the cellar.

THE FAKE SOLDIERS (April 1).—Marks and Johnson, two business men, receive notice of a special meeting of the board of directors of the bank. This notice they lose no time in showing to their wives. It is a good excuse to attend the regular weekly card game at the club. While the club is in session, it is suddenly interrupted by the police. During the raid, Marks and Johnson make their escape. They are closely persued by two cops. They finally make their get away on a freight train. In the morning when the train stops they find they are in a town that is under martial law. They think it is a good idea to deceive their wives and have a good time and a few days sport. They borrow a couple of soldiers suits, have their pictures taken which they send back to their wives, saying that they have been drafted in the army. The wives, hearing of the hardships of the soldiers, decide to visit their husbands with baskets of food. They arrive in town and go from camp to camp. The soldiers do not know their husbands. A friend of Marks and Johnson meets the wives and puts them on the right track. He learns of the deception and fixes things up. Marks and Johnson meet their wives and get away with the joke, and return to their wives love and confidence.

A FALSE FRIEND (April 3).—Tom Morton, in love with Elsie, is unaware that his friend, Jack Winters, also loves her and is trying to win her away from him. While out riding one day, Tom sees a little Indian child playing with a rattlesnake. He shoots the rattler and thereby gains the gratitude of the child's mother. Returning to her hut with the child, the mother is beaten by her husband, Sancho, while he is in a drunken frenzy and she, swearing vengence, follows him with a gun.

In the meantime Tom and Sancho meet and have an altercation. As Tom draws his gun, the squaw shoots from ambush and Sancho drops dead. Men rushing out of the store find Tom with his gun drawn and he is accused of the murder. Jack who has been attracted by the queer action of the squaw, follows her and witnesses the firing of the shot, but remains silent, planning to have Tom convicted of the murder and thereby winning Elsie. The day before the trial, Jack frightens the squaw into leaving by telling her that she is suspected of the murder and she, after a night of wandering falls exhausted at the door of Elsie's home. While being cared for by Elsie and her mother the squaw recognizes the picture of Tom and upon being told the cause of Elsie's grief she confesses that she killed Sancho. Elsie immediately takes her to the court house where she tells her story. As she finishes the exposure, the wounds inflicted by her husband prove fatal and she falls dead at the feet of the man she has saved.

THE BURDEN BEARER (April 4).—Robert Neville, a naval office, returns form a two years' cruise to find that Agnes, his mother's ward, whom he loves has given her heart to Dudley, his younger brother. Dudley, his mother's favorite, scarcely more than a spoiled boy, has fallen under the influence of Cecelia Dean, a beautiful and notorious vampire.. Not only is the boy on the verge of moral and financial ruin, but declares his intention of marrying Cecelia. He determines to save his brother. He vainly attempts to bribe Cecelia. In his desperation he is upon the point of striking her, but her physical courage causes him to hesitate. He forms a new plan, and plays upon her inordinate vanity by pretending to have been swerved from his course by her charms, and becomes, apparently a passionate lover. Cecelia really falls in love with Robert, and indifferently throws Dudley aside. Dudley takes comfort in the love of Agnes, but not unnaturally conceives a bitter hatred for Robert, and forces a quarrel upon him. The mother and Agnes blindly champion Dudley, and there is a complete break between Robert and the family. Robert continues to play the part of Cecelia's lover until Dudley and Agnes are married, when he tells Cecelia that he has cared for her no more than she has for the men she has duped and ruined. Robert goes away to patiently take up his duties, none thanking him for having taken up their burden.

HIS WIDOW (April 5).—Walter Faust gets a letter from his god-father, Edwin Barbour, whom he has not seen in ten years, stating that the old man is coming to make a long visit. Walter does not enjoy the prospect and gets his landlady, Mrs. McGoon, to pretend that she is his widow, he having died lately. By this ruse it is expected that the old man will quickly turn back. Barbour, however, likes the looks of the "widow" and resolves to stick. He also phones the sad news of Walter's passing to Frances, his sweetheart.

Later in the day Walter comes back to the house to get some clean linen and old Barbour, thinking him to be a burglar, has him arrested. The policeman knows Walter well, but getting the wink takes his prisoner away. Later the god-father sparks the landlady and, going to buy an engagement ring, runs into Walter and his sweetheart on the street. He again demands that the burglar be re-arrested, but when the cop tells the story all the party go home and the widow announces her willingness to become Mrs. Barbour.

COLLECTING THE BILL (April 5).—John Scott always refuses to pay his bills. He owes a bill to Archibald Marks. Marks, having a number of clerks in his office, decides that he will send them one after the other, until Scott being dunned so much will pay. The first clerk that receives the bill with instructions that he call upon Scott is rather alarmed at the prospect of what will happen to him. However, he has to make a trial. He finds Scott in his office and receives a rather cold reception until he is so persistent that he is thrown out of the window after being beaten soundly.

Upon his return to the office another clerk is entrusted with the bill. He meets Scott on the street, presents the bill and receives in return a pair of black eyes instead of the money.

Marks then offers half of the amount of the bill to the one who will collect it. At this offer another clerk decides to try. He meets with the same dose that was administered to his predecessors. Marks then comes to the conclusion that he will try in person. He does so and Scott becomes enraged at him and throws him out of the office. Upon his return to the office Marks meets the three other victims of Scott's wrath and they are consoling themselves as best they can, when the stenographer, a pretty little miss, asks Mark's permission to try her hand. He willingly gives his consent. She takes the bill and calls upon Scott and with her woman's wit and cleverness collects the bill and receives half of the amount for the trouble.

THE SENSATIONAL MASTERPIECE OF MOTION PICTURE PRODUCTION

Detective William J. Burns in "THE EXPOSURE OF THE LAND SWINDLERS"

IN THREE PARTS

To Be Released Tuesday, April 1st, 1913

THROUGH THE GENERAL FILM COMPANY

EXCLUSIVELY

Detective Burns personally appears in the production which vividly portrays the scientific methods of criminal investigation that have made him the greatest sleuth of all time. The story is based on actual experiences in his career. Miss Alice Joyce, Kalem's celebrated leading lady, heads the supporting company.

Beg It, Borrow It or Steal It—But Above All Get It!

The story opens as a troop of Cuban cavalry stop at the Arila plantation, and Captain Lopez attempts to snatch tribute from the lovely life of Theresa. Tom Harding happens along and sends the soldier down for the "count." The later is discomforted but withdraws filling the air with threats.

The Cubans rise against Spain and Signor Arita and his daughter leave their plantation for refuge in Havana. In the interim the revolution is progressing and spirited battle scenes are frequent. When Senor Arila and his daughter are on the road to Havana, their coach is halted by Captain Lopez and his squad of Cuban cavalry. With his usual impertinance he is about to implant himself in the coach; the girl's father resents this and stands him off with a repeating rifle. Harding and his men, observing the coach surrounded, ride in and drive the impertinent Spanish sympathizers off, and allow the coach and its passengers to escape. Then they are overpowered by a superior number and Harding is incarcerated in Cabanas. Lopez prevails upon the commander to execute Harding; but the daring and cunning of Theresa outwits him, and when the cruel war is over they come back to Cuba and find peace and happiness.

MARGARITA AND THE MISSION FUNDS (April 1).—Steward Hopwell, an adventuring American, who is on the staff of the Governor of California, is sent to the San Gabriel Mission to levy on the mission funds. Father Sandez, the Superior, secretly but strenuously resents the encroachments of the civil authorities and seeks to evade the payment of the tribute. Hopewell attends a fandango in the village and falls in love with Margarita Foquerora. Among the attendants at the function is Ramon Valenzuella, a dashing outlaw, who, with some of his leaders, is incognito. He tries to gain the favor of the fair Margarita but is repulsed in favor of Hopewell. He leaves vowing vengeance. He visits the mission, steals the cash bag and makes away with it. Hopewell makes up a party and starts in pursuit, overtakes the outlaw and after a sharp fight gets the money back. He hesitates between love and duty, having the code in hand, but finally sends the Governor the money required out of his own pocket, resigns his command, joins the church and marries Margarita.

A LUCKY MISTAKE (April 2).—Mary Powell, daughter of the chief of police in Cranston, goes to visit her aunt in the distant city of Alden. When she arrives at her destination she discovers her aunt is not at home and on her way to the hotel where she is to spend the time until she arrives, she drops her purse.

A lynx-eyed tramp picks up the purse and proceeds to fill up and make merry. When she finds that her money is gone she wires her father her perdicament. He promptly wires the chief at Aden to go at once to the hotel "assist Mary Powell and give her the best of attention." The careless operator makes "assist" read "arrest" which starts lots of things. The young chief of police is very loathe to arrest such a lovely young lady, but is forced to comply with the order to take the very best care of her. After some tribulations her father gets to Alden and relieves the young lady. The tramp is arrested before he has emptied the purse and the attentive young chief of police comes in for a share of gratitude.

ARABIA, THE EQUINE DETECTIVE (April 3).—Millionaire Ford selects a superb diamond necklace for his daughter Violet's birthday. Bob Collins, a suitor, is an artist and loves to sketch her face. He has a rival in Hector Loraine, who sees them together and immediately forms a deep and settled hatred for the seemingly favored artist. Collins drops his sketch book and the cunning Loraine picks it up and saves it for future reference. Violet has a horse, Arabia, that is a most intelligent equine. Hector, who is a visitor at the Ford home, is shown the necklace, and he eventually abstracts it from the family safe. Violet first forms a dislike for Hector because he is unfriendly to her horse, and that intelligent animal leads to his undoing in return. Arabia sees Hector take the jewels and when he hides it in Arabia's stall, the steed picks it up and hands it to the visiting officer and subsequently indicates the thief.

THE HOYDEN'S AWAKENING (April 4).—Cicely Moore is the spirited and somewhat spoiled child of a wealthy widower. She is the adored one of her father, but her seeming wild and wilful ways puzzles and distresses him. He consults the family physician who advises him to send her to a boarding school, suggesting this will tame her. Cicely immediately assumes leadership and is more or less concerned with all forms of original mischief. While she is away on probation her father grows so lonesome that he falls victim to the wiles of a designing widow and her daughter. When Cicely returns home she finds the pair in near possession of her father's home. She seemingly falls easily into their hands, but has her eyes open and plans quietly but effectively for their ejection. The scheming widow and her daughter have connived with an unscrupulous lawyer to take advantage of her desperately ill father to write a will in their favor and disinherit his daughter. How cleverly Cicely ousts them, outwits them and protects her own, makes an interesting and ingenious denouement, showing that she has fully awakened to the serious responsibilities of life.

THE ELDER BROTHER (Mar. 31).—In a small sized city, two brothers, lawyers, are practicing. The younger one is wont to go astray. Gambling is the dissipation and he even brings his gambling chums to his office. It is on one of these occasions that Eric, the older brother, comes upon them and discovers a dice which had fallen to the ground.

The two brothers, Bob and Eric, love the minister's only daughter, Jean Lindsay. The first sight of love is seen when Mr. Lindsay with Jean calls on the brothers to get the elder one, Eric, to call for a small legacy left him. Here Jean goes at once to Bob and the first sign of love appears. Later Eric tells Jean of his love and is refused. This is seen by Bob. The minister comes upon a love scene between Bob and his daughter and he at once asks Bob to go. The boy is desperate and pleads with his brother to help him. This is where the elder brother shows his true worth. He pleads with the minister to consent to the union between Jean and Bob but it is useless. The father is obdurate.

Bob goes from bad to worse and forges his brother's name on a check to obtain money to elope. The elder brother discovers it and just as Bob and Jean are about to board the train he and the minister arrive on the scene. The minister makes Jean return home and Bob goes to make a man of himself.

A year passes and finally Bob writes to his brother telling of having seen him propose to Jean and suggesting that he propose to her, since in all probability he, himself, has been forgotten. The letter pleases Eric. He shows it to Mr. Lindsay and is told that Jean had just left for his office with a document.

In the meantime Bob's longing to see the old home town is too much for him so he comes back, finding no one in his brother's office he waits and soon Jean comes to deliver the document. The meeting of the two sweethearts is too much for them. The old love still lives and, just as they are in each other's arms, Eric appears, realizes Bob is the one, yields and as Jean's father comes in, begs him to bless them.

WITH THE EYES OF THE BLIND (April 1).—John McLane has, by his operations on Wall Street, almost ruined James Horton. McLane is very hard ii business matters. Horton comes to his house to plead with him but he refuses to see him. Poor Horton is crushed when he arrives home. His son, Walter, insists upon knowing the cause and when he hears it he makes up his mind to go and see McLane and tell him what he thinks of him.

Meantime McLane has forgotten all about everything but his blind daughter, Nora. Nora is a very lovable girl with all the wonderful intuition and highly developed sense of touch of the blind. She has left her father down stairs in the library.

As her father goes outside young Horton arrives. They have a stormy altercation in which McLane is accidentally killed with a paper knife. Nora hears him fall and runs down stairs. Horton sits in a chair and feigns sleep. Nora touches him lightly on the face thus impressing his features upon her mind. She finds her dead father and Horton escapes.

A year later Nora has recovered her sight. Her father's slayer has never been discovered. Nora goes into society. One of her earliest acquaintances at a house party is Walter Horton. He recognizes her but she does not know him. They are in love with each other from the first. Horton tells her of his love and with the first embrace she touches his face with her fingers and learns who he really is. The dream of happiness is over.

THE DUKE'S DILEMMA (April 2).—A Duke has arranged to marry a lady of fortune, but when the time comes for her presentation at his castle, the Duke realizes that he is financialy ruined and that his court has deserted him. In the midst of his dilemma a theatrical troupe arrives to try and book an appearance at the castle. This gives the Duke his idea. He gets the actors to appear in costume as his court ladies and gentlemen and thus saves the day. The comedy lies in the peculiar court etiquette of the actors, and in the incidental flirtations between aristocrats and barnstormers.

THE INVENTOR'S SKETCH (April 4).—Madison, who has just completed an invention which will revolutionize the whole world in the construction of a certain engine, has a rival in the person of McCrank, who, through the aid of Madison's general manager, Clayton, is to gain access to the office of the inventor. Madison, in his hurry to keep an appointment, leaves the sketch on the table, with only the office boy, Billy, in charge. He is unable to get Billy on the telephone. Billy, noticing that the boss forgot the sketch, hides it behind the paper on the wall, after the paper hangers have quit for the day. Just then McCrank and Clayton appear and demand the sketch. Although the office boy says he does not know where it is the men disbelieve him and lock him in the vault. At this moment Madison appears, goes to the vault, finds Billy, who explains all, and the plotters are placed in the hands of the law.

MASTER AND MAN (April 5).—A bachelor, coming home one night under the influence of liquor, discovers a burglar taking his silverware. In his drunken condition he makes the robber put back the spoils and also promises him a position as butler if he will give up his profession as a burglar. He agrees.

A few months later the bachelor marries a woman who falls heavily in debt playing cards. The woman to whom she owes the money is insistent, and matters come to a climax when at a card party in her own home she notices a guest drop her purse. She picks it up and when the loss is discovered the owner demands that everybody be searched by the detectives summoned. In the meantime the wife has given the purse to the butler for safe keping.

In this picture we are shown what gratitude really means and the sacrifice possible in the least of us. The burglar has paid his debt and the woman has learned a lesson.

VITAGRAPH.

THE MODERN PRODIGAL (2 parts—Mar. 28).—Part One.—With all the good influences and favorable surroundings of a model home, Mr. and Mrs. Gray cannot understand why their son, Jack, does not prefer it to all other places. Jack seeks pleasure elsewhere and his father finds fault with him for his non-appearance at supper-time or his delay in getting home a certain hour at night. This arouses Jack's anger, and he tells his father the only way to avoid his fault-finding is to get out of the way of it. His father replies, "If you leave this house and go to your evil companions, you leave it forever." His mother tries to intercede, but Jack has cast the defi. He goes to a roadhouse with his thoughtless associates for a good time. They are all seated at a table eating and drinking when a girl at the next table flirts with Jack. Her escort takes exception to Jack's familiarity. Jack, with his usual hot temper, resents his interference and in the melee, he strikes the man over the head with a bottle, felling him. During the confusion, Jack, with some of his companions, escape in an auto. They drive to the nearest railway station in time to catch the train bound for the West. The man whom Jack struck down is given immediate attention and he soon recovers from the blow. Fortunately, he is not seriously injured. Jack, not knowing the consequences of his escapade, and thoroughly frightened, determines to put a long distance between himself and any possibility of arrest.

His father and mother are very much concerned about Jack's disappearance and constantly grieve about him. His mother's prayers are always for her boy and his safety. They avail much, for Jack cannot forget her gentle words and love for him at all times, and he determines to mend his ways and redeem the past.

Mr. Gray, who is the head of a large Trust Company, has aged greatly since Jack left home, and together with his business anxieties, feels the strain very keenly, and regrets his harshness in the correction of his son. The last straw comes when the Trust Company, of which he is the president, is not able to meet it's obligations and he is unable to raise the money necessary to tide over the crisis. His heart, which had always been weak, fails him and when he suddenly learns that his banking house must go to the wall and close its doors, he suddenly feels an ominous weakness come over him. Seizing the telephone receiver, he calls up his wife, telling her to hasten to his office at once. Before he can finish the message, he falls prostrate on his desk and expires, just as one of the clerks enters the room. Mrs. Gray hurries to the bank, rushes into his office, followed by the angry depositors. She lifts her husband's head and announces he is dead. In the presence of the bereaved woman, the angry men stand speechless and remove their hats out of respect for Mr. Gray, as she falls in a faint over his lifeless body.

Part Two.—Mrs. Gray is left alone with her only companion, her faithful collie, Jean, her only solace in her bereavement. To satisfy the creditors, the Gray mansion and its contents are sold at auction. She is offered a home by a friend, but their pride prompts her to refuse it, and she determines to go to New York. With her few belongings and her dog Jean, she leaves, to face an uncertain future.

Jack has secured a good position, through hard work and close attention to business, and has made himself a valuable employee. In his spare moments and at night, he has invented an automobile attachment which he has patented. He receives word by telegraph that a number of capitalists will incorporate for the manufacture of his device, and give him 25% of the stock and $50,000 in cash. He accepts the proposition and suddenly finds himself a comparatively wealthy man. Visions of the past come before him. His mind is made up to return to his home and make his parents happy with the knowledge of his accomplishments for good. He gives notice and departs for home. Arriving there, he goes at once to his father's place of business and finds it closed. As he is searching for information, he meets a lawyer who did business with the family and from him learns what has happened. He breaks down completely and gives way to his sorrow. Recovering himself, he makes arrangements with the lawyer to trace the old household effects and to recover as many of them as he can, while he goes to New York in search of his mother.

Mrs. Gray has found it very hard work to make her living with her own hands, and finally becomes so poor that she is obliged to go to an old woman's home, to which she is taken sick and helpless. Jack fails to locate his mother. Seated on one of the benches of the boulevard, he is seriously meditating his next step, when the nurse attending his mother at the Home, walks by with the dog Jean, who rushes up to Jack. He returns its friendly greeting by throwing his arms about its neck. The nurse, in surprise, asks Jack what it means and after explanations, he learns his mother's whereabouts. Calling a taxi, they drive to the home where Jack finds his dear old mother making herself as useful as she can in her feebleness. The meeting is intermingled with joy and pathos and after Jack furnishes his mother with a suitable wardrobe, he loses no time in taking her from the place. They return to their old home, which he has re-purchased and re-furnished with as many of the old furnishings as could be recovered. Jack leads his mother to the place where once hung his own portrait and pointing to the wall, shows her the portrait of his father, telling her that while he is not with them in the flesh, he will ever be in their remembrance. Her mother's heart goes out in thanksgiving and praise for the return of her boy and the re-occupancy of the old home, where she and Jack settle down to the enjoyment of his good fortune and forget the trials of the past. Jack, with his mother, sitting before the old fireside, finds no pleasanter moments than to remind her that he can now realize the kindly intentions of his father and appreciate her prayers for his safety and guidance.

BEDELIA BECOMES A LADY (Mar. 31).—Every spare moment of Bedelia's time is spent in reading stories in the magazine, and absorbing all the trashy novels that come within her grasp. Bedelia acquires aspirations for city life and society. The farm becomes distasteful to her and she gives little heed to her mother's scoldings about wasting her time in reading trash. Hiram, the farm hand, who is in love with Bedelia, is almost heart-broken when she tells him that he is not her style and announces her intention of going to the city where she will be the cynosure of society, as she appears in its spotlight.

At last her opportunity comes, and she is so carried away with herself, she cuts loose and by her behavior, shows her lack of good manners and the necessary polish to make her a shining light in the first circles. She returns to the old homestead, willing to take her place where nature and breeding has best fitted her. We must leave much to the imagination of the reader, there is much more to this picture than we have space to describe.

CHECKMATED (April 1).—Betty Bartlett, wellborn, but in poor circumstances, is a stenographer and supports her invalid mother by her work. Cecil Wray comes into a large fortune and is at once a mark for sharks. Lawrence Penton, a broker, who has known Cecil, gets him to go into business with him for the purpose of fleecing him. Betty gets a position in Penton's office, who is rather struck by her good looks. Cecil, who comes to the office but rarely, meets Betty one day when she is ill from nursing her mother and is very kind to her, and afterwards visits Mrs. Bartlett and takes her a few delicacies. Cecil goes out of town for a summer vacation. Penton gets him to leave behind him several blank checks for expenses. Betty, who suspects Penton, tries to warn Cecil, but does not know what to say. Penton tries to make love to Betty and is repulsed by her, whereupon he discharges her. She goes around looking for work. One day she goes to Turner's office, a man who is the friend and accomplice of Penton, and accidentally she overhears their schemes to misuse Cecil's checks, and land him in a stock deal that will ruin him and enrich themselves. She at once telegraphs Cecil to return and tells him all she has heard. He summons a detective and the tables are turned on Penton and his shark companion. Cecil proposes to Betty and tells he loves her for herself and admires her for her quick wit and brains.

ALIXE, OR THE TEST OF FRIENDSHIP (April 2).—Alixe is courted by many admirers. Her most persistent companion is Morton Shaw. Arlington Tappan also loves Alixe, and urges her to give up her associations with Shaw. She does so and is very happy until Arlington becomes more absorbed in his business affairs. Arlington's friend, Sherman Avery, holds a high regard and deep affection for Alixe, as well as a sincere friendship for Arlington.

She becomes tired of Arlington's indifference and decides to leave him and go back to Morton Shaw. Sherman determines to prevent it and follows her, denounces Shaw and advises Alixe not to compromise herself. Finding his office of no avail, he tells Arlington, who has already learned of Alixe's intentions, and hastily he goes with his friend to plead with her to return to him.

Arlington encounters Morton Shaw, who attempts to shoot him. He wrenches the pistol from Shaw's hand, and leads Alixe away, accompanied by their friend. They hastily find a minister, who joins Alixe and Arlington in the bonds of holy wedlock. Sherman walks sadly away, conscious of the great sacrifice of his own love for the sake of his friends.

THE MIDGET'S ROMANCE (April 3).—While taking an airing one afternoon on the Rialto, Lord Roberts, a midget, notices Claire. He later discovers she lives in the same boarding house as himself. The little fellow is very much attracted by Claire and falls in love with her. She pays no attention to him, thinking he is too small to warrant her attention, and intimates that children should be seen and not heard. He feels very much hurt because she mistakes him for a child and she does not realize that he is a man, both in age and feelings, even if he is not full grown. She tries to patronize him as she does other youngsters, and he learns that she is very fond of children. He disguises himself as a small boy and he certainly makes a cunning one. Claire sees him crying on the steps of the house, picks him up lovingly in her arms, and carries him in-doors. Claire is very fond of Harold, a young man boarding at the house and she is very often in his company. They are very affectionate to each other and it is very manifest that she has a very tender regard for him. This arouses the midget's jealousy. His efforts to outrival Harold, brings about many amusing complications. His serious efforts furnish much entertainment for Harold and Claire, and to keep it up, they carry out the joke as far as they can. The little nobleman comes to the conclusion that the joke is getting too funny and he accepts the inevitable, leaving Harold and Claire to the full enjoyment of their own happiness.

OUR COAST DEFENDERS (April 3).—The forts while line the coasts of the Atlantic and Pacific, protecting the approaches from entrance to our harbors by foreign enemies, are matters of interest which have much to do with the safety of our country, and the peaceful enjoyment thereof. The tactics and prictice, in case of the slightest emergency, of our coast defenders, are all shown in the detailed manoeuvers of this war-like demonstration.

LET 'EM QUARREL (April 4).—Cupid plays havoc with the hearts of Maude and Powell, but they are so touchy, they never meet unless they quarrel. At the suggestion of Maude's mother to remedy this condition of things, they decide to go away from each other for one week every month. Maude goes to her friend, Margaret, at Willowdale, and Powell to his old chum, Joe, at Harrington. The first night, they are morose and found to be very unsociable by their friends. On the second night the boys sing, "I wonder who's hugging her now." Powell can stand the strain no longer, feigns illness and leaves. Margaret and the girls sing: "Who are you with tonight?" which is the pinnacle of Maude's fears and she takes her departure for home, leaving a note for her hostess.

Margaret arrives in Harrington and Powell in Willowdale where each learn by telephone that the other is not there. Full of suspicion, heartbroken and wretched, they return to the hotel where they both live. Maude arrives first, casts herself on the bed in despair. Powell does his groaning in the living room. Hearing each other's movements, they mistake them for those of a burglar. Half hoping that it is and that they will be shot, each starts to investigate. When they meet, their surprise is covered only by humility and curiosity and they humbly forgive, happy in each other's embrace, each tells his story to the happiness and amusement of the other.

HE ANSWERED THE AD (April 5).—John's married life is not a happy one and his wife is the cause of it. He cannot read his paper in peace and she makes him assist in the housework after his return from the office at night. The last straw comes when the Knitting Society, of which his wife is president, arrives and takes possession of his home, to enjoy their periodic gossip, under the pretense of sewing. He happens to be in the room when the suffragettes enter and they all load him up with their wraps and bonnets until he looks like an animated hat-rack. He carries their belongings into another room where he locks himself in. While he peruses a paper, he gets an idea. He will answer the "Ad" for a heavy, in the ladies' chorus of a Musical Opera. He selects a dress and other female attire, makes himself up and disguises himself as a leading heavy woman. At the manager's office he makes a hit with the impressario, secures an engagement and gets an excellent contract. The next day he goes to a costumer's and provides himself with several suitable costumes for the chorus. He selects a suitable one in which he attires himself, hides the balance in his wife's closet and takes his departure by way of the fire escape. He reaches the theater in time for the performance and he certainly looks fit for the female Beef Trust.

His wife discovers the dresses and hats he purchased, in her closet and becomes jealous with rage, concluding that he is buying them for another woman. She prepares herself for the street, determined to have a good time herself. She goes to the theater, and while sitting in a box, is surprised to see her husband come upon the stage dressed as a woman. She can scarcely control herself, runs back of the scenes and when he enters, he gets a surprise which almost gives him heart failure. John decides to appease her anger by showing her the money which he has just received for his week's salary. She is taken aback with the roll, and can hardly speak. John tells her if she will agree to his keeping the job, he will give her the salary to spend as she wishes. At this proposal she becomes reconciled, and tells him she is not only willing that he should be a chorus girl but she will act as his maid. Immediately she sets to work and dances attendance upon him, giving him every imaginable attention.

THE GOLDEN HOARD, OR BURIED ALIVE (2 parts—April 4).—Part One.—Red Morel, leader of a gang of outlaws, is driven from point to point, until finally he decides to land his plunder, carry it inland and bury it in a safe place beyond discovery. Bob Stewart, one of their number, deserts and starts out to begin life anew as an honest man. For three days he travels through marsh and mire. He is attacked by fever and delirium. He is found wandering by Pete Nelson, who takes Stewart to his home and cares for him. During Bob's sickness, in his delirium, he raves about the buried treasure and unconsciously tells where it has been hidden. Pete notes this unintentional information and awaiting a favorable time, locates and confiscates it. His conscience troubles him for having taken advantage of Stewart's condition and enriching himself by it, without sharing it with Bob. To relieve his mind, he proposes to Bob that they go into partnership and raise cotton on a large scale, offering him for his services, an equal share in the business. Pete satisfies Bob as to capital by displaying to Bob's astonishment, an immense amount of gold. They purchase land, and are very prosperous in their undertaking, but Pete is always conscious of having done an under-handed piece of work in taking advantage of Bob during his sickness and profiting by his unconscious betrayal of his former associates. Bob, in his prosperity, determines to marry, and is now settled down in a happy home with his wife and two children. Everything has thriven and success crowns his efforts.

In the midst of his happiness, Pete Nelson is taken seriously sick and notwithstanding every effort to save him, he becomes aware that he must die. In his dying moments his conscience is most keen and he asks to see Bob Stewart alone. For the first time, Bob learns that their fortune is based on the stolen treasure, and Pete Nelson was informed of its location through him.

Part Two.—The outlaws return for their buried treasure and discover they have been stolen. They suspect Bob Stewart and swear to be avenged. Morel, the chief, disguises himself as a peddler, makes his way through the country until he learns Bob's whereabouts. He is furious when he finds out that Stewart, now a wealthy man, is living as a law-abiding citizen in peace and comfort with his family. He prowls about his residence and peers through the window. He is seen by Bob, who is thrown into a great state of excitement. He calls his trusty servant, Jim, and arranges with him to return the treasure from whence Pete Nelson had stolen it. Upon reaching the spot, he finds that it is too late to return it. He returns to his family and makes a hurried departure into another part of the country where he hopes, in obscurity, to escape them. They soon locate him, break into the house, seize and bind him. His wife rushes to his assistance, is quickly taken in hand, bound and gagged. They carry Stewart off in triumph, telling him that he has stolen their buried treasure; that they will bury him in the same hole from which he had taken their hoard for his own enrichment. Turning to his wife, they taunt her with the same information and gloat over their inhuman plot. They rush him to the grave which they have prepared for him, place him in a rough coffin, lower it into the grave, which they hastily fill in. They place an impromptu headstone as a warning and reminder to others, and laugh in fiendish glee over their devilish accomplishment.

While this is going on, Mrs. Stewart drags herself to a table on which a lighted lamp is standing. She upsets the table and the house is soon in flames. This attracts the attention of a number of slaves, who are making merry in the cabins. Led by Jim, Stewart's faithful servant, they hurry to the scene and rescue Mrs. Stewart and her children. She tells them of her husband's danger and at once they hasten with their guns to rescue their buried master. They reach the grave, shoot down the pirates and disinter Stewart, whom they find to be still alive. His wife kneels at his side, clasps him to her bosom and greets his smile of recognition with a kiss of love and gratitude for his deliverance.

THE AMERICAN PRINCESS (Mar. 31).—Tom Whitney, connected with the American embassy at Trendary, meets the Princess Alexa and promptly loses his heart. Sometime later the Princess goes shooting and accidentally wounds the young American who is passing through the woods. The injury is a slight one and the young people establish a bond of friendship which soon ripens into love.

Tom is called back to America. He writes to Alexa, asking if she is willing to come to the United States and become his wife. The Princess decides to sign away her title and when she informs her father, the infurated king locks her in her room, under guard. Alexa, however, escapes with the assistance of her maid and flees to America.

At New York, Alexa is met by Tom, who drives her to a little church where a quiet ceremony is performed. The girl has had no time to secure suitable wardrobe and a visit is paid to the famous Lucile establishment, where many beautiful gowns are purchased.

In Washington Tom lavishes presents upon Alexa and is soon in dire financial straits. He is approached by an international spy who induces him to copy certain secret plans. Tom is about to fall from grace when Alexa discovers the situation. By selling her jewels and paying Tom's creditors she thwarts the scheme of the spy and informs her husband: I am no longer a Princess—just your plain American wife."

THE SACRIFICE (April 2).—While on a motor trip, Crane, a young stock broker, stops at an old farmhouse and meets a charming girl, Mary Armstrong. Mary lives with her grandparents and is the idol of their hearts. Her simplicity so impresses Crane that he returns sometime later to pay ardent court, and, winning the girl's hand, he takes her to the city.

Engrossed with her new environment Mary forgets the old folks who wait patiently for a letter. One morning a real estate man comes to the farm and offers $25,000 for the place.

Unable to endure their loneliness, the old couple decide to pay a visit to their loved one and start for the city. They arrive during an afternoon reception and their appearance in the drawing room startles the self-satisfied guests and causes Mary no little uneasiness. She escorts her grandparents to another room and endeavors to make them comfortable.

Meanwhile Crane has made an investment which results disastrously and he is caught in a declining market. Unable to meet the demands he comes home desperate and informs his wife. The conversation is overheard by the grandparents who decide to sell the farm. They have preserved the card of the real estate man and, calling upon him, they make the sale. A check for $25,000 is left for Mary, with a note, and the old folks start back to pack up their belongings.

When the sacrifice is discovered, Crane and his wife come to a realization of their selfishness. They hasten to the country in a motorcar and induce the grandparents to return to the city and make their home with them.

FATTY'S DECEPTION (April 4).—Fatty becomes infatuated with Emma, a young girl who has every intention of marrying Crosby. Emma and Crosby are both fond of athletics and decide to have some fun with Fatty who is continually "butting in." They promise to make an athlete of him.

Fatty, willing to do anything for Emma, turns his front yard into training quarters. He punches the bag and attempts feats on the horizontal bar, much to Emma's amusement.

Crosby gets tired of the game and resents Fatty's intrusions but Emma saves the day by matching the two men for a ten-mile race, announcing that she will give her hand to the winner.

The race starts off. Emma rides in her auto to the finishing line. Crosby so far outdistances Fatty that he stops to join a party of picnicers and is enjoying some refreshments, when he sees Fatty go by, clinging to the end of an automobile. A short distance from the end of the course Fatty climbs down and trots in, an apparent winner. He denies Crosby's accusations when the latter appears on the scene but the would-be athlete is finally humbled.

NEW YORK PUBLIC MARKETS (April 4).—We see the Gansevoort Market at 13th Street and 10th Avenue, where the farm produce is brought in wagons and sold in the street. At the Fulton Market we see the fishing boats at anchor, the retail wagons securing supplies of fish, the unloading and sorting of clams and the general bustle and stir of market life.

A MISSISSIPPI TRAGEDY (April 5).—Calhoun, a planter, lives with his son and daughter, James and Martha. He strongly objects to young Gordon, who has been paying court to Martha and who has the reputation of being a gambler. Calhoun forbids Gordon from entering the house.

One day as Gordon is traveling up the river he sees Calhoun who is returning from the sale of his cotton crop and is counting his money on the deck. Meredith, an unscrupulous gambler, also notices Calhoun and determines to relieve him of his money. Meredith proposes a friendly game of cards and after some hesitation, Calhoun consents.

Through the stateroom window Gordon sees that Meredith is cheating Calhoun. He therefore enters the room boldly and insists upon taking part in the game. When Calhoun stakes everything Gordon cheats and walks out with the money.

Broken in spirit, Calhoun jumps overboard. Meredith finds cards on the floor and sees that Gordon has cheated. He hastens forth to expose him.

Meanwhile Gordon has written the following note and tossed it into Calhoun's stateroom: "I cheated for the first time in my life but it was to save you from a scoundrel who was cheating you. At the first opportunity I will return your money." As he walks away from the stateroom Gordon is set upon by the passengers who have been incited by Meredith and the young fellow is obliged to jump overboard.

When the boat is docked Meredith goes to the Calhoun home and informs the planter's son that his father is dead through Gordon's treachery. A search party is organized and with blood hounds they set forth to capture the fugitive. The note is discovered in the cabin and brought to Martha, who follows the pursuers and rescues Gordon in his time of peril.

ESSANAY.

THE SPY'S DEFEAT (Special—2 parts—Mar. 31).—In July 1870, the Franco-German war broke out, which was to end by overthrowing the European equilibrium, for the benefit of Prussia. The menacing attitude of Russia forced Austria to maintain her neutrality, and this neutrality carried with it that of Italy. Russian diplomacy weighed in the same manner upon Denmark, whose royal house had given in 1886 a princess in marriage to the Tzarevitch. France found herself isolated in Europe. Russia not only prevented the formation of "The League of Neutrals" but by diplomatic means discouraged the collective intervention of Europe. On the third of September the Emperor, on hearing of his uncle's victory at Sedan, drank to his health and broke the glass to give the toast more solemnity. No doubt he, Carl Heinrich, counseled his uncle, Baron Von Buchlieb, to be moderate, but this intimate and sympathetic exchange of private leters did not for one moment alter the friendship of France and Germany for the time being. The spy in the employ of the Russian Government, who were about to take up arms against France, in the disguise of a French peer, was entertained royally by Baron Von Buchlieb. Fredericka, daughter of the prime minister of war, Von Metizine, infatuated with Carl Heinrich, was given authority to enter the royal chamber in which all plans of fortifications, etc., were kept. The Russian hypnotized Fredericka, and induced her to get the valuable plans. Carl Heinrich captured the spy and returned the papers to Von Metizine. The young hero was rewarded by the prime minister of war, and also in securing Fredericka for his bride.

THE SHERIFF'S SON (April 1).—Tom Ryan, the worthless son of the sheriff of Boon County, Montana, abuses his young and delicate wife. The sheriff reprimands his son for his unkind treatment, and orders him from the house. That night, crazed with liquor, he is induced to help two of his underworld friends in robbing the Town Hall. The outer door of the safe is blown, which awakens everybody in the small town. An alarm is sounded immediately, which arouses the sheriff who goes to the Town Hall, enters the office just as the second explosion occurs. He is carried out of the building to his home in a helpless condition. Tom, guarding the horses, too drunk to realize what has happened, is pushed into the wagon and driven away by the men. Alice determines to avenge her father's injury and with a posse goes in pursuit of the fleeing outlaws. Alice discovers that her own husband is one of the three. A few months afterward Tom is released from prison, returns home to his forgiving wife, and promises his father to travel the straight and narrow path.

THE PRICE OF GOLD (April 2).—Which would you chose, providing you could have your choice in the matter? A husband with lots of money, one that you could not love, or a husband without money, one that you adored? This was the terrible question that confronted Lois Roberts. She had lived almost all her young life in want, so chose the former. Her sweetheart of old, gave her up only too unwillingly and went back to his work as a railroad engineer. The empty life Lois led in all her wealth and splendor, did not satisfy the woman who had decided to live without love. A short visit to her sister in the country who had married a man in moderate circumstances and was blessed with two loving children, awoke in Lois the spirit of motherhood. Lois returned to her beautiful mansion, after she had seen her former sweetheart for the last time. Here we leave Lois to sob out her grief in not having married the man she loved.

THE WILL-BE WEDS (April 3).—Jack Collins tried in every way possible to elude his prospective father-in-law and marry Helen, his fiancee. Wm. Ball and his wife try to assist the young couple by engaging a taxi-cab and taking them to the home of a minister. They are informed when they arrive that the minister is not at home. Helen's father, suspicious of what is about to happen, follows the eloping couple in an automobile and arrives at the minister's home just as the supposed minister is saying the last words of the ceremony. Ball, realizing that Helen's father will probably folow them, bribes the butler in the minister's home to don the minister's garb and pretend to have performed the ceremony. The exceedingly funny comedy of errors that arise from Helen's father thinking she is married, are indeed comical.

A WOLF AMONG LAMBS (April 4).—Don Fernando, smitten with Giulia, a Spanish dancer, persuades the young and innocent girl to run away with him. Valeska, the sister, finds a note on the table the following morning telling her that Giulia had gone, never to return. Months later, however, Giulia returns to her home, having been deserted by her unfaithful lover. Giulia enters the convent. The sister meets Don Fernando some time later. He tries to influence the girl to marry him. Don Fernando's life is saved by Sister Valencia who interferes just as Valeska is about to stab the villain. Dona Valeska is later thrown into a dungeon by Fernando, who declares he will have her. The pretty Spanish girl does not stay in her prison long. Sister Valencia, discovering Valeska's whereabouts, gets her out of prison in a clever way. Valeska then enters the convent where her sister is overjoyed at the happy meeting and ending. Don Fernando repents for his wrong doing and prays on his hands and knees at the door of the holy convent for forgiveness.

BRONCHO BILLY'S WAY (April 5).—When a woman's heart turns to stone, that is the time to watch out for her, for the possibilities are that you will lose her. This was Broncho Billy's experience, anyhow. Alhough he had been warned that a Mexican was trying to steal his wife away from him, he trusted her implicitly. The time arrived, however, when the Mexican tried to elope with Broncho Billy's wife. Unexpectedly Broncho Billy returned to his home and discovered that the Mexican was hiding in the clothes closet. To give him a good scare, Broncho Billy fired a few shots into the closet, above the head of the villain. Though it hurt him beyond expression, Broncho Billy ordered the Mexican on his horse, placed the weeping form of his wife beside him, and ordered them away, never to return again.

MELIES

THE STOLEN TRIBUTE TO THE KING (April 3).—Tamatoa, a young Tahitian, spears an immense fish—the largest catch of the season—which he and his mother decide to present as a tribute to their king. The youth places it carefully in a native basket so that only the head and tail are exposed, and proudly starts with it for the king's abode.

On the way he stops at the house of a Tahitian priest, with whose daughter, Ramao, he is in love. The gluttonous old priest looks with envious eyes upon the prize that is meant for the King, and when the two lovers take a stroll, he cuts the substantial body from the fish, replacing it with rocks, allowing the head and tail to protrude as before.

Tamatoa, on bended knee, presents his token to the king, and the latter opens it before all his court. Upon finding the rocks he believes the young man has tricked him and orders him beheaded.

Meanwhile, however, Ramao discovers her father's theft, and knowing what will be the youth's fate, hastens to his rescue. The priest, divining the cause of her absence, follows also, for she, too, may be in danger of the king's wrath. Ramao declares that she stole the fish, but this the youth vigorously denies. The king is obdurate, but the queen, recognizing that the young people are lovers, pleads for mercy.

The priest confesses to the theft and demands his daughter. The king, in fear of the "medicine man," forgives all and unites the young lovers in marriage.

THE RIVER WHANGANUI (April 3).—A trip on New Zealand's most picturesque river, known as "The Rhine" of that country.

BIOGRAPH.

EDWIN MASQUERADES (Mar. 31).—Bessie and Jack are invited to attend the mask-ball and decide to keep their disguise secret from each other. Meanwhile Edwin, the convict, escapes prison and securing Jack's costume, creates a decided mix-up at the ball.

THEIR ONE GOOD SUIT (Mar. 31).—Paul and Harry realize that clothes make the man, but being short of funds they decide to buy one suit between them, taking turns in donning the same. It was certainly a bright scheme but it proved disastrous for the boys.

THE HERO OF LITTLE ITALY (April 3).—It was on the night of the Italian ball when Maria, to tease her sweetheart, Tony, indulged in a mild flirtation with Joe, his enemy. At first Tony's jealousy was aroused, but reasoning that it was no time nor place for anything but enjoyment, he smothered the feeling. However, Maria carried the flirtation too far and a tragedy was imminent. This tragedy, though, was averted through a small boy's daring, the girl fully realizing what might have been the result of her thoughtlessness.

THE PERFIDY OF MARY (April 5).—Rose and her cousin Mary dwell in the land of romance, but real Romeos are scarce in this prosaic age. Yet, Rose, in spite of a gay young Lothario who steps in the way of her own true love, finds her way to love-land. That was where Mary's perfidy came in. It showed up Lothario's true character, while at the same time it brought Mary back to her own determined young lover.

PATHEPLAY.

PATHE'S WEEKLY, NO. 13, 1913 (Mar. 24).—Brooklyn, N. Y.—The U. S. S. "Arkansas" is in the Navy Yard dry dock here as a result of striking a coral reef off Guantanamo, Cuba. The repairs will cost $100,000.00.

Chamonix, France.—Ideal weather gives the winter sports enthusiasts an opportunity to display their nerve in some exciting races.

Erie, Pa.—The "Niagara," the famous flagship of Commodore Perry in the war with England in 1812, is being raised, after resting 100 years at the bottom of Lake Erie.

Tempe, Arizona.—Gov. Hunt of Arizona, inspects the new bridge built by convict labor.

Berlin, Germany.—The Kaiser and the Kaiserin assist at a fête given by the students of the University of Berlin.

Toppenish, Wash.—Rev. George Waters, a Methodist minister, and Grand Chief of the Brotherhood of North American Indians, and Miss Bertha Spencer, daughter of Chief Lancaster Spencer of the Yakima tribe, are among the prominent Indians

Berlin, Germany.—Princess Victoria Louise, daughter of Kaiser Wilhelm II, and her fiance, Prince Ernest August of Cumberland, are officially received in Berlin.

New York, N. Y.—Mutt starts a matrimonial agency, but Jeff misunderstands his orders.

And Many Others.

HOW PLASTER IS OBTAINED (April 1).—Although plaster of Paris is a very common commodity, the methods by which it is obtained are entirely unfamiliar to the general public, which is only one of the many reasons why this film will be of keen interest. Gypsum, the substance from which the plaster is obtained, is dynamited from an immense quarry and then it is transported to the kilns. Three days are required for calcination, after which it is more easily powdered. The grinding process is an antique one, but interesting, a five-ton mill stone being used The powdered plaster passes through a fine sieve and is then packed and shipped.

THE MOROS (April 1).—An aerial turn with a new thrill in it. The beautiful coloring makes it an additionally attractive offering.

THE ENGINEER'S DAUGHTER (April 2).—Lillian Wharton, the daughter of the engineer of the cyclone express, is carried away by a band of outlaws. They hold her a prisoner, but, after watching eagerly for the opportunity, Lillian gets one of the bandits unawares and, taking his gun, holds up the party and escapes. She is pursued, but has not gone far before meeting with her father, who has left his engine on a siding and is enjoying his lunch. Lillian hands the gun to her father and while he holds the outlaws at bay, Lilian races to her father's locomotive. Her courage and skill after a wild ride at breakneck speed, are responsible for the return of a posse of cowboys, who, catching the outlaws between two fires, soon eliminate the possibility of their causing further trouble.

CAIRO, EGYPT, AND ITS ENVIRONS (April 2).—A very interesting series of views of an interesting section of the world.

THERE SHE GOES (April 3).—Hans Schmidt, who owns a delicatessen store in the little Western town of Clarksville, has a very pretty daughter, Lena, who was determined to marry Jim Jackson, a cowboy employed in the neighborhood. Hans objected to this wedding and to prevent it he locked Lena in her room. Jackson had a scheme to distract the old man's attention while he and Lena got married. He offered to bet Hans $50 that he could not keep time with the swaying pendulum of the clock, saying "Here she is; there she goes" for half an hour. Hans decided to try it. While he was thus busily engaged, Jim slipped away with Lena and married her. And all during the marriage ceremony Hans kept saying "Here she is; there she goes," never suspecting that his daughter had gone.

WHIFFLES TRIES MOVING PICTURE ACTING (April 4).—Whiffles, the awkwardly funny comedian, after reading an ad. offers his services to Pathe Freres as a moving picture actor. The illness of a leading man gives Whiffles an opportunity to show his ability. His experiences as a lover are highly diverting, as, in a situation of this kind, Whiffles is unequalled. A few days later, however, the husband of Whiffles's leading lady sees the picture in a theater. Being of a mean and jealous disposition he challenges to a duel. Whiffles accepts and although a loser, the manner of his defeat will win him many new admirers and delight his old friends.

AN EXCURSION TO THE GRANDE CHARTREUSE, FRANCE (April 4).—The most interesting scenic picture published in many a day.

THE BROKEN IDYLL (April 5).—A very pretty girl, spending a vacation on a ranch, becomes infatuated with a handsome cowboy. He presents her with a necklace which further delights her. A chance meeting with the cowboy's baby daughter, however, informs her that she is the innocent cause of another woman's suffering. Her dream of love thus shattered provides a scene that is touchingly pathetic. The girl compelled to choose between love and righteousness handles the situation in a manner that proves her to be a strong character.

CINES.

HE WOULDN'T GIVE UP (April 1).—Alec Smart is in love with charming Marie Carter, but her father will not consent to their marriage because he has selected the rich William Strong for his future son-in-law. Alec is a very persistent suitor and calls so often and stays so long in spite of the attitude of the stern parent, that he is finally forbidden the house, and the servants are warned that if they ever permit him to enter the premises again they will be instantly discharged.

One day a pistol shot is heard outside the Carter's front gate and soon Alec is carried into the house aparently in a critical condition. When Marie and her father are standing near him, he asks if Mr. Carter will give his consent, so that he may die happy. The request has no sooner been granted than Alec is upon his feet claiming that the answer has made him a well man.

This with his many other tricks shows the father the aparent hopelessness of holding out further, and he therefore decides to yield to the wishes of the young couple. They are not through discussing the matter however, when the servants triumphantly drag in an intruder who has fared badly at their hands, but the man proves to be none other than William Strong, who has received the thrashing intended for Alec. Insult is added to injury when the poor fellow is forced to try and forget his wounds in congratulating the hapy pair.

NESTOR

SUPERSTITIOUS MARY (Mar. 31).—Mary is superstitious but sweet. At least Bobby thinks so. Mary's mamma favors Kenneth. Master Bob goes off with a flea in his ear, while the designing Kenneth is wished on to poor Mary.

The afternoon of the wedding day comes along. It is Friday and the letter 13 precedes the month on the calendar and Mary feels sure something will happen. First of all the wedding cake falls from the shelf. Then a large picture falls upon the wedding gifts and smashes all the glass and china.

Then Kenneth has become inebriated. Mary hears of it and she calls up Bob, who comes and points out what a nice day it is for an auto ride. Mary selects a few of the more costly gifts and goes to Bob. The auto is there and the parson is waiting for them. Kenneth has a bad headache when he does meet mamma and a far worse one when he leaves her.

MUM'S THE WORD (Mar. 31).—Jack is a cub reporter. The editor of the "Daily Whine" sends him to cover the Deaf and Dumb school. Jack arrives at the school, and seeing a gardener, asks him some questions. The man cannot hear him and Jack does not know the deaf and dumb language. The gardener stubs his toe with a hoe, and signifies his delight with an action. Jack notes it and feels he knows one word of finger language.

Jack passes on and sees Dolly reading. He cannot get anything out of her. He tries the gardener's sign and Dolly promptly slaps his face and runs and tells the professor about the impertinent young man. The professor is about to banish Jack, but explanations are made and Jack is forgiven. He gets some good notes and is invited to the dance that evening. He stays for the dance and, is much attracted to Jean, who is not at all averse to dancing with Jack all the evening. They both smile, indicate and nod a lot together, and as the last dance approaches, a young man comes up to Jean and asks for dance. To Jack's astonishment she says, "I can't. I'm engaged to this dummy here!" Jack hesitates between being offended or delighted, and decides upon the latter. He finds out that Jean is also a reporter, and they decide to take notes together in the future.

THE WIDOW'S FOLLY (April 2).—The widow disapproves of the foreman's attentions to her sister, May, and welcomes the opportunity to send him on an important mission to the nearest town. To get there, he is forced to pass through hostile country, where he sees a man being chased by Indians. He comes to the man's aid and draws the Indians off, but instead of waiting to help, the man, Seaton, leaves him to fight them alone. The foreman is badly wounded and left for dead until the morning when a friendly half-breed rescues him, takes him to his hut and nurses him through a long attack of fever.

In the meanwhile Seaton has arrived at the ranch and made great headway with the widow, is made foreman, as the old foreman is thought to have taken "French leave"—and eventually proposes to the widow and, in spite of all that the young sister can say, the widow accepts him. Seaton receives the following letter: "Friend Bill—You are certainly lucky. Separate the old girl from her coin as soon as possible. Show her the enclosed and I think that will turn the trick. Your old pard, Joe." The enclosed note reads as follows: "I would advise her to withdraw her account immediately. I have a dead sure tip that there is to be a run on the bank within the next twenty-four hours. Don't lose a minute if you—" And it did really work like a charm as Joe predicted. The widow at once started out with Seaton to withdraw her account, but fortunately left a half signed check, which she had spilled ink upon. May found it, so that when the former foreman who has recovered from his fever and just returned to the ranch, he set off with the boys to protect the widow in spite of herself. By playing at being hold-up men and taking the bag of gold from her, then in searching Seaton they came upon Joe's letter and after advising Seaton to make himself scarce around that part of the country they hurried back to the ranch to lay the gold and Joe's note at the widow's feet.

A PROVIDENTIAL TRAGEDY (April 4).—Jack Baxter is offered a job on a ranch and he leaves his little wife, Mary, promising to send for her as soon as he can get enough moiey together. A little son arrives and Mary is sick and the babe weakly. She sends a letter to Jack, telling him to come to her. He receives it and aches to be with her. He goes to the boss to ask for an advance to take him home. He selects a bad time for the boss is naturally a bad-tempered man and he has just had a quarrel with Ben, a cowboy, and has beaten him badly. The boss refuses Jack. They have high words, which are heard by Grace, the boss's daughter, and some of the boys.

As night draws on Jack determines to make a last apeal to the boss. He goes to his library and is talking with him when the door opens and Ben apears, crazed for revenge over the beating he received. He shoots the boss in the back, throws the revolver down by the body and escapes. Jack is horrified and kneels by the dead man. The shot has attracted the cowboys and one rushes into the room and accuses Jack of the crime. Jack sees a delay and his one thought is to get away to his wife. He overpowers the cowboy and being met at the outer door by other cowboys, he rushes up the stairs and barricades himself in a room. While his pursuers are breaking down the door, he knots some sheets together and lets himself down. He gets on a horse and makes for the desert.

Half across the desert he comes upon a broken down prairie schooner, in which are a dying woman with a little baby. Jack promises to care for the babe, and in order to sink his identity he changes clothes with the woman's husband, who will never need them any more.

Jack eventually arrives home to find his wife dangerously ill. Owing to grief over the short life of her baby, he takes it to his heart and his interest in it saves his wife's life as well as the baby's.

BISON.

A HOUSE DIVIDED (3 reel—April 1).—Virginia and Betty live in a southern mansion with their father. Young Tom, a neighbor, is in love with Virginia, although he is secretly worshipped by Betty. She watches the love making sadly. The war breaks out and the father and Tom ride away.

Lieutenant Paul Brice is a Union spy and Mrs. Morris loves him and decides to become a spy herself. She carries letters to a clergyman, who introduces her to Virginia and Betty. The former is attracted, but Betty is suspicious and watches her closely. Mrs. Morris takes a fine house and furnishes it. Lieutenant Brice passes as her brother. Mrs. Morris invites Virginia and induces her to play cards. Virginia gives her I. O. U's. and is infatuated with the "brother." He falls in love with her. Mrs. Morris makes up her mind to punish Virginia when opportunity offers. Virginia happens to see the telegraph code and asks Brice what it is. He tells her it is a code for love letters and she takes it with her.

Betty hears from her father that there are spies at work. She finds that her sister has taken a code telegram to the station for Brice and later discovers its meaning. She rides to get help for the Southern camp, which she knows is to be assaulted. This helps turn the tide of fortune and the Unionists are beaten back for the time being.

Betty's father is badly wounded in the fight and Tom is slightly wounded too, and they, with the faithful Betty who thinks her sister a spy go home. Virginia snubs Tom and Betty tries to comfort him. The father holds a consultation of generals and aides in his bedroom. Mrs. Morris learns of this and gets Virginia to her home. She threatens her with exposure. Poor Virginia is afraid to go and confess to her sister and steals the plans. The theft is discovered. Betty, on the watch, sees Virginia hand over the papers. She gets her alone and accuses her, but they are interrupted by Brice and Mrs. Morris, who seizes Betty and locks her in a room. Having received the dispatches the Unionists decide to surround the Southern home and capture the Generals in council.

Virginia, thoroughly frightened, confesses to Tom who starts out to the Southern camp for help. Virginia, climbing a pillar, frees Betty from her bonds and they descend by the pillar.

The Southerners, under the guidance of Tom, meet the Unionists and defeat them and Mrs. Morris and Brice get away. Virginia confesses that she does not love Tom in the right way, and goes, leaving the field clear for the union of Tom and Betty.

FIDDLER PETE (April 3).—A stern father, whose creed can countenance no failing, has two sons, Arthur and Peter. Pete is a happy-go-lucky fellow, beloved for good nature and violin playing. Arthur, his father's pride, is being educated for ministry. A sister favors her father, and the mother loves the ne'er-do-well, but not openly. The father is very unjust and Pete runs away to a mountain camp where he falls in love with Maggie, the innkeeper's daughter, and worships her from afar. Later Arthur, now a minister, comes to the camp and converts Maggie. He persuades the girl to come 'and play for his meeting. This angers the hotel keeper and he forbids Maggie to see the minister again, and is going to kill him.

Pete does not know that the minister is his brother. They recognize each other. The pursuers are coming. Pete helps them to escape by a change of costumes.

THE SUPERIOR LAW (3 reels—April 2).—Joe Baptiste, a big young lumberman, while calling at at a little cross-roads postoffice for his mail finds Rosalie, the pretty little postmistress, being annoyed by a burly stranger. Joe handles the stranger roughly and starts back to his cabin. The stranger waits for him in the woods and as a result of the encounter the stranger is hurled over the precipice to his death.

Joe is later arrested and placed on trial for murder. His attorney, Charley Rock, pleads so eloquently for Joe at the trial that the lumberman is acquitted. Rock, during all this, has been on the outs with his wife. She has been receiving attentions from Captain Morris of the R. P. M. On this account Rock has been drinking heavily. A brother of Rock's wife adds to his troubles by forging Rock's name to checks. Rock drifts from bad to worse. In one of his wanderings away from town he meets Rosalie, the postmistress, who is also the daughter of a road-house keeper. A love affair springs up between them but Rosalie's father when he finds it out, forbids Rock and his daughter to meet. Rock one night under the influence of liquor decides to pay a last call on Rosalie. He enters the road-house where a merry party is in progress. While he is ordering wine for himself and Rosalie, a lumberman, who has reason to consider himself engaged to Rosalie, enters the place. A brawl ensues in which Rock is stunned by a heavy blow and is thrown through the window to an icy stream below. Later he is found half dead by Joe Baptiste, the man he saved. Joe carries Rock to his cabin and nurses him. Then he finds Rosalie and brings her there. Rosalie nurses Rock and their love affair proceeds.

Meanwhile the word has gone to the town that Rock has been killed. Rock sees the accounts of his death in the papers and resolves to be a woodsman and let the world think him dead, in order that he can marry Rosalie without being a bigamist. The brother of Rock's wife being penniless and not daring to forge any more checks, becomes a desperado. In prowling about the woods he comes to Joe's cabin and finds there Rock and Rosalie who have just been married. He demands the Rock family jewels as the price of his silence. This is all a shock to Rosalie and she faints in Joe's arms. There is then a race between Rock and his brother-in-law to Rock's former home. When they arrive there they both see Rock's wife walking in her sleep, carrying a light. The attorney follows her out through the snow, but is not quick enough to prevent her from falling over a cliff to her death below. The bad brother-in-law gives up his quest at the sight of his dead sister while Rock returns to the woods to Rosalie.

HE WANTS WHAT HE WANTS WHEN HE WANTS IT (Apr. 6).—When "Snookums" discovered this break in the pipe and the splashing water, he thought it was great fun to sit there and let the water spray over his nice clean clothes. His mother promptly got him out of the mess and summoned a plumber, but he almost lifted the roof with his explosive "wows."

After a few strenuous hours, "da-da" came to the rescue, and going to the pipe, which our friend, Mr. Plumber, had just repaired, Papa Newlywed got busy with a hammer and spike and re-opened the pipe, so that "Snookums" might enjoy himself in the nice little lake. "Snookums" was shortly shouting "da-da," and all seemed well, until the neighbors on the floor below came up to complain about the water, which was damaging their apartment. So "da-da" had to pacify them with the assertion that they had just sent for the plumber and he would certainly be there soon. While waiting (?) for the plumber, "Snookums" was very happy.

BINKS THE TERRIBLE TURK (Apr. 5).—Zslamsco, a Turk, champion wrestler of the world, is touring America giving exhibitions and meeting all comers. Playing a rural town the "Terrible Turk" is seized with a violent toothache and the doctor states that he will be unable to appear that night, and he informs Binks, his trainer, of this fact. Binks rushes off to the theater to inform the manager. The manager is talking to three rubes who have been attracted by the billboards, which state that Zslamsco will throw three men in ten minutes or forfeit $100. The rubes purchase tickets.

The manager, learning of the Turk's illness, rushes off to the hotel with Binks at his heels. Upon arriving in the Turk's room, he proceeds to upbraid him for his cowardice.

A sudden light dawns upon the manager. Why not put Binks on in the Turk's place? He drags Binks out of the hotel, down to the theater, where the manager insists and tells Binks his plan. He gets the stage carpenter, who is a great sleeper, to bore a hole in the stage, the idea being for Binks to get his opponent down over the hole and the carpenter is to prod the rube aspirant for the $100 with a hat pin, after which Binks will be able to defeat him easily. Binks is introduced to the audience. One of the rubes clambers to the stage but is soon thrown to the floor, and the carpenter hearing him fall, prods him with a pin and Binks easily puts his shoulder to the mat. The next aspirant's

Binks glares at his third opponent. Binks and the rube wrestle all over the stage. Binks gets him over the hole several times, but the rube manages to get out of danger. The manager stamps on the floor to attract the carpenter's attention, and seeing his $100 leaving him, he rushes in the cellar, where he finds the custodian of the pin sound asleep. He awakens him and the carpenter, hearing a fall, proceeds to prod viciously. But the rube had turned the tables and has Binks over the hole, and when he received the pin prods he immediately allowed himself to be put down and out. At this moment the manager rushes onto the stage, only to be greeted by demands from the rube. He reluctantly pays the money.

BACHELOR BILL'S BIRTHDAY PRESENT (Apr. 4).—Bachelor Bill is reminded of his birthday by a postcard from his brother. Edna Vale, a young widow with a baby, sick and almost starving, enters Bill's shack, and finding it empty, decides to leave the baby, with an appeal that it be cared for. Bill comes home, finds the baby on his bed, and has a hard time looking after it, until he advertises in the postoffice for a nurse girl.

Edna sees the ad, applies, and is accepted. Besides caring for the baby, she takes charge of the house and Bill enjoys home comforts of which he never dreamed. His satisfaction gets a rude jolt, however, when Edna finds a note from the Vigilance Committee, objecting to Bill's mode of life and advising him if he wishes to avoid trouble to get rid of the pretty nurse or get a chaperon.

Bill expresses his opinion of the committee but Edna, fearing trouble for him, decides to go. When it comes to leaving the baby, her mother heart fails her and she takes it along. Bill comes home, and starts after Edna—as he says, to get the baby. He finds Edna seated by the roadside, crying from weariness and desolation. He asks for the baby. She refuses to give it up. Bill says it's his baby. Edna says that it was her's first. Bill asks why the kid's father isn't looking after his womenfolks? Edna replies that he is dead.

Loath to give up the baby, Bill asks Edna to sit down till he thinks it over. The parson comes up the road on horseback and gives Bill an idea. He asks the parson if he wants a job. Hearing that he does, Bill invites him to marry him and Edna. She is tempted to run away, but a look at Bill convinces her that he would run after her if she did, so she gives in with good grace.

THE BANDIT'S REDEMPTION (April 3).—In the days of '49, when the rush for gold was on, Jim Rogers with his wife and their eight year old daughter, Ruth, were among the settlers. They meet the Ward family. A gang of bandits have hoisted their tents in the vicinity of the settlers' camping grounds That night the settlers are attacked and the bandit chief, after taking the locket from Mrs. Roger's neck, abducts Ruth and one of the Ward children. The next morning, the mother is found by a Westerner who takes her to his home. Six months later the bandit quits the outlaw life.

Then years pass by. The outlaw chief tells the children, now grown to man and womanhood that he is not their father, but that he is merely a reformed bandit. The children are horror stricken. One day while the boy and girl are at the village store Mrs. Rogers with the ranchwoman come up to the store just as Ruth and her supposed brother are leaving. The mother recognizes the locket, and after explanations she finds her long lost daughter.' Later Ruth and John plead with the mother to forgive the reformed bandit, for he has been so good to them and is the only father they have ever known. Finally the mother forgives the bandit.

PEARL AS A CLAIRVOYANT (Apr. 6).—Pearl has two admirers, Chester and Joe. Joe is out walking when a boy hands him a card of Madam Seero, a fortune teller. He determines to visit her and find out if Pearl loves him. Chester also gets one of the cards and also decides to visit the clairvoyant, bent on the same mission as Joe. Pearl sees Joe enter the place and decides to investigate, By a ruse she gets in first and persuades the woman to let her act in her stead, explaining that Joe is one of her admirers and that she wants to have some fun with him. She dresses in Madam's clothes and receives Joe. She reads his palm and he tries to flirt with her. However, after inducing him to give her a pin of his for future recollections, so to speak, she throws him out, where he falls over the surprised Chester, who is waiting in the hall for his turn with the seer. Pearl then beckons Chester to enter. She then proceeds to tell him all about his sweetheart and she is convinced that he is really in love with her, although he is ignorant of the fact that he is confiding his secrets to the one most anxious to hear. Just then a detective enters with a warrant for the fortune teller's arrest, alleging fraud, and insists on taking Pearl with him. Chester intervenes in her behalf and just then the real fortune teller enters and is arrested. Pearl changes her clothes and goes with Chester. They met Joe on the way, and she returns his pin, and then he knows that he was flirting with Pearl and his suit is at an end, leaving Chester in full possession of the field.

ALMOST A WINNER (April 6).—Belmont, unknown to his wife, attends a poker party. His wife thought he was at a lodge meeting, but as the hours flew by and he did not return she went to bed. Belmont, having lost all his money starts home. In the meantime, however, and just as Mrs. Belmont was about to fall asleep she hears a noise in the room downstairs. It is "Slats" Kenne, a burglar who has gained entrance in the house. She goes downstairs and catches him looking into a closet. She throws him in and locks the door. She then rushes out and finds a policeman. "Slats" meanwhile, has taken off his coat, made a pillow of it and has gone to sleep. Belmont returns and hears "Slats" snore. He opens the closet door and awakens. "Slats" The latter gets up, grapples with Belmont, throws him into the closet and runs away, leaving his coat on the floor. The wife and policeman return and release Belmont who explains and is corroborated by the Mrs. The cop goes away and turning a corner meets 'Slats." Belmont meanwhile has gone through the coat and has found a large roll of bills, more than enough to offset his losses. He is happy, until the officer returns with the crook and takes the money from him, the crook telling him about it and offering him half. However, the officer keeps all the money and takes "Slats" off to jail, leaving Belmont disconsolate and heartbroken, so nearly recompensed for his expensive "lodge meeting."

THE RENEGADE'S HEART (Mar. 31).—George Fifield, a renegade, came close to the home of Violet Blake, the posse hard after him. Violet had seen the $5,000 reward sign, but, despite that, gave the renegade his chance and secreted him in her room. When he left the renegade unwrapped a handkerchief from about his neck, giving it to her with the remark that if she ever needed him to hang the handkerchief from the old tree.

When Violet's father, deeply in debt, came home drunk one night and confessed to the embezzlement of $5,000. Then Violet thought of the handkerchief, hung it upon the tree, and the renegade gave himself up cheerfully.

MATCHES (April 3).—Jack Kerrigan, as a rare matrimonial catch, arrives at the rich widow's mansion in a snappy roadster with an English chauffeur driving. He is introduced to Jessalyn Van Trump as his logical choice, but with the perverseness that ever characterizes Cupid, he promptly falls in love with Miss Oldrock, daughter of a wealthy widower, who is pledged to remain single until his daughter marries. Now Miss Van Trump, as the chosen one for Jack, falls in love with her own chauffeur, a horrible situation truly, but wonderfully relieved by the discovery of Jack's English chauffeur that the family driver is the scion of English aristocracy—a condition most appealing to Louise Lester, who plays the mother of Miss Van Trump. Thus the chauffeur and Miss Van Trump are united and they fail to tell mamma till the happy event is performed. Needless to add mamma is delighted to find that her chauffeur is an English nobleman. This makes it easy for Jack in his suit for Miss Oldrock. Oldrock, who has been paying hopeless attentions to the mother of Miss Van Trump, is thus rendered happy by having his daughter marry Jack, thereby absolving him from his promise not to marry until the daughter marries.

THE MUTE WITNESS (April 5).—Jim Regan, photographer, was sent by his paper to make snapshots of wild game. He found old Barlow, a trapper, possessed of two pretty daughters, and promptly fell in love with Mabel, who responded. Carrie, the other daughter, loved Ralph Conway, a mountain scamp.

One day, Jim, in the woods with Barlow, sets his camera so that he might get a snapshot of a bear, attaching the camera by mechanical means to the bear-trap so that when it operates the camera would get the picture.

That afternoon Ralph Conway induced Carrie to elope with him, Barlow having refused permission for the marriage. In anger Conway sought the old man out, found him leaning over the bear trap and felled him with a blow. In an instant his own foot was caught and he went spinning into the air. Old Barlow, hours afterwards, staggered throught the woods toward home. Meanwhile, curious about his camera, Regan went to the trap, found Conway, releases him and took his camera back. In the quickly made dark room, Regan found a negative of Conway in the act of striking old Barlow. He rushed out, caught Carrie just as she was about to leave for the rendezvous and grappled with Conway. Just then old Barlow staggered in. No explanations were needed. Barlow simply took up his gun and pointed and Conway with a laugh, turned his evil face towards the mountains.

HER GALLANT KNIGHTS (Mar. 23).—When the farmer's daughter returned to her home the young men who had ignored her when she was a child became her abject slaves. At first the girl was pleased by the interest she aroused, but after a while it palled on her because no matter the hour of the day she was almost certain to have callers. Affairs reached a crisis as the time approached for the annual orange picking tournament. Each of the girl's suitors expected to win honors there, and lost no opportunity of telling her so. This induced her to promise them that the one who most distinguished himself at the affair would receive a prize from her.

As it happened, all her suitors distinguished themselves. That evening they flocked about her, and earnestly demanded the special prize. Smilingly she told them that "you have all done equally well, so I will reward you all." Whereupon she distributed envelopes and they found that the contents were invitations to the wedding of a girl and an Eastern aristocrat, whom none of them had ever heard of.

"The gallant knights" never jousted again in honor of their fair lady. Neither did they attend her wedding, and they were glad when she and her husband departed for the East.

FOR HER BOY'S SAKE (Mar. 25).—The son of a poor widow fell in love with a heartless show girl who spurned the simple gifts he gave her. In a moment of desperation he tried to rob the box office of the theater in which he was employed as a stage hand, but was detected by the nightwatchman who shot and wounded him mortally. Before he expired he wrote a letter to his mother saying: "Many a man is tempted to sin for the woman he loves."

The widow in order to maintain herself, obtained work as a scrub woman in an office building where she became acquainted with a prepossessing young clerk who wife she learned was dangerously ill and was told by the physician to go to Arizona. Noticing that the clerk looked extremely sad and knowing the cause, she went home, took her life's savings, returned to the building and placed the wallet in the clerk's coat which was hanging on the wall. But in the next office the clerk was working feverishly trying to open the safe. The widow noticed it and her involuntary cry startled him. The woman explained to the clerk what she had done and with tears in his eyes he accepted her proffered aid.

CYMBELINE (2 parts—Mar. 28).—Cymbeline was King of Great Britain at the time of the Roman Empire. His first wife was blessed with two sons and a daughter, Imogen. The sons were taken away shortly after their birth by Belarius, a nobleman banished by King Cymbeline. Imogen's stepmother had a son whom she desired to see married to the princess. But the princess had a lover, Leonatus, whom she married. When news of his daughter's marriage was brought to the King, he banished Leonatus who later took up residence in Rome.

There he mourned the loss of his wife and when other gallants were boasting of their ladies fair, Leonatus remarked that none could compare with his fair one. Iachimo took exception to this, saying that he would visit Imogen and return with the jeweled bracelet Leonatus had given her. Iachimo went to Cymbeline's court, but when he tried to make love to Imogen he was repulsed. Seeing that he could not ingratiate himself, he resorted to stratagem and that night he entered her chamber, took the jeweled bracelet from her arm and went to Leonatus, who, now believing that his wife was false, sent his servitor, Pisano, to her with a note to meet him. He also instructed Pisano to slay Imogen as soon as he had her out of Britain. Imogen received the note with rapture and after disguising herself as a page, accompanied Pisano.

When the time came for Pisano to slay Imogen, he experienced remorse and declined to stain his hands with innocent blood. Imogen refused to return to her father's court and wandered out into the world. Pisano sent word to Leonatus that his wife was dead.

In her wanderings, Imogen came upon the cavern of Belarius and the sons of King Cymbeline. They did not penetrate her disguise. When the Romans invaded Britain, Belarius and the youths entered the King's army. In the fight these men were aided by a supposed peasant who turned the tide of battle and brought victory to King Cymbeline. The heroes were brought before the King and great was his surprise when he recognized Leonatus, the supposed peasant. A greater surprise was in store for him when Belarius stepped forward and presented to His Majesty his sons. Belarius was pardoned.

Among the Roman prisoners was Iachimo who made a dying confession as to how he secured the bracelet. Leonatue was about to kill himself when Imogen leaped forward and stayed his hand. All was forgiven and Leonatus and Imogen were happy again in each other's love.

KEYSTONE.

AT TWELVE O'CLOCK (Mar. 27).—An Italian makes love to a girl and is repulsed. She favors another man, and the Italian uses drastic measures to rid himself of his rival. He finally becomes angered at the girl and kidnaps her. He ties her to a post and arranges an infernal machine, attached to a clock, which will shoot off a revolver at 12 o'clock. The weapon is pointed at the girl, who makes frantic efforts to escape as the hands creep toward the fatal hour. The lover makes frantic efforts to rescue his sweetheart, but is driven away by the burly villain. The police are notified, and have all manner of mishaps in reaching the scene. The lover finally secures a big magnet, which he sticks through the barred window at one minute of twelve, and it pulls the hands back. The villain listening, with watch in hand, for the sound of the shot, is nonplussed when 12 o'clock passes without a report, and he enters. He readjusts the device, and again the lover keeps the hands from recording twelve o'clock. After many amusing incidents the police finally break into the house and snatch the girl away "in the nick of time," as the pistol is fired, shooting the villain in the leg.

HER NEW BEAU (Mar. 31).—Mabel has a new beau. Her father forgets his watch at home. Mabel sees it has stopped running and gives it to her beau to have repaired. Father walks through the park and accidentally bumps into a stranger. He feels in his pockets for his watch and thinks he has been robbed. In the meantime the beau has lost the watch and a stranger has picked it up. Father appears and takes it away from him. The beau, loking for the lost watch sees papa with the timepiece, and not knowing who he is, attacks him and beats him up. Father makes his escape, after being badly battered. Now, it happens that father is a police magistrate, and he has hardly donned his gown and taken the bench than the beau comes in to report the robbery of the watch. Papa orders him arrested, and then begins to sentence him, giving him ten years each for his blackened eyes, and adds to the sentence for each bruised portion of his anatomy. He then orders the beau to a cell and the police beat him up. After they are through with him papa takes a hand with a gavel. In the midst of the excitement Mabel appears, and finally clears up the situation.

ON HIS WEDDING DAY (Mar. 31).—On his way to his wedding Krause meets some friends in front of a grocery store, who, for a joke, sprinkle his bouquet of flowers with red pepper. The bride, the minister and the guests smell the flowers and are thrown into spasms of sneezing. In despair, Krause runs away. He meets a pretty girl in the park and drives her escort away, deciding that he likes this girl better than the homely one he was to marry. The escort hires two thugs to attack Krause, who is given a thrashing and his coat and vest taken away. He rushes away and attracts the attention of the police who think he is crazy and pursue him. In his efforts to escape Krause breaks up a picnic party, and has many accidents. Hard pressed, he runs to the roof of a house and drops down the chimney, It happens to be the home of his waiting bride, and when the police follow him down the chimney and arrest him she comes to his rescue and drives the bluecoats out. Krause accepts his fate, and an amusing reconciliation takes place.

THE LAND SALESMAN (April 3).—This comedy has been worked around an instructive series of scenes showing how land is cleared of stumps by dynamite. It shows a young couple in search of a home who attend an auction sale of lots. They object to the stumps, however, and the agent removes them with dynamite. The couple are then shown in a comfortable cottage, and the girl has some trouble with the garden hose which results in both getting a good drenching.

HIDE AND SEEK (April 3).—The young wife visits her father's office and plays hide and seek with her little girl. The baby hides in the big vaults and the mother pretends she does not know where the child is. The mother is called by her father and goes to the other room for a few minutes and the little girl toddles out to the street. The clerk closes the vault and turns on the time lock. The mother returning to the room imagines the baby is in the vault and becomes frantic. She turns in a fire alarm and the engines respond. The police are called, and they rush to the office in a fast automobile. While these things are going on flashes are shown of the baby, who has made friends with a bull dog, and is leading it about. Finally she meets some other tots, and the kidlets have a good time together. Her mother and grandfather are frantic, and a safe expert is hurriedly sent for. It is decided to dynamite the vault door, and it is blown out. All rush into the vault, and are relieved to find the child is not there. In the midst of the excitement the father, who has found his little girl, walks into the office with the baby in his arms.

RELIANCE.

HIS DAY OF FREEDOM (Mar. 26).—Convict No. 333 escapes from prison in a shoe case that is shipped to a small seaport village. There he fells the shoe clerk who opens the box, and dashes out with a stolen store coat. He crouches in a hedge by the store of Obadiah Jones, just as Jones hands his daughter, Betty, a roll of bills to put away. Jones departs. Betty puts the money in a tin box by the window, and runs to greet her lover, Paul Kimball. Convict No. 333 steals the money and looks around for something to eat. Hearing them coming the convict hids in the wood box. Betty prepares dinner while Paul tends store. Felix Hill, an unwelcome suitor, enters and picks a quarrel. Betty, about to get some wood, lets the lid fall on the convict's head and stuns him as she runs to part the fighting men. When they are gone she finds 333, dazed in the wood box. He tells her a tale of woe and she sympathizes with him and feeds him.

Meanwhile the shoe clerk has given alarm. Searchers come to Jone's store, but Betty hides the convict. Then she gives him a fisherman's suit and lets him depart. Felix goes to Betty's father and tells of the beating Paul gave him at his store. They return and Jones scolds his daughter for the loss of the money. Felix declares he saw Paul take the money. Paul is arrested. The convict standing in the crowd hands over the money to save Paul and thus ends "His Day of Freedom."

MAJESTIC.

THE WRONG MISS WRIGHT (Mar. 23).—Priscilla Brown, an old maid, leaves her book on a bench at a railway station. Flora, an acquaintance, finds it and reads. Frank, a young man, sees her put it down and hurry for the train. He takes it and follows. All three take the same train. Flora refuses to take the book or talk with Frank. Priscilla worries him by being too willing to converse. Arriving in New York Frank orders his cabman to follow Flora's cab, but by mistake he follows Priscilla's cab. Frank at his hotel remembers the book in his pocket. It is inscribed "To Priscilla Brown from Stephen Ellis." Frank, knowing Ellis, writes for an introduction, thinking Flora's name is Priscilla. Ellis, however, is on the Lusitania, nearing America. Frank, sailing shortly for Europe, finds Flora on the boat. Also Priscilla, who renews her attentions to Frank, much to his disgust.

The Lusitania is sighted. Frank determines to get an introduction to Flora through Ellis by wireless. Ellis obligingly telegraphs an introduction to Priscilla. Frank goes to Flora with it and she turns him over to Priscilla. Through Frank's dilemma Flora sees the joke. She takes pity on him and they walk away together leaving Priscilla wondering.

THE PRIMA DONNA'S CAT (Mar. 25).—An opera singer loses her Persian cat and she hires a detective to find it. The singer accuses her maid of carelessness and the maid to cover herself invents a yarn that she saw a man with a green necktie steal the cat. Across the way lives an old bachelor who is friendly with another opera singer who has also a cat, not as good as the stolen one, but she thinks it is, hence some jealousy over cats. The bachelor wears a green tie. The detective learns that he is also buying milk. The bachelor and his lady love are under suspicion and are led a merry dance in the quest for the lost cat. The missing cat is finally found under the bath tub waiting patiently for a mouse.

MUTUAL EDUCATIONAL.

WILLY AND THE FAITHFUL SERVANT (April 3).—In this picture we see Willy neglecting his studies to play, and as a punishment he is told that he must remain in the house on Sunday instead of being allowed to take a nice walk with his parents. His beautiful dog, the "faithful servant" is left to guard our little friend. He has a most amusing time trying to elude his chaperon, and after many futile attempts he succeeds in escaping, by borrowing another dog fram a playmate, which amuses his guard until he is out of the house. Unfortunately for him, his parents return just as he reaches the gate and he is taken back into the house, where both he and the "faithful servant" are reprimanded by the parents who cannot help but laugh to themselves while they do so.

WINTER SPORTS IN NORWAY (April 3).—A most interesting series of views of winter games, races by ice-boats and bob-sleds, scenes of ice skating and sports on the snow have always been very popular and this reel is exceptionally well made.

THE SINEWS OF WAR (2 reels—April 2).—Simon Hertzog's warehouse is given over to the Confederate cause and used as a prison for Union soldiers. Captain Blair, a captured Union officer, throws out of the window a note written to his mother telling the finder to convey to her the news that he is well. The missive is found by Felice Hertzog, who complies with the request. She returns to Blair with his mother's message.

Several weeks later, Felice receives a letter from Mrs. Blair telling her that as she cannot live much longer, she would like to see her only son. She confides her secret mission to her Confederate admirer, Lieutenant Benton, who agrees to have a horse ready for Blair's escape. He gets out of prison, but through the unexpected apearance of Confederate soldiers he is forced to take refuge in Felice's bedroom.

The city of Richmond is besieged by General Grant. John Hertzog, who has been selected to deliver plans to General Johnson, is unable to get away and he, too, is forced to conceal himself in his sister's boudoir. There he encounters Blair. Felice prevents her brother from doing any harm to Blair, and she also persuades him to change clothes with Blair.

Grant by this time has taken the town, and Blair, who has been captured, after proving his identity, is given due credit for the plans which he found in Hertzog's coat. Lieutenant Benton is trying to get Felice to escape with him, but her screams bring her brother, who shoots Benton. Just then a squad of Union soldiers rushes into the house and is about to arrest the brother when Captain Blair orders them away. The following day, as Captain Blair is ordered way, it is plain to perceive by the pleased look on Felice's face that he is to claim her as his wife when the war is ended.

TO THE TRADE:—

"Lincoln for the Defense" was so well received by the trade we decided to put out another Lincoln Picture, and our release of March 27th is so much better than the first one we are glad we did so. It is historically accurate in every particular; has strong dramatic situations; and is full of pathos and heart interest.

You will like our release of April 3rd. For a long time we had been trying to give the trade a very fine military picture, and we were fortunate in getting a good scenario for this film. It is a picture which will appeal to all.

boy who rescues her from drowning. He falls in love with her.

After a year's marriage Pegy becomes tired of being the wife of a fisher boy. One day while he is out on a fishing trip, Peggy strolls along the beach and by accident meets the other man who, with his friend, were out motoring. He pleads with her to give up her life of poverty and return to him. She yields and leaves for the hut to make preparations to leave. The fisher boy enters just as Peggy is about to start. Peggy tells him the truth and it arouses his anger to such a pitch that he tries to kill her.

At that moment the other man appears in the doorway and Peggy leaves with him. On board the man's private yacht bound for New York, he attempts to make love to her. Peggy, knowing his love to be false, realizes her mistake and cries for help. He assures her that her cries will not be heard as he is master here.

The fisher boy wanders to the beach. He gets into his fishing boat and drifts with the tide out to sea. He, hearing cries from the yacht approaching him, makes for it. Discovering that it is Peggy he climbs up the side of the yacht, throws the man to one side as the crew rush in on him. He holds them at bay, giving Peggy time to jump overboard; he, too, dives overboard. He swims with Peggy to his fishing boat drifting near by and rows to shore, where she pleads forgiveness, which is granted.

WITH LEE IN VIRGINIA (2 parts—April 4).—The picture opens in 1861. Bilily Girard loves Ethel Blair, both Virginians. Ethel's father, a judge, welcomes Billy to his home, and this embitters Horton, a rival. War breaks out and Robert E. Lee is seen to decline Lincoln's offer and declare for the Confederacy. Horton proposes to Ethel and is refused. He joins the Union army. Billy Girard and Judge Blair join the Southern army, the latter as a Colonel. He sends Billy to Washington as a spy, where Billy is recognized by Horton but escapes under difficulties. The Blair home has been taken by the Federal army and is used as a headquarters. Ethel, still there, gets a note from Billy which she reads and tears and throws out the window. Horton gets the fragments and pieces them together. A plan to capture Billy is devised. Horton dresses a man in Confederate uniform. The man pretends to be a fugitive and takes refuge in the cabin of Ethel's negro servant. Ethel's sympathy is aroused for the fugitive and she sends for Billy. Horton's men capture Billy and Ethel and some of their letters. Billy refuses to divulge Confederate army information and is sentenced to die. Ethel remains under guard. Horton celebrates and gets drunk. Dismissing Ethel's guard he enters the cabin and gloatingly offers her freedom if she will marry him. She stuns Horton with a heavy candlestick and kills him with his bayonet. Ethel gets away without being seen and the old servant is executed for the killing. Lee's army next day attacks the place. Billy gets out in the confusion and joins in the fight. The Blair home is destroyed by fire. Lee is victorious. The picture closes with Ethel's negro mammy dreaming of her brave black husband who died for Ethel's sake.

THE SOVEREIGN SOUL (Mar. 18).—The people of Messania are eager for the war to begin with Silistria. The King goes to his palace to kiss his wife good-bye. Little thinks she, as the King holds the Crown Prince to his breast, what will happen in his absence. The armies of Messania are victorious.

The Silistrians send three spies to the Capital of Messania. They gain entrance to the Royal grounds. There they lie in wait for the governess of the Crown rPince. In a lonely place they overcome the governess and abduct the Crown Prince.

The Queen and one of her Ladies in Waiting arrive at the place of the kidnapping and there find the unconscious governess. The Queen hastens to go to the headquarters of her susband.

The Council of War is in session. At this moment a communication is received from the Silistrian government. The message reads that the Crown Prince. In a lonely place they overcome the liberty they command immediate peace. Significantly they conclude that if the King of Messania continues to wage war that his son will be the first victim in the event of another attack.

The Council is irresolute. By stopping the war at this time they would lose the greater fruits of victory—by continuing they would lose the Crown Prince, who is an only son.

In robes of black the Queen enters the council chamber. There is silence as she raises her hand to speak. She says: "For the welfare of their nation thirty thousand mothers have already sacrificed their sons. As a Queen it is only fitting that I should uphold their example. The war will go on!

SIMPLE SIMON SUFFERS SORELY (Mar. 20).—Simple Simon is a shipping clerk in a costumer's shop. Simon's boss receives a letter from Dill Pickle Play Co., asking why he sends him Roman costumes instead of South African effects.

Simon's boss gives him "rats." He dares not talk back to the boss and accordingly goes into the costume room and punches the heads off the lay figures.

Twenty of the Roman punched personages come back to life to punish the insultor of their effigies. The outraged personages then proceed to do all kinds of things to Simon. This causes Simon's clothes to become mussed. Accordingly one of the personages gets a heavy hot iron and irons the clothes, and incidentally Simon. They then carefully fold him up and put him into a basket. It finally turns out to be a dream.

WHEN LINCOLN WAS PRESIDENT (Mar. 27).—Mrs. Scott, a widow, has a son, Ben, and a nephew, Will. Ben enlists for the war and his mother is prostrated by the news. Will tells his aunt that he will enlist and watch over her boy. Six months elapse and Ben is taken ill while on picket duty. Unknown to the authorities, Will takes his place, and the arduous duty of double watch makes him fall asleep on his post. The officer of the watch discovers this and Will is arrested, tried by court-martial and sentenced to be shot. Ben is delirious and carried to the hospital and is unaware of his cousin's danger. Will writes to his aunt explaining his position, and Mrs. Scott makes up her mind to go to Washington and appeal to President Lincoln to save him. She has great difficulty in obtaining an audience with Lincoln as his private secretary refuses to allow her to enter. Lincoln overhears the altercation, comes to the anteroom and takes Mrs. Scott int his library. There the poor woman tells the story of her nephew's devotion and begs Lincoln to save him. The boy's devotion touches Lincoln's heart and he determines to save him. With Mrs. Scott he travels to the execution ground, arriving just in time to save Will, who is facing the firing party. Lincoln pardons Will, saying that the army needs men like him.

RYNO.

CLASS MATES (Mar. 31).—Andrew Wilson and Robert Beeton are classmates at West Point. While on sentry duty one night, Robert finds his chum endeavoring to sneak in after hours, and although he hates to report him, duty forces it with the result that Andrew is discharged from the service. Notwithstanding this disgrace, he enlists as a private soldier in a regiment commanded by Colonel Schaeffer.

On graduation, Robert Beeton, is appointed lieutenant in Col. Schaeffer's regiment and promptly falls in love with the Colonel's pretty daughter. The girl, however, falls in love with Andrew, meeting him clandestinely. Robert, going on his rounds as officer of the day, finds him off post and investigating discovers the young folk together. This time his report is embittered by jealousy. Andrew is remanded to the guard house. One day the Colonel's daughter is going out for a ride; she loses control of her horse. While working as a prisoner, Andrew sees the runaway, and, suddenly jumping on Robert's horse which is being held by an orderly, gives chase and saves the young lady's life. Stern discipline again sends him to the guard house. The Colonel, finding out the state of things, decides to release him if he will buy himself out of the company. Andrew does so, forgives his former chum and drives off with the daughter on an automobile honeymoon.

GREAT NORTHERN.

FRED AS A SOLDIER (Mar. 29).—Fred decides to become a soldier, but as a matter of fact he lacks most of the requirements necessary to stand as a bulwark against his country's foes. He is stout and healthy enough and for this reason he is admitted to the army, but he lacks courage and in the end this proves to be his downfall. The story is built around wholesome comedy lines and the fun is calculated to keep the average audience in the best of good humor from the moment the film is shown until its conclusion. Fred first makes himself the laughing stock of the army by failing to make good at the trials of strength and agility. In jumping the horses of the gymnasium he is a positive failure and when called upon to climb a rope he calls for assistance before being able to meet the requirements. But in spite of his failings he is admitted to the ranks of the privates and carries himself with dignity until he is ordered to take his turn at target practice. On the rifle range he tries to perform the almost impossible feat of shooting at the target with his back turned from the bullseye and he retires from the field in disgrace. But it remains for Fred to further humiliate himself when during the army maneuvers he retreats from the field under fire and proceeds to take a little nap at the side of a tree, after removing one of his boots in order to give the impression that he has been wounded. When he is carried to the barracks, the commanding officers decide that he is not a fit person for active service in the army and in consequence he is dismissed. Then he rejoins his wife and comes to a realization that maritial relations are more to his liking than martial occupation.

SUMMER IN THE NORTH (Mar. 29).—We see views taken off the coast of Jutland, Denmark. In this subject the onlooker is given a most vivid glance at the beauties of the Scandinavian coast.

LUX.

TOO POLITE (April 4).—A great man goes off to Africa upon a long hunting trip. Previous to burying himself in the heart of the wild, he hands over to the government a large sum of money, to be expended in teaching the nation how to affect the courtly manner of olden days, and to be polite.

When he returns after a prolonged absence, he is pleased to witness the good effects of his teaching. The result of this good man's generosity are very amusing, but he finally tires of it all, as it certainly takes up a lot of time to be polite. He gets so tired of it in the end that he gives double the money to combat the ever growing habit of being polite at any cost.

MORE THAN SHE BARGAINED FOR (April 4).—A young lady who is an enthusiastic spiritualist, spends an afternoon in fruitless effort to evoke spirits. Finally, she concludes that she has not sufficiently mastered the art, and repairs to the offices of Professor Spooks, who gives her a few lessons. In the meantime some mischievous youngsters find that the young lady has left her front door open. They get into the house and secrete themselves behind the furniture, so that, upon her return, the young lady has more visitations from the spirits than she bargained for.

SOLAX.

THE BACHELORS' HOUSEKEEPER (April 2).—Three young bachelors decide to take an apartment and keep house. They insert an advertisement in a daily paper for an experienced housekeeper. It is answered by Ethel Jennings. The three young men engage her. She begins her duties at once and finds herself surrounded by three ardent admirers. They even complicate her duties by insisting on helping her. At the end of one short month each one determines to learn his fate. In turn each proposes to her and two are shocked and disconsolate over her acceptance of the young lawyer Harry. The two remaining bachelors, disappointed and thoroughly unhappy over the outcome, prepare a second Want Ad, for the paper which reads: "Wanted—A housekeeper, must be short, fat and over 65. Address 127, this office."

THE OGRES (April 4).—John Evans, milionaire, has grown embittered through years of loneliness and is feared and avoided by all. He sees a small boy of the streets gazing longingly at a toy window. He purchases the toy aand offers it to the lad, who, failing to understand what it is, refuses to take the package and runs away.

Bill Stephans, released from prison, buys candy for a crying child but she is jerked from his arms by her frightened mother who refuses to allow her to eat the candy. Despondent, Bill returns to his old life and breaks into Evans' mansion.

Bill is shot by Evans, whose sympathies are aroused by the burglar's suffering. In trying to make Bill more comfortable Evans finds the candy on his person and Bill tells the story of his last effort at goodness. Evans understands and relates his experiences, showing Bill the railroad he bought for the boy. The men recognize a kindred spirit, become fast friends, fit the railroad together, pass the candy and smile.

NEW YORK'S SOCIETY LIFE AND UNDERWORLD (3 parts).—At college, Harold Blake had always been a wild sort of a fellow and, when he arrived at home, one of the party of his gay companions suggested that they "take in" Chinatown. Acting upon the sugestion they wended their way to the famous Chatham Club, where they met "Chuck" Conners, known as the "mayor" of Chinatown, who took charge of the boys and visited every nook and corner of that famous place. Just as the party was about to enter the Port Arthur restaurant Harold heard a woman crying for help. Upon arriving at the place where the sound came from he saw a villainous looking man beating a woman. Harold felled the brute and to his surprise the woman dealt him a stunning blow on the face.

Now it happened that the man was, with his gang, laying for Harold and his party. Soon the two bodies of men met and there ensued a bloody fight. But the police arrived and arrested them. The gangsters, however, were freed, but Harold and his friends were compelled to spend the night in jail. Harold, upon his release, promised his father that he would reform. For a time he behaved like a rich man's son; but one night he indulged in debauchery and for this he was disowned by his father. Another blow came to him when he learned that his actress sweetheart was only going with him when he had money.

One day, as he was walking around the street without a penny, he was seen by his sister, who, having learned of his lodging house, sent him fifty dollars with a note telling him that the family was going to Europe and that he should try to make a man of himself. This sum was soon exhausted and he was turned from his lodging house. The river was the only place for him and as he was just going to jump, a pair of powerful arms stopped him. His new found friend, though tough, gave him assistance. A few days later he met Nell McGrath, the sunshine of the slums. On election night the gambling house that Blake and his friends visited was raided by the police and after an exciting chase over house tops Blake was captured and sentenced to a year's imprisonment.

Four years later we see Harold Blake as a married man, he having married Nell, and their union has been blessed with a baby girl, now two years old. Through the meeting with his sister, the family is once more united, and as the film ends we see Harold celebrating his reconciliation in his father's house.

UNION FEATURES.

ON THE THRESHOLD OF LIFE.—When Jacques Darcier returned from his four years in college, he certainly had a brilliant future before him. His grandmother was very proud of him. Jacques had met while at school, Louisette Legrain. It was love at first sight with both the boy and girl. Therefore he could not feel satisfied in his home town.

At last he came across an advertisement that offered a very fine position in Paris, provided $5,000 could be invested in the business. After a long consideration, Jacques' grandmother gave him the money and he started for the great city.

All went well for a time and Jacques felt himself very fortunate—but one day the crash came—the manager disappeared with all the funds of the company.

It was a terrible blow to Jacques, but he would not give up. Neither did he intend to allow his grandmother to lose the savings of her lifetime. He determined to secure a position and pay back the money.

That was easier said than done. Day after day went by and still he had no place. At last in desperation he obtained work as a stevedore. But this arduous labor was too much for him and soon caused him to collapse both mentally and physically.

When he recovered he was overwhelmed by despondency. The game was not worth the candle. He would end it all. Having spent his last penny, he pawned a little locket that Louisette had given him, to procure the instrument of his destruction.

Now, during all these days of suffering for Jacques, neither Louisette nor his grandmother har heard from him. The old lady had come to Paris, frantic with grief. The two immediately instituted a search for the missing lad. Their efforts were at last rewarded just in time to prevent him from committing suicide.

Good fortune seemed to be again smiling on the erstwhile unfortunate boy. He was notified that the rascally manager who had fleeced him out of his money had been apprehended by the police and all the stolen funds recovered.

A happy party it was that returned to the quiet little village of Jacques' birth. There he secured a position with a local lawyer and soon after married his beloved Louisette. They decided that they would devote themselves to making happy the declining years of Jacques' dear grandmother and Louisette's old father.

EXPIATION.—Cecile was only a poor dressmaker. Each day she handled the costly gowns which were for others. How she longed for them! But the grim spectre of want always stood between her and her desires.

One day, in a confectionery store, in company with some girl friends, she was insulted by a band of ruffians. A party of young men protected the frightened girls. One of them, Robert, took particular interest in Cecile and insisted on escorting her to her home.

The two became engaged. They were to be married in a few days. Alas, Cecile was not to have an expensive trousseau. The next day, at a shop, while trying to make her selections come within her meagre means, she succumbed to the tempter. Hastily secreting some fine silks beneath her coat, she hurried to the door. But she had been watched, and was arrested by the store detective.

Cecile pleaded so hard with the police captain, that he, touched by her remorse, released her. Greater punishment than confinement behind grim prison walls was the note she received from Robert, telling her that on account of her sin, the engagement was broken.

That night with heavy heart and unseeing eyes, she wandered aimlessly about the city until she dropped upon a bench in a disreputable quarter.

There she was found by the same band of ruffians that had attacked her before. They dragged the shrinking girl away to a notorious resort, where she was drugged. Next they sold her to an unscrupulous roue, who was to claim her the following night. The next morning when Cecile awoke, she realized her terrible danger and in a frenzy of despair hurled herself from the window of her room.

Unconscious, she was found by some musicians, who carried her to their home. One of the men went to a druggist for some medicine. Returning, a small boy ran against him, breaking the bottles. At that moment Robert was passing, and he saved the lad from a trouncing by offering to pay for the damage. The musician told him of Cecile's case, and both hurried to her side.

The lovers were face to face. The past was forgotten, and in a second they were in eac hothers' arms. Robert felt that his fiancée had sufficiently expiated her error and he took her to his heart once more.

JOSEPHINE.—Bonaparte returned from Egypt covered with glory. By order of the Conquerer, all weapons were taken from the people. Among the confiscated arms was the sword of General Beauharnais.

Josephine, the widow of the famous commander, and her young son, Eugene, went to the austere general, asking the return of the sacred relic. At first he was firm against their entreaties, but, captivated by the charms of the young and beautiful widow, he at last acceded to their prayers. Josephine had done more than win the sword of her late husband from the "Little Corporal"—she had won his heart. Finally, after a passionate courtship, she gave him her hand, and they were married.

Then followed the famous Italian campaign. From behind the Alps came many letters from Napoleon calling his wife. At last she set out to join him, but went no further than Milan, where her frivolous heart forgot her husband and she plunged into the revelries of the gay Italian city.

In his impatience, Napoleon came to her there, in the Servandani Palace, where she was staying and found her gone to a ball. When she returned he seized her brutally, intending to rebuke her. One look from those wonderful eyes and he was like clay in her hands. When Bonaparte was crowned Napoleon, Emperor of the French, with his own hand he placed the crown of empress upon the brow of Josephine. The vast projects of conquests that filled his head extinguished the fire of passion and he began to neglect his wife. Napoleon wanted a son and his insatiable desire to pass his greatness and power to his progeny caused him to plan a divorce and a new marriage.

At last the terrible hour for the signing of the paper came. Josephine, on her knees, begged and implored him not to cast her aside, but to no avail. Napoleon was unmoved by her tears. The decree was signed and the unhappy empress fell in a paroxysm of hysterical weeping. Then followed days and days of sadness at Malmaison. The emperor's victories were followed by his defeats. At last, in an outburst of love—perhaps the most sincere in her life, Josephine sacrificed herself before the portrait of the fallen giant.

THE AMATEUR PHOTOPLAYWRIGHT.—Biggs is a clerk; his wages are small, his wife has a queer cheap servant and is tired to death with her various household duties. Biggs reads of a wonderful book, cost $2.00. This book teaches anyone how to write a photoplay and make money easily. The wife grudges the $2.00, but Biggs sends off the money for the book.

At his desk Biggs neglects his work; he is thinking up a grand idea for a picture play. His boss is furious, his fellow clerks amused.

The book arrives. Biggs studies it and writes and writes. He compels his wife and the cook to act out scenes for him, then he dashes off reams of writing. The play is finally finished and sent to the Scenario Editor of a great picture company. Biggs falls asleep and dreams his story brought $100 and an offer of a position of $300 a week on the editorial staff of the picture company. He falls out of the chair and wakes with a start.

What really happened: In her office the Scenario Editor and her stenographer are working like mad, the postman enters with the morning mail and, horror stricken, they examine Biggs' great play. Amusement follows their disgust, and after much fun the scenario is returned as "Useless."

The morning mail brings to the Luckless Biggs his returned manuscript. Furious, he tears it to pieces, throwing it all about. The servant is called and the great work of his brain is swept into the dust pan. Biggs returns to his bookkeeping, a sadder, but wiser, man.

INAUGURATION OF PRESIDENT WILSON.—Beginning with the start of the President-elect for the Capitol, escorted by the dashing Essex Troop of New Jersey, Kinemacolor shows a splendid panorama of the thronged Plaza in front of the U. S. Capitol, together with a vertical view of that historic building and its brilliant decorations,—from the Goddess of Liberty on top, down to the inauguration stand at the base of the east steps.

The full ceremony of taking the oath at the hands of the Chief Justice of the U. S. Supreme Court in the presence of the Congress and high officials of government, is shown; together with President Wilson delivering his inaugural address, and being congratulated by ex-President Taft. Afterwards the two are shown at close view, riding together in the state carriage back to the White House,—while Secretary of State William J. Bryan following in a taxicab, and other famous statesmen are pictured true to life and color.

SUFFRAGETTE PARADE IN WASHINGTON.—At the opening of the film Pennsylvania avenue is shown, nearly blocked by a motley mob of sightseers looking at the marching suffragettes. The big banner demanding a Constitutional amendment guaranteeing equal rights to American women makes a pathway along which the Suffragettes are seen marching steadily and persistently,—although still hemmed in by the mob. Then mounted troopers clear the way, and a close view is given of the various allegorical groups on the handsomely decorated floats, and the various marching organizations in characteristic colors.

Among these are the Canadian delegates in costume; the International representatives in the colors of their respective countries;—a beautiful float, representing the famous "Women of the Bible," and the Mothers' Association, in marching order. Among the mounted Amazons are shown splendid personal pictures of Mrs. Gus Ruhlin, wife of the famous athlete, and Miss Florence Lawrence.

Kinemacolor shows their sisters and sympathizers at home exactly how the Suffragettes "fought," if not actually "bled" in the Battle of Washington,—and even their "antis" are forced to admire the manner in which the American Amazons win the "right of way" through a throng that might easily throw into confusion a St. Patrick's Day parade.

THE GEYSERS OF NEW ZEALAND.—Remarkable photographs of New Zealand geysers in full action are contained in this subject, including the famous geysers of Wakerewa in South Island and Papakura in North Island. The New Zealand geysers rival the famous Hot-water Springs of Yellowstone Park, and nothing more spectacular could be imagined than these pillars of boiling foam ever rising and falling, and then bursting forth afresh, their pure white foam sharply outlined against the background of deep blue sky. We see in rotation: 1. Government Springs at Rotoroa. These are natural hot-water springs which have been enclosed and are reserved for the use of Europeans. The baths are situated in the midst of beautiful gardens, many excellent views of which are included in this section. 2. Inferno Pool. This is a pool of water considerably above boiling point. It is seething and tossing, the steam rising up in clouds. 3. An active geyser rising 90 feet high. The period of action does not extend beyond two minutes in this case. Round the base of the geyser is a silica formation produced by the chemical action of the water. 4. A geyser pool inactive, a natural caldron of boiling water. 5. The Papakura Geyser is always active and makes a very beautiful picture, the pillar of white foam outlined against the blue sky.

Superior Multiple-Reel Features

ABOUT 50 per cent. of the multiple-reel features submitted for possible use in General Film Service are accepted. We don't take a film simply because it may be termed a "feature" by its producer. It must pass rigorous "screen inspection" first. By this process of eliminating the features that lack the proper "punch," we concentrate the quality of eight into the weekly production of four. A glance at the following synopses will prove that this claim of superiority is not merely an advertising boast.

For Saturday, March 29th, 1913

A THRILLING DRAMATIC FEATURE WHICH INCLUDES ONE OF THE MOST REALISTIC FIRE SCENES EVER SCREENED. A FIREMAN, A POLICEMAN AND A FACTORY MANAGER, ALL IN LOVE WITH AN ATTRACTIVE STENOGRAPHER, ARE INVOLVED IN A STORY THAT WILL HOLD YOUR AUDIENCES SPELLBOUND FROM TITLE TO FINISH.

"HEROES ONE AND ALL"

Lubin. Two Reels

For Monday, March 31st, 1913

AN INCIDENT OF THE FRANCO-GERMAN WAR. DOESN'T THAT SUGGEST ACTION AND PULSATING INTEREST? A YOUNG GERMAN NOBLEMAN MATCHES HIS STRATEGY AGAINST THE HYPNOTIC INFLUENCE OF A RUSSIAN SPY AND TRIUMPHS, BUT NOT UNTIL AFTER HE HAS PASSED THROUGH A SERIES OF AMAZING ADVENTURES. AND HIS SUCCESS ALSO WINS HIM A CHARMING WIFE.

"The SPY'S DEFEAT"

Essanay. Two Reels.

GENERAL FILM SERVICE

Scene from "Nobility"

Scene from "The Golden Hoard" or "Buried Alive"

For Wednesday, April 2nd, 1913

"'TIS ONLY NOBLE TO BE GOOD" IS THE THEME OF THIS TWO-REEL FILM. A FRENCH DUKE SECRETLY MARRIES A DANCER, AND IS SUBSEQUENTLY OSTRACIZED BY HIS FAMILY. HIS WIFE LATER HAS AN OPPORTUNITY TO PROVE THAT NOBILITY OF HEART IS ABOVE NOBILITY OF BIRTH. AND BECAUSE THE DUKE'S SISTER PROFITS BY THE DANCER'S SACRIFICE, THE MOTHER FORGIVES.

"NOBILITY"

COLORED PHOTOGRAPHY

Patheplay. Three Reels.

For Friday, April 4th, 1913

SOMETHING NEW IN SENSATIONAL FILMS —A STORY OF THE DAYS OF PIRATICAL MARAUDERS. A BURIED TREASURE BRINGS PROSPERITY TO THE ONE MEMBER OF THE GANG WHO DECIDES TO START LIFE ANEW, BUT IT ALSO MAKES HIM THE OBJECT OF TERRIBLE VENGEANCE AT THE HANDS OF HIS FORMER COMPANIONS. THE QUICK WIT OF HIS WIFE SAVES HIM FROM A "LIVING DEATH."

"THE GOLDEN HOARD" or "BURIED ALIVE"

Vitagraph. Two Reels.

General Film Service offers other things besides superior multiple-reel features—"quality" single reels in great variety and quantity, a strong and permanent organization that serves exhibitors fairly and courteously, and keeps its promises—and deserves your serious consideration strictly on its merits. Our nearest branch office awaits your commands. There are forty-five such offices in the country, so we can take care of you no matter where you are.

FIBRE SCREEN

Mr. J. E. Pearce, Manager of the chain of theatres pictured here, is a man of rare intelligence and keen foresight. He has equipped all of their houses with the RADIUM GOLD FIBRE SCREEN, and is still ordering them.

J. E. Pearce.

American Theatre Curtain & Supply Co. February 5, 1913.

Gentlemen: Please ship on our account to William Schaeffer, Imperial Theatre, Peoria, Ill., one screen and frame, together with tightening device, 10′ x 13′; send bill to this office.

Some time between April 1st and 5th we will want for our "Pearce's Theatre" in Houston, Tex., and our "Tudor" Theatre here, two screens 12′ x 16′. Make these up and we will give you shipping instructions when we are ready. Also, we want another screen for Lake Charles, but at this time we cannot give you any definite date of shipping; projection surface same as others, 12′ x 16′.

Yours very truly,

JOSIAH PEARCE & SONS.
(Signed)
J. E. Pearce.

The listed exchanges, members of the Independent Exchange Co., desire it to be known broadcast that in the future, through their organization, they will only buy film that has been thoroughly inspected as to quality, merit and freedom from everything that is objectionable.

To all manufacturers who are willing to submit their goods for critical inspection by a selected body of practical film men, as well as the National Board of Censorship, an opportunity is given which they have never hitherto had — that of selling their goods on MERIT ALONE.

We are now ready to purchase the very best film productions available from any source; the price to be gauged ENTIRELY upon the MERIT of the production.

TO

Conduct Our Business in the Interests of Our Exhibitors

Quality will be the Standard Upon Which We Will Base Our Purchases in the Future

Price will be a secondary consideration. Any film receiving the approval of our experts and passed by the National and Local Censors will be acquired by us for the exclusive use of our Exhibitors.

Our Earnest Endeavor will be to Select Our Program from the Best Film Made

In the past we have been obliged to accept the programs as provided by the powers that were; forced to buy film, good, bad, and indifferent.

Our Program will be Carefully Arranged, Providing Our Distributors with a Variety of Subjects Daily

Heretofore our Exchanges have been obliged to frequently accept All Western Subjects one day, all Comedies the next, with all Dramas the following day.

Feature Films will be Included in Our Service and Supplied without Extra Charge to All Our Exhibitors

The quantity of copies of a subject we can use makes it possible to secure films that are now sold exclusively to State Right buyers and for which Exhibitors must pay an extra rental charge.

We Will Not Manufacture Film—Our Business will be Confined to Providing Our Exhibitors with the Best Photoplays Obtainable

Under our purchasing plan, Manufacturers must confine their attention to producing superior films.

Exhibitors Are Now Catering to a Discriminating Public and Must Provide an Acceptable Performance. We Will Supply It!

The lack of quality film in the regular program has developed the Feature Film Exchange and introduced the Theatrical interests into the field. We aim to also provide the Motion Picture Exhibitor with high grade productions of from two (2) to five (5) reels, through our regular service.

S. R. O. Where the Pictures are Best

No drifting of the crowds down the street, but a house filled to "standing room only" where the pictures are always good. Established showmen know that the pictures are always good with the right lens equipment.

Bausch and Lomb Projection Lenses

have established an enviable record, and set a standard of perfection in the art of motion pictures.

Bausch & Lomb objectives and condensers will make your pictures rank with the best shown on any screen, and pay for themselves many times over in the growth of your business.

The Edison and Nicholas Power Machines are regularly equipped with our lenses. They can be procured also through any film exchange.

You will be interested in our valuable free Booklet 62D. Write for it today.

—THE DOOM— OF THE GUNMEN OF NEW YORK

The biggest educational feature ever offered to state right buyers

First of the Ruby Combination Features

These Famous Men Appear in the Picture

Mayor Gaynor of New York, Dist. Att'y Whitman, Mr. Frank Moss, Canon Chase, Sup't Walsh of the Children's Society, Dr Howe of the People's Institute and many others.

The production reflects their confidence in its educational value. We do not deal in crime, murder and assorted viciousness. This picture is sensationally educational—a good thing for the box office, and a good thing for the audience. The paper is the same.

The best men in your city will be glad to endorse it

Hallberg A. C. to D. C. and D. C. Economizer

This is HALLBERG'S A. C. to D. C. ECONOMIZER.

Many of the most prominent theatres in the country have installed the Hallberg, and I have received hundreds of inquiries regarding this much talked of device during the past few weeks. The splendid light and beautiful pictures it helps project either forces competitors out of business or compels them to also install this Hallberg A. C. to D. C. Economizer. After all, the pictures are what you are selling; if you are operating on alternating current and wish to get the best results, I offer you the logical solution of your problem. Write stating your voltage, cycles, phase of your current and length of throw. Will quote price then on outfit to meet your requirements.

that made the great Indian Passion Play, "Hiawatha." I also made the first negative and the first positive and I have this certified by the owner, Mr. Moore, 1212 Times Building.

The "Junior" is the camera if you want one. I fully guarantee it to you, absolutely professional, light, simple, convenient, never kicks, no loosing loop, no static, no scratches, genuine Zeiss lens, mechanism made of steel aluminum, bronze bearings, stable shutter, 200 feet capacity. Since the patent situation was cleaned up, scores of cream lifters, tree hiders, trade destroyers and non-mechanics went into the manufacture of cameras—Beware of these trade parasites who only want your money, but will never make good.

Lyric Theatre Co.

The Home of Feature Motion Pictures

LA CROSSE, WIS. 3/7/1913.

Mr. J. V. Bryson,
Laemmle Film Service
Minneapolis, Minn.

Dear Sir:-

I will write you about the much talked of Universal Program. The programs we have had this week are GREAT, and I cannot see how they can be improved on very much. I have had very few 2 reel features during my career in the picture business that could compare with the the Bison Co.'s "Bugler of Company B." It is surely some Universal picture and was universally liked by our patrons. The program for today and tomorrow is one of the best balanced bills I have ever seen. Three reels with the star of each company playing the title roll is rarely seen on one program. Any one reel with other lighter subjects would be a fine show. As you perhaps know, for years I was a booster for the Licensed films, then the Mutual Corporation Films, and now I am beginning to see a marked change for the better. With the Universal films any exhibitor who cannot get the money with the kind of service you are furnishing us at the present time ought to sit down and have a quiet little talk with himself and find where the leak was. Just closing our Sunday night show, ever running the Universal Special, "The Inauguration of Pres. Wilson," for two days and feel I ought to let you know that we almost broke our record at the Lyric. It is surely some picture. You can tell any of your customers that it is head and shoulders above the - - - -

I had scores of comments on it. Great credit due Universal camera men. The Universal Program was certainly given a great boost here the last few days, and I have no hesitancy in saying that I never ran pictures which were in such good condition for which I have to thank Mr. Strong and his effecient corps of girl inspectors. Certainly appreciate your efforts.

Yours Universally,

H. H. BURFORD,

After he bought a Compensarc

Which Would YOU Rather Pay?

This man is on a 220 volt circuit and as his moving picture lamp only requires 35 volts at the arc, he formerly used a rheostat to reduce the voltage. In this way he paid for about 3 times as much "juice" as he actually needed.

Then he figured he needed this money more than the Lighting Company and he bought a

FORT WAYNE COMPENSARC

Now he gets a clearer, whiter, more intense unflickering light and his bills are only about 1/3 what they were before. The machine has three adjustments and the circuit can not break for even an instant in passing from one to another. No delays, no bother, no waste, no danger, no heat.

Send today for our 22 page booklet "Compensarc vs. Rheostat." It tells you how you can get a much better light at 1/3 your present cost.

HINEMOA

The reproduction of a Maori Idyl, known as the "Romeo and Juliet" of Maori literature. Produced on and about the beautiful Lake Rotorua, New Zealand, where it actually happened.

Enacted throughout by Maoris, the uncivilized natives of New Zealand.

APRIL 3rd

THE STOLEN TRIBUTE TO THE KING

A legend of Tahiti. Produced on the Island of Tahiti.
On same reel,

THE RIVER WHANGANUI

The "Rhine of New Zealand."
